Yesterday the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] suggested that, in view of the fact that the constitutionality of the act of Congress of 1908, the employers' liability act, had only been settled by the Supreme Court in January of this year, a consideration of this bill ought to be postponed until the operation of the act of 1908 could be observed and made known to the public. The Senator from Utah, who has just taken his seat, answering that, as I presume, suggested that there was never any doubt as to the constitutionality of the act of 1908 since the decision of the Supreme Court on the act of 1906. I suggested, in reply, that the railroads, the opposite parties in interest in these cases, have strenuously attacked and assaulted the validity of the act of 1908, and to that, to a certain extent, I think the Senator from Utah acceded.

I will point out from the decision in the case of Mondou, decided January 15, 1912, by the Supreme Court, that apparently there was a concerted action upon the part of the railroads of the United States to question the validity of the act of 1908, not only in the Federal courts but also in actions brought in the State courts under that act of the Congress of the United States.

In this case, the opinion which I have at my desk, rendered on the 15th of January, 1912, there were, in fact, three cases. One of them went from the Supreme Court of the State of Connecticut, another went from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota, and another went from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, from three of the States of the Union, by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., by the Northern Pacific Co., and the third case also by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co.

Not only, Mr. President, was there an attack upon this law by the railroad companies in three States of the Union, but those companies assaulted the validity of the law upon general and vital principles, as being wholly beyond the authority of the Congress of the United States to enact the statute of 1908. Let me read a paragraph, to show this, from the opinion of the court by Mr. Justice Van Devanter:

The principal questions presented in these cases as discussed at the bar and in the briefs are: 1. May Congress, in the exertion of its power over interstate commerce, regulate the relations of common carriers by railroad and their employees while both are engaged in such commerce? 2. Has Congress exceeded its power in that regard by prescribing the regulations which are embodied in the act in question? 3. Do those regulations supersede the laws of the States in so far as the latter cover the same field? 4. May rights arising under those regulations be enforced, as of right, in the courts of the States when their jurisdiction, as fixed by local laws, is adequate to the occasion?

So, Mr. President, not alone was the validity of this law not settled until the decision of January 15, 1912, but there was apparently a concerted attack upon it by the railroads of the country, whether the actions were brought in United States courts or in the State courts, and the attack was upon it intrinsically, upon its repugnancy to the Constitution of the United States as well as upon it in minor respects.

So I say, in the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who made this point, there is good ground for the belief that a consideration of this bill ought to be postponed until the operation of the act of 1908, as finally decided by the Supreme Court to be constitutional, shall be known, and its effect upon the questions involved can be understood thoroughly.

There is one other matter to which I want to invite the attention of the Senate in addition to what I said in the inquiry I made of the Senator from Utah a moment ago, in which he objected to further interruption. The act of 1908 pro-vides that the beneficiary may recover if the employee was an employee at the time and engaged in the service of the company, whether the accident occurred in the actual course of employment or not. The bill under consideration provides that there shall be no recovery unless there shall be employment and an accident when the man is engaged in the very course of his own employment.

I offered to read an objection based upon this difference by a railway employee of my State, written to me in a letter, but the Senator from Utah objected to that. I make no complaint, because it was, to a certain extent, injecting what I wanted to say into what he was saying. But I desire to call the attention of the Senate, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Utah in the same copy of the RECORD, to what this employee wrote me, showing that the act under consideration is in truth a limitation upon the liability when measured by the act of 1908. Here is what he said in the second paragraph of his letter:

graph of his letter:

We object to the words "in course of his employment" (see line 9, sec. 1), because we believe this is a technicality which will be used by the employer to avoid paying many just claims. For example, a man employed as a fireman and an accident happens to a locomotive; in order to get into a terminal it is necessary to disconnect or block up some of the machinery. In order to get in with the least possible delay, which must be done or be discharged, the brakeman and fireman assist the engineer to get the engine in proper condition to proceed. If in doing so the brakeman or fireman is injured, he can not recover because "not in the course of his employment." These are duties of the engineer. With due respect to the honest intentions of the commission who framed this bill, why not have that portion read as it does in the employers' liability act of 1908: "To any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier."

I conclude with my original suggestion, Mr. President, that the

I conclude with my original suggestion, Mr. President, that the bill under consideration, in the particular pointed out, is a material limitation upon the law of 1908.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 459) to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribes of Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask if this is the bill that was up this morning

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed it is not. The bill is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment.
Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.
The bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries, and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure was announced as next in order.

Mr. PAGE. There are some friends of this measure who desire to discuss it, and they have asked me to request that it go over. I therefore ask that it go over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.
The bill (S. S36) for the relief of Joel J. Parker was annunced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that that bill go over for the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over. The resolution (S. Res. 231) for the investigation and report by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor regarding certain labor conditions in Lawrence, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that while I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] are now absent from the Chamber, I ask that it go over. I do so only for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The resolution (S. Res. 230) authorizing and directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate certain charges against HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT, a Senator from the State of Delaware, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], who introduced the resolution, if it would not be just as well to have it now referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is all right if that is the regular course, but my understanding is that the resolution has first to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses to ascertain whether there are sufficient funds on hand.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if the Senator so desires, the resolution may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I suppose that is the regular course, and that it would come back from that committee and then be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the resolution be referred. Mr. REED. My desire is that it shall proceed with all due diligence and with speedy expedition to a conclusion.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Committee on Privileges and Elections has already authority from the Senate to proceed with the investigation of any case coming before it, so that it would not be necessary to refer the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The proper way would be to have it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and if the Senator has no objection-

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the resolution stands on a motion to refer to the committee already made. If I remember correctly, I interposed a motion to refer the resolution to the proper committee—the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the time the Senator from Missouri introduced it.

Mr. SMOOT. The resolution was ordered to lie over under the rule; but if the Senator now desires to make the motion that it be referred to that committee I have no objection. I was going to do the same thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was looking for the presence of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who would naturally make the motion. In his absence, as a member of the committee I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right.
Mr. REED. Mr. President, there would certainly be no objection on my part to that course. On the contrary, I desire that the resolution take that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be so referred.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5272) appropriating $75,000 for the protection of Valdez, Alaska, from glacial floods was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.
The bill (S. 4663) to authorize and empower the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and to grant the same and the right to operate and maintain a line of railroad, telephone, telegraph, and electric transmission lines through Vancouver Barracks and Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to Washington-Oregon Corporation, its successors and assigns, was announced as next in order.

I wish to make an inquiry about that bill. Mr. HEYBURN. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Idaho objects to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over, Mr. President. Mr. WARREN. The Senator who reported the bill being absent, I think the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3625) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Los Angeles, Cal., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.
The resolution (S. Res. 162) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish information relative to sales of cotton to the Confederate States Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that that go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the request, Mr. President? The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the resolution just stated shall go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is anyone objecting to the consideration of rarily, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution has gone over. The bill (S. 5309) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140), was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BEAVER DAM, WIS

The bill (S. 5355) to acquire a site and for the erection thereon of a public building at Beaver Dam, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate not to exceed $75,000 to acquire a site and to erect thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommoda-tion of the United States post office and other Government offices in the city of Beaver Dam, in the State of Wisconsin.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RICHFIELD, UTAH.

The bill (S. 2270) to provide for the erection of a public building at Richfield, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected upon the site already contracted for in the city of Richfield, Utah, a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post office and other offices of the Government in the said city of Richfield, Utah, the cost of said building not to exceed the sum of $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3846) to authorize a waiver of trial by jury in the district courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.
Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, that bill has been on the calendar a good while, and I should like to have it taken up and considered. I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up and disposed of on next Tuesday.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be faken up and disposed of on next Tuesday

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order. I will take the matter up with the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator from Idaho object to my request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I object to carrying further the wreckage, disorder, and disturbance that has been caused by direct primary elections in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was not the question. The question that was before the Senate was the request for the consideration of the bill on next Tuesday.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he has his remedy by moving to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. I doubt that when we have taken up the calendar for the consideration of bills not objected to; until that order is laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. There must first be a motion to set that order aside.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR BELLEVUE, NEBR.

The bill (H. R. 20117) to authorize the Nebraska-Iowa Interstate Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bellevue, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORRIS AND CUMMINGS CHANNEL BRIDGE, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 19638) to authorize the San Antonio, Rock-port & Mexican Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Morris and Cummings Channel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPRING ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5333) to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask if this is the bill that provides for the extension of the street car line along Calvert Street?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed this bill has nothing to do with that.

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is not the bill to which the Senator from Kansas refers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS.

The bill (H. R. 16306) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that whenever in time of war, or when war is imminent, the President may deem the cooperation and use of the American National Red Cross with the sanitary services of the land and naval forces to be necessary, he is authorized to accept the assistance tendered by the Red Cross, and to employ the same under the sanitary services of the Army and Navy in conformity with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and that when the Red Cross cooperation and assistance with the land and naval forces in time of war or threatened hostilities shall have been accepted by the President, the personnel entering upon the duty specified in section 1 of this act shall, while proceeding to their place of duty, while serving thereat, and while returning therefrom, be transported and subsisted at the cost and charge of the United States as civilian employees employed with the forces, and the Red Cross supplies that may be tendered as a gift and accepted for use in the sanitary service shall be transported at the cost and charge of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The preamble was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] moved that we proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, taking up unobjected bills. It was not a request for unanimous consent, but a motion, which was carried. We came to Calendar No. 391, Senate bill 2234, and objection was made to its consideration. I desire to inquire if the Senate can not by a vote take up that bill without violating any rule of the Senate?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senate can, by a vote, lay aside the pending order and take up anything. My objection was, the pending order having been determined by a vote of the Senate, that it would continue before the Senate until it was laid aside. There is no difficulty about it. The Senator's motion, unfortunately, did not provide or suggest the laying aside of the pending order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Kansas, of course, has a perfect right to move to lay aside the order of the Senate. Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be the motion for the Senator to make.

Mr. BRISTOW. Would not a motion to take up Senate bill 2234, if it carried, be laying aside the order?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not in order; but the Senator has a right to make a motion to lay aside the order of the Senate, and if the Senate so decides it would be all right.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.
Mr. CULBERSON. I simply want to call attention to the rule, which provides that:

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock; and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once.

But upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration, and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions."

But if the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of any matter notwithstanding an objection, the foregoing provisions touching debate shall not apply. (Jefferson's Manual, sec. 14.)

Showing that when we go to the calendar, under Rule VIII, a single objection will not carry a bill over if the Senate sees proper to proceed to the consideration of that bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the rule he has just read applies to the calendar, under Rule VIII, when it comes up in its regular order—that is, between the morning hour and 2 o'clock—when the unfinished business, if there be any, shall be laid before the Senate, but the unfinished business had been laid aside and the business of the Senate proceeded with until 4 o'clock, and then, upon motion, the calendar was taken up for the consideration of bills, to which there was no objection. That was the order of the Senate. Now, if the Senator from Kansas desires to have the order of the Senate laid aside, all he has to do is to make a motion to that effect, and if the Senate want to lay the order aside they can do so.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, to remove any doubt, I move that we lay aside the special order and proceed with the regular order, under Rule VIII. That will give every bill the right that it is unhampered by the special order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator that he separate the motion, that he make a separate motion to get rid of existing business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the order taking up the calendar, adopted a short time ago, be now laid aside—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no objection to a motion of that kind, but I never before have known it to be made in the Senate. The proper motion, it occurs to me, would be to move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection, and the adoption of that motion would put aside the present order.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is my view of it; but, as I understood, the Chair ruled otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to state that when the bill was reached on the calendar the request of the Senator from Idaho that it go over was equivalent to an objection to that bill being considered. The Chair is of the opinion, however, that a motion by the Senator from Kansas of the Senator from Kansas?

or any other Senator to take up a bill would be equivalent to laying aside the order which the Senate has made to take up bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that that question has been ruled upon in the Senate many times heretofore. know that time after time when an order has been made to take up unobjected bills on the calendar and a motion has been made to take up a bill notwithstanding objection, it has been ruled that under the order of the Senate such a motion was out of order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, as I understand, that is always when we are proceeding with unobjected bills on the calendar by unanimous consent; but we are now proceeding with the calendar under a motion. The Senate can by a vote supersede that motion and take up any bill, and that sets aside the special order. That is my understanding, and it is in harmony with the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the way the Chair rules?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator from Kansas a moment ago made a motion, which, in the judgment of the Chair, was in order, namely, to set aside the order heretofore entered to proceed in order with the consideration of bills on the calendar.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I will withdraw that motion, with the consent of the Senate, and move that we set aside the special order and proceed with the consideration of Senate

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the ruling of the Chair whether or not that motion is in order?

Mr. HEYBURN. May I suggest that the first part of that motion would be in order. The Senator, however, presents two motions, not one—one to dispose of the existing status of business of the Senate, and then the Senator couples that with a motion to take up a certain bill. If he will separate them, I think the difficulty will be solved right there; but first you must get rid of the existing order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would prefer, first, a ruling upon my motion. If the motion is in order, I would prefer it as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I want a ruling upon that motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair it is in order for a Senator to move to take up a bill, which motion, if carried, is equivalent to setting aside the order which the Senate has adopted.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask a question of the Chair? Is the Senate now considering the calendar by unanimous consent to take up unobjected bills?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; but by a motion to take up unobjected bills on the calendar. By motion? Mr. LODGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Myers	Shively
Bacon	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Borah	Dillingham	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Fall	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Gore	Overman	Stephenson

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. My colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is absent from the Chamber because of sickness.

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] has just been called from the Chamber on important public business. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate-

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I believe the motion is not debatable.

Mr. SMOOT. I am simply calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is an adverse report upon this bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; but the motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is, Will the Senate take up Senate bill 2434 on the motion

Mr. SWANSON. I note that my colleague, the senior Senator from Virginia, made an adverse report upon the bill, and I should think there is no necessity for its immediate consideration. Of course, I wish to state to the Senate that my colleague is detained at home by a very critical illness in his family. I have no assurance that he will be able to be here for several weeks.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course that statement leads inevitably to

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course that statement leads inevitably to discussion. There are a number of the Senators present who are members of the committee. The report was a formal matter from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, the title of which has been stated. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. REED. Let us have a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Senator from Missouri

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. REED. I withdraw the request.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah renews the request for the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). Owing to the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote for the present. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Bradley]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] and therefore with-

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Percy].

He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. Martin of Virginia was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Martin] is detained from the Senate on account of serious illness in his

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin]. He reported this bill adversely, I think. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I, however, transfer the pair to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and will vote. I vote "nay.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called) I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Richardson]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I should like to ask if the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nixon] has to ask if the juntor schatter from Nevatat [Mr. Nixon] has voted? I have a general pair with him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SWANSON. I therefore withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. Townsend's name was called). The present occupant of the chair has a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. Gardner]. I transfer the pair to my colleague [Mr. Smith of Michigan] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Foster]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and withhold my vote. Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs], and therefore withhold by vote.

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. Chilton], who is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURNHAM. I make the same announcement as I did on the previous call as to my colleague [Mr. Gallinger].

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. Penrose] is necessarily absent and stands paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. CULBERSON. I transfer my general pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair, as announced, with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Rich-Andson]. I transfer it to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP. On account of the transfer just made, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. The junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr.

McLean] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK 1.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gamble] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-Lands] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. POINDEXTER. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr.

DIXON] is absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey]. If present, I am satisfied he would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" have it.

Mr. Beistow, Mr. Poindextes, Mr. Williams, and others called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my pair already announced, I will not vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], and on that account withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. No quorum! Mr. SMOOT. No quorum!

Mr. BRISTOW. I suggest that, according to the ruling of the Vice President, if the number of votes cast and the Senators 77ho addressed the Chair stating their pairs combined constitute a quorum, a quorum of the Senate is present. That is a ruling which the Vice President has made, and the Senate has done It has been objected to, but it is the ruling of the Vice President.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to say that Senators on this side of the Chamber have frequently protested against that Mr. SMOOT. Call the roll for a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. The point of no quorum having been made, the only thing in order, I think, is to call the roll.

Mr. HEYBURN. If calling the roll is for the purpose of enabling the Chair to count a quorum, then I think it is not

Mr. LODGE. I make the point that the point is not debatable.

Mr. HEYBURN. What point?

Mr. LODGE. The point that there is no quorum.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts to make that point.

Mr. LODGE. I have made it several times.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understood the Senator to ask for a call I would join him on the other proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names-not a quorum.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for a call of the absentees

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. Brown answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2234.

Mr. SMOOT. No business has intervened since then.
Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Did a quorum vote?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum responded present.

Mr. HEYBURN. A quorum answered to the roll call? The PRESIDING OFFICER. But not on the former vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to develop the fact as to whether we are counting a quorum or whether a quorum answered on the roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum has answered present. Forty-seven Senators were present and on the call of absentees one other Senator answered, making 48, which is a quorum. As the Chair understands it, the question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2234.

Mr. BRISTOW. Which motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent, and I withhold my vote. I make

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. He has been called from the Senate Chamber on important business. I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON. I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nixon], and I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. Townsend's name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine

[Mr. GARDNER], and therefore withhold my vote.
Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] and vote. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. BURNHAM (after having voted in the negative). have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask if the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON. With the anouncement of my pair and the transfer which I made a moment ago, I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not a quorum has voted.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I make the point that a quorum was developed by the roll call immediately preceding this vote, and because there is a quorum present and some Senators saw fit not to vote it certainly does not demonstrate that there is not a quorum in the Chamber. The roll call has just demonstrated that there is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. A good many Senators were in the Chamber on the former call who are not present now and therefore did not vote on the last call.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do. Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Kausas that his proposition is one than which no more dangerous could be submitted to the Senate, one that the Senate never has heretofore countenanced, and which I hope no Senator in any exigency will countenance, that any measure can pass the Senate without receiving a majority of a quorum, with a quorum voting on that particular vote. I will say that to establish a precedent to the contrary of that and have it become the rule of the Senate would not only be revolutionary, but it would be dangerous in the extreme. However it may seem like an immaterial matter on a comparatively immaterial question like this, it might come home to worse than plague us when the gravest interests were at stake.

Therefore I trust that no such ruling will be made by the Chair, and that no such ruling will be sanctioned by the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, do I understand the Chair to rule that no quorum having voted, therefore there is not a quorum of the Senate present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not ruled on the question.

Mr. BACON. I understand the parliamentary situation to be simply this, that no quorum having voted on the particular vote taken no decision has been arrived at by the Senate; that is all.

Mr. SHIVELY. And that nothing is before the Senate except a motion to adjourn or to procure a quorum.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request absent Senators to appear in the Senate Cham-That is under the rules, and is a proper motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. That can only be done after a call of the

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. On a vote such as has just been taken, when it appears that there is no quorum present, does that invalidate and make of The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to hear the Senator from Washington, and he asks the Senate to be in

Mr. POINDEXTER. My inquiry is simply whether it is necessary that some Senator should make the point of no quorum in order to render the vote invalid?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not necessary to make any such point.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the vote always of no effect when there is no point made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it, that if the roll call discloses that a quorum is not present, it is not necessary that anyone should make the point.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that the records of this body will show that frequently bills have been passed and amendments adopted by less than a quorum present on a viva voce vote or on a division.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not on a roll call. Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know as to a roll call. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request Senators absent to appear in the Chamber.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is generally preceded by a call of the absentees in order that it may be determined who is absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for a ruling of the Chair. Is it in order to move that the Senate adjourn when the motion has just been carried that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators?

Mr. SMOOT. Under Rule V of the Senate—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to adjourn is in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah, that the Senate do now ad-[Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. I announce my pair as before with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Bradley].

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). In view of the absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pen-ROSE] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], I vote nav.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted without realizing that this is a party question. I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President— Mr. HEYBURN. I raise the question that no quorum is disclosed by the vote.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion was carried directing the Sergeant at Arms to request absent Senators to appear.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not see how the Sergent at Arms can readily do that until the names of the absences are called.

Mr. BROWN. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will state his point of order.

Mr. BROWN. There is no business in order at this time except the execution of the order directed to the Sergeant at Arms, unless it be a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Λ rms has been directed to execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a point of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Brown] directed his point of order to my suggestion for a call of the absentees, he is himself out of order. Under the rules I ask now that a call of the absentees be made, and that is the order.

Mr. BROWN. To that I make the point of order that it is not in order under the rule, which I will read-paragraph 3 of Rule V .

Whenever upon such roll call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant at Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. That, Mr. President, is not controverted, but it does not obviate the rule with reference to a call of the absentees. I am not very particular about it, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms has been directed to execute the order of the Senate, and will proceed to execute it.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, April 16, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon,

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, appalled by the many shocking disasters which have followed one upon the other in the last few months, we most fervently pray that more stringent laws may be enacted and enforced, that those exposed to the dangers of fire and flood, the workers in mines and factories, and those who travel by land or sea, may be safeguarded from the selfishness and greed of the thoughtless. This we ask in the name of right and justice, truth and mercy, O God our Father. Amen.

S. J. Res. 62. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Director of the Census to collect and publish cotton-ginners' statistics; to the Committee on the Census.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with certain Senate amendments, to ask that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and ask for a conference.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, will the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs be willing to allow us an opportunity at the time that the conference report is reported to discuss the conference report?

·Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly, as much opportunity as the business of the House will permit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hax] asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments to the Army appropriation bill, and asks for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. SLAYDEN, and Mr. PRINCE.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, with Senate amendments, and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks to take the diplomatic and consular bill from the Speaker's table, to disagree to the Senate amendments thereto, and to ask for a conference. Is there objection?

REPUBLIC OF CHINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House joint resolution 254, congratulating the people of China on their assumption of the powers, duties, and responsibilities of self-government, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, on the 29th day of February last the House of Representatives unanimously passed a joint resolution, introduced by me, congratulating the patriotic people of China upon the successful establishment of the Republic of China. The Senate has changed the resolution from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution. There is no objection to that, so far as I have been able to ascertain. I therefore move that the House concur in the Senate amendments, and in doing so indulge the hope that ere long the great Republic of the United States will officially recognize the new Republic of China. Such recognition, as is well known, is an Executive function.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. SULZER. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it sometimes becomes necessary to waive form in order to accomplish a fact. A short time ago the Senate passed a concurrent resolution which the House amended and made a joint resolution and returned to the Senate in that The Senate, instead of agreeing to the amendments made by the House to their resolution, passed a new joint resolution covering precisely the same subject as has been provided in this amendment, in order to avoid the complication of endeavoring to change a concurrent resolution originating in another body into a joint resolution. Exception was taken by the employees of the Senate, who have to do with engrossing and enrolling bills, because of the difficulty which would be involved. On this occasion, however, they propose an amendment to change a House joint resolution of a specified number into a House concurrent resolution without any number. I suppose it may be necessary to accept that amendment, but here will be a House concurrent resolution, now unnumbered, which, if anybody desires to search for at any time through the indexes of the journals or records of the House, he can not find.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this another case of the House giving way to the Senate?

Mr. SULZER. So far as the number of the cerned, I understand it can have the same number. cerned, I understand it can have the sentleman's pardon. The Senate Mr. SULZER. So far as the number of the resolution is con-amendment is to strike out the "H. J. Res." and the number and to insert "concurrent resolution No. —."

Mr. KENDALL. There may be a concurrent resolution of that number.

Mr. MANN. The Senate amendment leaves the number blank, so that if the House simply concurs in the Senate amendment this concurrent resolution will then have no number. Mr. SULZER. So far as the effect of this resolution is concerned, the change is immaterial, and it accomplishes the purpose desired. I have no disposition to be technical in these matters. I am trying to get results and am willing that my resolution be made concurrent instead of a joint resolution. this Republic to be the first country to congratulate the new Republic of China, and I want this Government to be the first Government to officially recognize the Republic of China. resolution is the basis for official recognition, which is an Executive function. I hope the President will now officially recognize the Republic of China. Congress has spoken. Let the President act accordingly.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me at first blush that the gentleman ought to move to concur in the Senate amendment, with an amendment inserting a number for the concurrent resolution, which, I suppose, if that were done, would take the next number of concurrent resolutions. If the amendment of the Senate is simply agreed to, the resolution will have no number by which it can be identified hereafter.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, could not the matter be avoided by giving this the next concurrent resolution number?

Mr. MANN. It can be done by amending the Senate amend-

Mr. NORRIS. It would have to go back to the Senate, then. Mr. MANN. It would have to go back to the Senate, then, where, of course, that amendment would be concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER. It could be done in conference.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not propose a conference. Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in order to meet the suggestion I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment inserting the proper number of the House concurrent resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. That will make it all right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Sul-ZER] moves to concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment inserting the proper serial number of the House concurrent resolution, to be inserted by the Clerk. (H. Con. Res. 50.) The motion was agreed to.

NAVIGATION LAWS AND PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Congressional Record the engrossed resolutions of the New York Chamber of Commerce on the subject of a proposed change in the navigation laws, and also in regard to the use of the Panama Canal by steamers owned by railroads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] asks unanimous consent to print certain resolutions in the Congressional Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how many times this resolution has already been introduced in the form of petitions by Members of Congress and referred to the committee having jurisdiction?

I do not know; they are the engrossed copies Mr. LEVY. from the chamber of commerce.

Were not these resolutions sent to all the New Mr. MANN. York Members?

They might have been, but these are the en-Mr. LEVY. grossed copies.

Mr. MANN. The engrossed copies will be no different when printed in the Record than any other copy. They can not print the engressment in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The following is the matter referred to:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, NEW YORK, April 10, 1912.

At the monthly meeting of the chamber of commerce, held April 4, 1912, the following preamble and resolution, reported by its committee on foreign commerce and the revenue laws, were adopted:

Whereas there is pending in Congress a bill relating to the operation of the Pannma Canal which has been amended so as to prohibit the use of the canal by any steamship company in which any railroad has an interest; and

Whereas such action would prevent the use of the canal by the largest owners of American steamships and would prevent the further building of steamers in American yards for their service: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, believing that the Pannma Canal, when completed, should be open to all tonnage, irrespective of ownership, protests against any legislation which departs in any degree from that broad and equitable policy.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
NEW YORK, April 10, 1912.

At the monthly meeting of the chamber of commerce, held April 4, 1912, the following preamble and resolutions, reported by its committee on foreign commerce and the revenue laws, were adopted:
With the near approach to the opening of the Panama Canal, if the United States is to reap the full advantage of this great work, there must be American shipping to avail of it, and the way to secure this will be by such a change in our navigation laws as will enable us to buy ships in the cheapest market and operate them on a competitive

Your committee therefore presents the following preamble and resolutions:

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday and Saturday there was a matter under discussion in the House relating to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department. During that discussion my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] had before him certain files from which he read. Among others, he read from a paper which he stated was an affidavit, and from that affidavit he read statements which he claimed reflected upon me as chairman of the committee and upon the committee generally.

On yesterday my colleague kindly gave me the files which he used on that occasion. I have gone through them with some care, and I find that the paper which he repeatedly read from and referred to as an affidavit was not an affidavit at all, and that even as it was, it did not reflect upon me or upon the committee of which I am chairman.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the matter was not then sprung suddenly upon my colleague. Clearly it is a matter to which he had given considerable attention, and to which other gentlemen doubtless associated with him had also given considerable at-tention. In proof of that I want to call the attention of the House to the closing events on the evening before—that is, Thursday evening. The chairman of the Committee on Accounts [Mr. Lloyd] had offered a number of privileged resolu-These resolutions went through without serious objections.

tion. Among those which the chairman of the Committee on Accounts also had to offer to the House was a resolution asking for an appropriation for the committee of which I am chairman. My colleague evidently knew of that, and when that part of the program was reached, what took place? I will read from the Congressional Record, page 4618:

The Speaker. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.
The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.
Mr. Mann. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that it is getting pretty late.
Mr. Lloyd. Mr. Speaker, there are two other resolutions that I hoped to bring up, but the gentleman from Illinois is anxious that we conclude at the present time, and he has notified me of the fact that there is not a quorum present and that the question would be raised. I therefore move that we do now adjourn.

At that point my colleague from Illinois, evidently having this appropriation in his mind, stated to Mr. LLOYD that he would raise the question of no quorum, and so that resolution went over until Friday morning. On Friday morning my colleague came to the House fortified with the papers now in my hands and for which I say I am indebted to him. When the resolution asking for the appropriation of $7,500 came up, this matter was then opened up and these papers were used by my colleague and friend, or, at least, my whilom friend.

Mr. Speaker, I am entirely at a loss to know or to think of any reason why my colleague should have taken the course he did. I do not think he could have any personal animosity toward me. I certainly know of no cause for it, and I know that I have always entertained the friendliest and kindliest feelings toward him, and I believe now that there was nothing purely personal in it. But the exigencies of the situation, as I propose to show the House, seemed to require that an assault should be made on this committee and that it should be discredited in some way or other.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to recite some recent history. This committee has recently undertaken an investiga-tion of the Indian Office. On the 29th of March a complaint, containing certain charges, was filed with the committee. copy of those charges was at once forwarded to Mr. Valentine, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They are now printed in No. 1 of the hearings concerning the Indian Bureau. I read a few paragraphs from the printed charges, which were known to the Indian Office on the 29th of last month.

Mr. Speaker, I read from the charges filed, to which I have referred:

referred:

Six: I request an investigation by your honorable committee into the conduct of R. G. Valentine, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in certain matters prejudicial to public interests and the Interests of the Indians. I charge Commissioner Valentine with instigating secretly attacks on an official of his own bureau, such instigation being against the interests of good service and tending to destroy discipline and efficient conduct of important affairs.

I charge Commissioner Valentine with responsibility for willfully creating conditions which led to the suspension and removal from the Indian Service on baseless charges of Joseph R. Farr, general superintendent of logging.

I charge Commissioner Valentine with responsibility for inviting bids for the sale of standing timber on the Jicarilla and Fort Apache Indian Reservations without issuing therewith proper preliminary and detailed estimates of quantities, the bids being called under regulations of such character as to make the prospective logging operations uncertain and open to fraud of the grossest character.

I charge Commissioner Valentine with retaining in the service and promoting to a higher position an official against whom charges of drunkenness and other misconduct have been made and fully proven.

I charge Commissioner Valentine with being a party to a gross violation of the law against the introduction of intoxicating liquor on an Indian reservation.

Indian reservation.

These various charges I support by official documents, letters, copies of letters, affidavits, and references to record and documents, and furnish names of witnesses to be summoned in support of the charges.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I prefer not to be interrupted, in order that I may make a consecutive statement of the facts that I propose to submit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I interrupt only for the purpose of inquiring who made those charges?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Browne. These are now printed docu-

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was wondering who Mr. Browne was. Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Herbert J. Browne. Mr. Speaker, these charges clearly have disturbed the Indian Office. Two witnesses have already testified respecting one of those charges, and their testimony strongly sustains one of the charges. I shall not go into that, but I submit them at this time as a reason why some attempt should be made in some way to discredit in advance the work this committee proposes to do. committee is proceeding upon the assumption that it was created for some purpose, and that the House appointed it to carry out that purpose. The committee is proceeding as best it can to do so.

Coming back to the discussion of this matter, I have before me the Congressional Record for Saturday last, at page 4720. At that time I had just read a statement from the RECORD of Friday, and stated that my colleague, Mr. Mann, was not present, and that I regretted his absence. However, he just then came into the House, and I made this statement after he

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that I was just calling attention to a statement in the RECORD, which I have read, while the gentleman was absent from his seat, to the effect that I had advised Mrs. Grey to keep a certain $100, which the gentleman said he saw, by an affidavit he had seen, that I had advised her to keep it.

That language is pretty specific. By an affidavit that he had seen he saw that I had advised her to keep it. I propose to read now the paper from which he read, and when I do it will be perfectly clear to every gentleman present, first, that it was not an affidavit; and, second, that the statements which he made were not contained in it.

At the time he read it he reserved a paragraph in it which made most unwarranted statements with reference to one of the most honorable gentlemen who sits in this body. of course, follow in his lead in that regard and shall not refer This statement was made, it appears, sometime near the end of the last session, in the latter part of August, 1911.

The House will recall that toward the last of August we adjourned sine die, I believe on the 23d of the month. I may state, incidentally, that immediately after adjournment I left Washington for home, and was not here at all during the time that many of the things referred to in this alleged affidavit are said to have taken place. The paper I hold in my hand is a copy of the one from which Mr. Mann read, and I shall use it because his copy is more difficult to read, on account of the character of the paper upon which it is written.

Before I go into the reading of it, let me digress for a moment. One of the statements made by my colleague in answer to a specific question was that he did not get these files from the Indian Office. The one from which he read is just as he gave it to me. I shall read from it, and exhibit to the attention of gentlemen sitting near me that they may see what I read from and the correctness of it. There is on the left-hand upper corner, attached to it, a little pink label, marked "5-378." Then in large printed letters there is the word "Inclosure" and in printed figures "20064." Below that there are the words "From Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior," and again, at the bottom in the left-hand lower corner, the figures "6-1201." I ask any candld gentleman where that came from, and anyone who wishes to do so is welcome to look at it. There are three bunches or packages in the file which he used. I now take another one of them, and exactly the same kind of pink slip is attached to it in the same way. The word "In-closure" is printed upon it, and the figures "21422," and the words "From Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior," with little figures also at the top and bottom; and the one which I now hold in my hand has stamped upon it with a one which I now hold in my hand has stamped upon it with a rubber stamp the words "Office of Indian Affairs, received December 20, 1911, 109,080." It also has stamped upon it with a rubber stamp in pink the words "Department of the Interior, received December 20, 1911," and then there are some letters confused by the typewriting, which I make out to be "Secy of Mails and Files" Mails, and Files.

That is as near as I can come to it, but I can not guarantee the correctness of it. Now, these pink slips were all attached to the papers at the time my colleague had them in his hand and as you will see by reference to the Congressional Record he said they did not come to him from the Indian Office. Now, the statement which my colleague read here and stated to this House was an affidavit is now before me. It is on this thin paper and of course is a copy, but on the margin of it is written:

This is a copy of a statement preferred by me at the request of J. H. Eckloff, cashier of Second National Bank, Washington, D. C., and handed to him on or about August 19, 1911, Washington, D. C., March 11, 1911—which, I take it, means was handed to him on the latter date, but I do not know about that. Now, it is difficult to read and I shall follow the copy which I have and which I believe to be accurate. I hand the copy which my colleague [Mr. Mann] gave me to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ashbrook] and I hope he will correct me if there should be any discrepancy between the copy I read from and the one from which Mr. MANN read.

There is no venue at the top of it. My colleague as a lawyer knows that an affidavit must have venue. There is no venue, no sign of any venue at the top of the paper from which I read, so that any man with ordinary sense would know the moment he looked at it that it was not an affidavit. This, as I have explained, is a statement of Mr. Denomie given to Mr.

Eckloff which my colleague [Mr. MANN] read here and stated to the House was an affidavit. I read:

Eckloff which my colleague [Mr. Mann] read here and stated to the House was an affidavit. I read:

I first met Mrs. Helen P. Grey with Mr. Thomas Sloan, her associate, in the corridor in the House Office Building, on July 14 last, and she said to me, "You are the man I want to see, I want to look at all your papers, I can help you." I answered I would let her look at my papers. I have seen Mrs. Grey before about Mr. Graham's committee room. I saw her again in the committee room where they were investigating the White Earth Reservation Indian affair, when the three Minnesota Indian girls were testifying as witnesses. On the 27th of July, when Mrs. Grey told me to bring my papers to her, and Mr. Sloan gave me her address in her presence on about August 2 last.

Believing what she said, that she could get whatever she wanted done by the Interior Department and that she had Mr. Valentine under her thumb, and for the reason of her having been jailed for two months by the department, and the investigation of the Interior Department now being on it puts Mr. Valentine in terror, and he would be glad to yield to any demand she (Mrs. Grey) might make, etc. On the 4th of August I took my papers to her home, and was there nearly all day assisting her in examining them. She then said she would got o our reservation to look over the situation and get just what we needed. She said she was working at the office of Mr. Valentine and told me where her desk was, etc., and that she had full access to all the documents and clerks she wanted, that Mr. Valentine had given her full charge. She showed me a note lying on the table which she claimed was a note to Speaker Clark from the national Democratic committeeman of Minnesota, asking Mr. Clark to see Mrs. Grey upon certain matters. Upon these representations I yielded and agreed to give her money, and did give her a check for $100 on August 7, as she said she was very anxious to go right away, and that I should go back to the reservation at once. After sendling me on several errands not to pay it.

There are marginal notes, but I will not read them.

I read further:

On August 13 I wrote her that I wanted my papers back. In a letter to me she offered to give me my money back if I would come out to her house. I sent another man out to see her and she refused to see him. The next time I saw her she was going into the Indian Office, which, I think, was the following morning, August 17, when she roundly chastised me, and saying she had seen some of her superiors who advised her not to give me back my money, and that she was not going to give me one

Now, that is the part to which I particularly want to call your attention. The only item in it on which my colleague could base his statement is the one which says that she had seen some of her superiors who had advised her not to give him back his money, and she was not going to give him one cent. I challenge your attention as to whether there is any other syllable of any character in this statement which could possibly by any torture of construction be construed into a reference to the committee, or to me, and there is nothing that in any way tends to show that she would speak of them as her superiors. Now, here comes the hiatus I spoke of. I skip two lines.

Then I read:

Then I read:

I am informed by people who are in a position to know that she is a dangerous and designing woman, who would say anything and stop at nothing to gain her ends.

The $100 which was given her was for the understood purpose of paying her fare to the reservation did we finally come to an agreement. She has never made any attempt to go to the reservation.

While negotiations were pending I also wrote her a letter to the effect that I had changed my mind.

Anytoine Demonia

That is all of the statement. That is the paper from which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] read. It is signed, and there is some writing on the margin which I have already read and will not repeat now, which says he made this statement to John H. Eckloff, cashier of the Second National Bank, at Mr. Eckloff's request, on or about the 19th of August, 1911. That is the whole statement. There is no affidavit appended to it; it has no venue; it has no characteristic of an affidavit

Mr. FOWLER. It is not sworn to, is it? Mr. GRAHAM. It is not sworn to; of course not. read from Saturday's Congressional Record, on page 4954, and I read for the purpose of identifying the paper I have read with my colleague's [Mr. MANN] reading of it.

In the first paragraph, first column, page 4954 of the Record, he says:

This Indian made an affidavit that he met Mrs. Grey going to the Indian Office, and that she roundly chastised him, saying that she had seen some of her superiors, who advised her not to give him back his money, and that she was not going to give him one cent.

He said:

In the same affidavit the Indian stated that Mrs. Grey said that she could get whatever she wanted done by the Interior Department, and that she had Mr. Valentine, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under her thumb. The affidayit, I believe, is on file. At least, I have a copy

Mr. RAKER then intervened, and asked:

Where is it on file?

Mr. Mann. I do not know whether it is on file in the Indian Office. It was obtained by the people who were seeking to obtain back the money, I believe.

Mr. Graham. Does the gentleman mean that it is in some official

Mr. Mann. I do not now recall whether it is on file in the Indian Office, because I did not obtain my information from the Indian Office.

Mark that, in view of the papers I have exposed to your view, bearing the file mark and every indicia of having come from the Indian Office, and which, of course, I got from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] himself. My colleague says:

I do not now recall whether it is on file in the Indian Office, because I did not obtain my information from the Indian Office. I will say to the gentleman that I have a very complete file, which, if the gentleman desires, I shall be very glad to show to him. I would not care to read it into the record, because it reflects unjustly, in my judgment, upon some people.

To my colleague's credit, I will say he did give me the file that he used, and I have shown it to you. Now, at the same time that my colleague was reading this paper, he being a lawyer of many years of experience, being a man of marked ability, being a man of wide experience in parliamentary affairs and in handling official papers, can it be claimed for him by anyone he did not know that that paper was not an affidavit?

Am I justified in presuming that he then believed he would not be challenged, and that he could "get away with the goods," and that this news would go out to the country as an affidavit when he had knowledge then and there that what he was saying was absolutely false and untrue?

Now, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize the matter still more, the very next paper in the file which he read from is an affidavit. very next paper in the file which he read from is an affidavit. There is no question or confusion about it. It begins with the words at the head of it, "District of Columbia, ss," the venue form so familiar to every lawyer—"District of Columbia, ss." Did my colleague read from it? Not one syllable, not one word, is taken from the real affidavit. I propose to read it, and I will ask my friend from Ohio [Mr. Asherook] to look at the copy given to me by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to see that the copy I read from is correct. It reads: see that the copy I read from is correct. It reads: DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, 88:

I, Antoine Denomie, being first duly sworn according to law, depose and say as follows-

That is perfectly plain, is it not? Could any man who can read and write be deceived as to the different character of those two papers? I read:

On or about August 4, 1911, I had a talk in Washington, D. C., with Mrs. Helen Pierce Grey, at her request, and showed her a number of papers relating to matters of the La Pointe Band of Chippewa Indians which I had been sent to Washington, D. C., by the business council committee to look after.

And here let me say that our committee has never had at any time any question or investigation of any sort concerning that band of Indians. They had never been before the committee in any way whatever. Continuing, I read:

in any way whatever. Continuing, I read:

She told me that she was in position to help me get what my people wanted, and would act as our attorney. On or about August 7, 1911, I gave the said Mrs. Grey at her request my check for $100, which was to cover her expenses in going to the Bad River Reservation to get our matters in shape.

On or about the 8th day of August, 1911, at her suggestion, I had a further talk with the said Mrs. Grey in Washington, D. C., in which she spoke of a contract between the La Pointe Band and D. B. Henderson to represent the band as attorney in connection with the swampland claims against the State of Wisconsin, and wanted me to write a letter to my people telling them to withdraw from that contract. I asked her to write the letter she wanted me to send, and she said she wanted me to see Mr. R. G. Valentine. Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and get him to prepare it for me, and she said she would speak to Mr. Valentine about it for me, and that I should go to see Mr. Valentine the next day.

I did go to see Mr. Valentine on the next day, August 9, 1911, and talked with him probably 15 or 20 minutes, during which time he handed me a letter addressed to me by himself, which had already been prepared, said letter being dated August 9, 1911, and numbered "Law, 41920-1910, E. B. M."

"E. B. M.," I take it, being E. B. Meritt, the law officer of

"E. B. M.," I take it, being E. B. Meritt, the law officer of the Indian Bureau. I continue reading:

"In response to your informal inquiry requesting to be advised regarding an attorney contract of Daniel B. Henderson with the La Pointe or Bad River Tribe of Indians"—

And so forth.

As I had never had any talk with Mr. Valentine prior to this interview, and had never myself made any such request as that referred to in his letter, and as Mrs. Grey had told me that she would speak to Mr. Valentine on this subject, and had, in fact, arranged for me the interview which I was then having with him, I understood that in this letter Mr. Valentine referred to such informal request made by Mrs. Grey in my name as my attorney.

Some time before the interview above referred to, possibly several months before that time, Mr. Valentine made an appointment for me to meet him at his office at a certain time, and I went to his office at the time appointed in company with Mr. Charles Shaw and Mr. J. V. Townsend, clerk to Congressman Stephens, and waited about an hour or more, but was unable to see him, and went away. I did not at any time have any interview with Mr. Valentine prior to the interview above referred to, which was brought about through Mrs. Grey, and which occurred on or about August 9, 1911.

On August 27, 1911—

Which was long after I and the members of my committee had left Washington.

Which was long after I and the members of my committee had left Washington.

On August 27, 1911, William Obern, a member of the business council committee of the La Pointe Band, showed me a letter written to him by Mrs. Grey, in which she referred to this matter in the following language, which I copied from the original letter at the time and before returning it to Mr. Obern:

"Mr. D. asked me to go with him and get his papers from Mr. Henderson, and I did so. He agreed to write immediately to the business committee the conditions surrounding your business. So I got him a chance to have a long talk with the commissioner, and he then communicated to him practically what I am writing you?

The visit to Mr. Henderson was made at Mrs. Grey's own suggestion. Many things In Mrs. Grey's conduct made me suspicious of her, and concluding that it was not wise to deal further with her, I asked her not to take any further action, as I wished to give the matter further consideration before proceeding with her as she had planned, and in the meantime requested her to return the money I had given her for the purpose of defraying her expenses in her proposed trip to the Bad River Reservation and also to return my papers. She declined to return either the money or the papers, and I believe that she assumed to act in the matter as if she were authorized by me to act as my attorney and the attorney of the La Pointe Band in these matters. But she did not have any such authority, and the arrangement which I had with her at one time, but which I subsequently revoked, was entered into by me on account of representations made to me by her, which I afterwards satisfied myself were largely false and misleading.

When I became suspicious of Mrs. Grey and decided to withdraw our matters from her, I inquired at the bank whether my check to her had been cashed, and finding that it had not been I directed that payment thereof be stopped. Through error, however, the check being presented during a rush of business, the check was subsequently p

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 8th day of February, 1912. FRED. C. GEIGER, Notary Public. [SEAL.] My commission expires February 14, 1915.

Now, there is an affidavit which any schoolboy could pick out and know to be an affidavit; but have you discovered one word in it that has the remotest reference to the committee or to me as its chairman?

The affidavit did not furnish any basis for an attack, and so, I repeat, I feel forced to conclude that in order that there might be an excuse for a foundation to rest this charge upon, my collectue transposed the two papers, and he calls the "statement" an "affidavit," and ignores altogether the real affidavit.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRAHAM. I do not care to yield at present. If I have time when I conclude my statement I will. Now, Mr. Speaker, I assume my colleague read into the record from these papers everything which he believed served his purpose. I ask this House, in view of the selection and segregation of these papers in this way, marked as they are, whether there is any great probability that anything remained not produced here?

What is the purpose of this; why all this preparation; why were these papers brought together in this way?

My colleague told this House that they did not come to him from the Indian Office, or that he did not get them from the Indian Office; I forget the exact language he used. It may be literally true, and it probably is true, that they were handed to him here in the House, and that he did not go to the Indian Office himself and get them there.

I have demonstrated to you that they were the work of the Indian Bureau, and that they bear on their face sufficient evidence to convince any man who has a regard for the truth that they came from the Indian Office.

Now, the language I use is very plain and very strong language, but I put it to the judgment of the gentlemen composing this House if the language I use is stronger than the evidence

A letter was read to you by my colleague addressed by me to the Secretary of the Interior, which I hold in my hand. It was not a part of the three files, but came to me from my colleague, who read it to the House. It simply says:

Mrs. Helen P. Grey wishes to look through some records in the Land Office and also in the office of the Reclamation Service for our committee. Will you kindly see that she is given the necessary permission?

It is signed by myself. If it be treason, make the most of it. I now read a copy of a letter from the Indian files. I have not the original. I can not therefore testify as to its correctness, not having seen the original, but my colleague can easily get the original, as easily as he got these other papers, and if found not to be correct I shall get up before the House and apologize. It is dated September 28, 1911:

SEPTEMBER 28, 1911.

Hon. R. G. Valentine.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Sin: Referring to our recent conversation and in pursuance of suggestion then made, I have the honor to request that you advise me the nature and extent of the authority presented by Mrs. Helen Pierce Grey under which she was, during the month of August, 1911, accorded recognition and furnished with information in relation to the affairs of the La Pointe Band of Chippewa Indians of the Bad River Reservation in Wisconsin.

I have been informed that she has claimed to have some general authority of an inquisitory nature from the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and that she has represented that her activities in the Indian Office in relation to the affairs of the Bad River Reservation were carried on by virtue of that authority.

I am particularly desirous of knowing, also, on behalf of my client, who is a member of the La Pointe Band of Chippewa Indians and a participant in their tribal rights, the extent to which Mrs. Grey may properly go in the investigation of affairs on the Bad River Reservation and of the public records at the La Pointe Agency, under whatever authority she now has as recognized by you in the event that she should visit the said reservation and agency, as it is understood that she contemplates doing.

should visit the said reservation and agency, as it is understood that she contemplates doing.

The purpose of this inquiry is to put me in position on behalf of my client to restrict Mrs. Grey, if possible, within the limits of her proper authority, because of his belief as well as my own that any influence exerted by her upon the tribal affairs of the La Pointe Band will be pernicious.

Very respectfully,

Attorney for Antoine Denomic

Z. LEWIS DALBY, *
Attorney for Antoine Denomic.

Now, is it not perfectly plain that the challenge contained in the second paragraph of that letter calls on the commissioner for a specific statement as to the authority she had? I will read that paragraph again:

I have been informed that she has claimed to have some general authority of an inquisitory nature from the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and that she has represented that her activities in the Indian Office in relation to the affairs of the Bad River Reservation were carried on by virtue of that authority.

And now for the commissioner's answer to that:

[Education, Law, and Order 83808-1911. Authority of Mrs. Grey.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, October 5, 1911.

Mr. Z. Lewis Daley, 621 Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Z. Lewis Balet,
621 Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have your letter of September 28. Mrs. Helen Pierce Grey was furnished information on any topics in which she was interested, under my general policy of allowing anyone interested to study the records of this office, except in the rare cases where, while a case is being handled, there might be some administrative reasons for temporarily not making the action of the office public.

This would be the case in any event, whether or not she possessed any particular authority from an investigating committee or from any other quarter. What particular authority she has from the investigating committee I do not know. She has filed nothing along that line in this office. I have had reason to believe, however, that she was assisting the committee in looking up documents here for them; but, from my point of view, that is irrelevant, as she would have had access to the documents in any case. Similarly, if Mrs. Grey or anyone else should wish to study affairs on the Bad River Reservation or look at the records in the local office, there would be no more objection to that than to her presence here.

It has been my undeviating policy from the beginning to run reservations as open propositions; first, because I believe that course to be right, and, second, because I believe any other course would be absolutely useless, since the fullest publicity is certain, sooner or later, to enter, as it ought, every Indian reservation; and it is better to welcome it in advance than to be obliged grudgingly to consent to it afterwards. Respectfully,

R. G. VALENTINE, Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, let me now read, or rather reread, the paragraph which challenged the commissioner and the answer to it, and put them side by side:

I have been informed that she is claiming to have some general authority of an inquisitory nature from the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and that she has represented that her activities in the Indian Office, in relation to the affairs of the Bad River Reservation, were carried on by virtue of that authority.

That is the challenge. Here is the response:

Mrs. Helen Pierce Grey was furnished information on any topics in which she was interested, under my general policy of allowing anyone interested to study the records of this office, except in certain cases.

This would be the case in any event, whether or not she possessed any particular authority from any investigating committee or from any other quarter. What particular authority she has from the investigating committee I do not know. She has filed nothing along that line in this office. I have had some reason to believe, however, that she was assisting the committee in looking up documents here for them, but from my point of view that is irrelevant, as she would have had access to the documents in any case.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Valentine corroborates exactly what I said on the floor last Friday—that the committee had the use of her services for the purpose of locating documents in the files of the Indian Office or anywhere in the Interior Department. freely confess, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that I am far from being well equipped for the work of investigating the Interior Department. I know nothing of its filing schemes, I know nothing of where its papers are. No man on the ma-jority side of our committee does. We would be as helpless as children if we had to do that work, and so we have had the help of this lady, who did know, who had a tremendous fund of information concerning the workings of the office, the location of the files and the papers in them, and the nature of the papers and their contents, and who rendered us a great deal of service, valuable service, which we could not have worked out for ourselves in years, if ever.

Mr. Valentine corroborates exactly what I said to you on the floor last Friday and Saturday as to what she did for our committee. It was no secret then; it is no secret now. Not at all. She did excellent work for our committee in that regard. Her knowledge of the files, of public papers, of the hearings before the Senate and the House, of Senate documents and House documents, and of the law concerning these matters was amazing to me, and if she possessed the power to classify the facts which she knows, she would be a most remarkable person in that regard.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I was not through.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much more times does my colleague desire?

Mr. Speaker, I could hardly state exactly as Mr. GRAHAM. to the matter of time. I could of course, knowing that I had to conclude in a short time, cut the coat according to the cloth, and quit. Let us say 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 15 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. Graham] may continue for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his courtesy.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for question?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this discussion and to what the gentleman has just said about the valuable services of this lady. Now, if I understand the matter and the discussion of a few days ago, the gentleman said she was not in the employ of the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did, and I repeat it now.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, is it the purpose of the committee not to pay this woman for these services?

Mr. GRAHAM. The committee will not pay her one cent of money; the committee has no authority to do it.

Mr. McKENZIE. But the committee accepted her services. Mr. GRAHAM. We are accepting the services of numberless persons every day, every day; otherwise, I say to my colleague, we could make no progress at all. When my colleague stops to consider that the Interior Department has in it the General Land Office, the Indian Bureau, the Reclamation Service, the Pension Office, the Patent Office, and a number of other services, and there is but a committee of seven persons to go into all those matters, and that, unfortunately for the country, the Democrats have not had many permanent places on committees in the past, and, also unfortunately for the country, our Republican friends have had control of every department of the Government for nearly 20 years and have run them in such a way that everything connected with its business from that time ought to be carefully investigated, I repeat, in view of the immense amount of work to be done and the lack of experience on the part of those who have to do it, we would be helpless without outside assistance

Mr. McKENZIE. I have no objection to the investigation of the committee, but what I want to get satisfied about in my mind is whether this lady is rendering this service simply as public-spirited citizen, or whether she is looking for something or some place or some pay or compensation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have known my colleague from Illinois so long it would shock the House if I would tell them the time, because they would not suspect his age or mine to be so great, and I have heard him electrify the Illinois Senate very often, and I know he is a very shrewd lawyer; but I want to inform him now, Mr. Speaker, that he is not shrewd enough to draw a red herring across the trail and get me to follow it. to be switched from my position to any irrelevant side issues. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to give the House an idea of how this matter has been gone into, I want to call attention to the fact that the files handed me by Mr. Mann, my colleague, go back to June 3, 1907, and in investigating this matter they come down to February 10, 1908, and from that time on to this I assume that every material thing in the files was produced and put in the hands of my colleague, and I suspect that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] was his assistant in that regard. Let me ask my colleague from South Dakota-will he answer a

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Why, most assuredly, and I will ask the gentleman from Illinois after I do that if he will answer one or two for me.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman put his first, or later? Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman put his first, or later? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; the gentleman can put his question first.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did my colleague from South Dakota get these files from the Senator who is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and give them to my colleague from Illinois?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the statement which the gentleman makes with reference to these files that they were delivered to me-did the gentleman say by the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; I did not put it so narrowly as that; I put it broadly-whether they came to the gentleman through him by one or another means of conveyance.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I say the papers did come from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, of which Mr. Gamble, the Senator from my State, is the chairman. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. GRAHAM. And they came to you? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They came to me. Mr. GRAHAM. And you gave them to Mr. MANN?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I gave them to Mr. MANN, at his request.

Mr. GRAHAM. Now I am ready to answer my colleague's question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now will the gentleman tell me and the House who paid Helen Pierce Grey?

Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman stated the other day all he is going to say on that point.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman does not answer the question.

Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman would further say-let me cut out the indirect term "gentleman," referring to myself, and make it direct—I will say I saw a statement in the Post last Sunday that, so far as I know, may be correct; I do not

But I say to the gentleman now that she did not receive any public money, and I further say to him that there is not power enough on that side of the House to make me go further than that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, I ask the gentleman another question. The gentleman stated the other day on the floor that a Mr. Fennell, an attorney at law in this city, was not employed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior. Does the gentleman make that statement now?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not remember what word I used. I did say in substance, or meant to say, that he was not employed in the sense of receiving any public money or having any claim to any.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But he was employed by the

Mr. GRAHAM. I will not say that. He acted for the com-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman this question-Mr. GRAHAM. I answer those questions in courtesy to my colleague, because he yielded to me. Otherwise I would have made the same answer to him that I made to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie]—they are irrelevant.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Was not the attorney employed by the majority of the members of the committee—that is, a majority of the majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department—and that the committee employed him believing that it had authority from the House to employ counsel?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That was not the case?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But he was employed, was he not, by a majority of the members constituting the majority? Mr. GRAHAM. No; only in the sense that a majority of the majority knew he was acting for the committee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. I would like to ask the gentleman if, as a matter of fact, an arrangement was not made with this attorney by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. George], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hensley] in the office of the gentleman from Illinois? Is not that true?

Mr. GRAHAM. Does that imply that he was to receive any public money

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am asking if that was where he was employed.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will not answer questions that do not go to public money.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will ask the gentleman another question. When his compensation was due, which was $200, I believe in the form of a retainer-

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If, when he called upon the chairman of the committee for his pay, the chairman did not take the attorney to the Committee on Accounts in the Capitol, and if he did not there receive a check from the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd], for $200 and hand it to the attorney?

Mr. GRAHAM. He did not take him to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Did he take him to the chairman of the committee [Mr. LLOYD]?

Mr. GRAHAM. That I decline to speak about. speak on those matters which are entirely outside this question and which gentlemen on the other side, because they see they are in a bad place, are trying to substitute for the issue here. About those questions I care nothing. I say to you that my shoulders are broad enough to bear those things, and I say to you that not a cent of public money has been used in this way; not one.

Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to another mat-You, gentlemen on this side of the House, what do you think of the situation revealed to you by the documents I have read? What do you think of the use made of them by the minority leader in this House? How are the mighty when the Grand Old Party has for its leader in the House of Representatives a man who is willing to take papers in his hands and to falsify them in the presence of this House? What do you think of that condition? Is it honorable? And then in this later matter these papers were sprung when and how? Can you not see the conspiracy? Can you not see when the train was laid?

I do not know what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thought when he spoke the other day about Mrs. Grey having a desk down in the Indian Office. Had she corrupted the Indian Office? Had she the Indian Office so much under her thumb, as he informed us, that they had to give her a desk and give her papers and do what she said? His argument means this: That the Bureau of Indian Affairs is run in such a way that anyone who knows the condition of affairs there could go in there and make the commissioner hold up his hands; that the person who has such knowledge can compel him to give whatever he Is there any other conclusion to be drawn from his argument and his position? If so, I would like to know what it is. And in this other matter you see what has been going on. You see a Senator, the chairman of the Indian Committee in the United States Senate, in some way-I did not inquire how-in some way getting a file, carefully prepared by public servants who are paid public money for doing public work, but instead of doing the work they are paid for they are employed in compiling the records of that office for the purpose of coming on the floor here and doing what? Trying to bluff a committee that they could not control in any other way; trying to use the power of the press, for the Associated Press reports that have gone out over the country seem to have fallen into their way of thinking and presented only their side. You find this conspiracy going on-the Indian Office employing its public servants in preparing this, and in a roundabout way slipping it to a Senator, and the Senator slipped it to my colleague on the committee from South Dakota, and he, from ambush, fires a shot in the rear of his own committee.

My colleague [Mr. Mann] said the other day that the gentle-man from Missouri [Mr. Catlin] resigned from our committee and he put the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] on the committee because of his knowledge of Indian affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Rucker of Missouri). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. I wonder, if he had told the whole truth, whether the gentleman from Missouri was not invited to make a vacancy for the gentleman from South Dakota, who comes in now, shooting in the back the committee of which he is a mem-Gentlemen, what do you think of it all? [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope my colleague will get it.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the papers which my colleague Mr. MANN. [Mr. Graham] has just held in his hand were furnished to him by me yesterday. They came into my hands, through a request which I made, from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate.

I stated in the House the other day that I did not receive them from the Indian Office. I did not suppose that anyone was so simple-minded that he thought they could be obtained without some method of communication with the Indian Office, where necessarily most of them were on file. I did not obtain them from the Indian Office, nor did the Indian Office voluntarily prepare the papers for submission to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, if I am correctly informed. But, growing out possibly of the Helen Grey matter and the trouble that was being encountered with her in reference to two payments which had been made to her, I suppose the Indian Office obtained the information which has been made public in this way. It is very natural, possibly, that the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague [Mr. Graham], supposed that the papers which he had in his hand just now were the documents which I held in my hand in the House last Friday and Saturday, but the paper which I held in my hand and read from the other day I now hold in my hand.

It is true that my colleague sent me a note yesterday asking for the papers. I do not remember whether he asked for the paper which I had in my hand on the floor or not. But, out of proper fairness and courtesy to him, I furnished him with the complete files which had come into my hands. I have never read these files through. I do not undertake to say in reference to the affidavit of the Indian Denomie. It is quite likely, and I accept the statement of my colleague, that the statement made there, from which I quoted, was not in affidavit form. I requested a person who is familiar with such matters to go through these files and prepare a memorandum, short and brief, for me, so that I might have it if I desired to use it. In the statement which is furnished to me it reads:

In an affidavit made by the Indian Denomie he says that he met Mrs.

And so forth. He also in his affidavit says she warned him not to go, and so forth.

My colleague now says that that statement is not in the form of an affidavit. I accept his statement. I may have been mis-led as to whether it was in the form of an affidavit, although I notice that my colleague himself read from an affidavit of the same Indian, stating that he had made the statement. The question is not whether it was in the form of an affidavit, but whether it was true. Does my colleague deny that in the papers which I furnished to him there is a statement made by the cashier of the Second National Bank of this city, a responsible party, that Mrs. Grey informed him that she had been advised by the chairman of the committee for which she was working, the Committee on Investigation of Expenditures in the Interior Department, not to refund the amount of the check? The state-ments are in the files, I believe, which I furnished to my col-league. They are in the abstract which I hold in my hand. I do not care whether my colleague made the statement not to refund the check or not. I am perfectly willing to accept his statement that he did not so inform Mrs. Grey. What difference does all that make? Who denies that this woman was working for this committee, under employment, and at the same time soliciting employment from private interests who might be affected by the action and the judgment of the committee? Who denies that Mrs. Grey is being paid for her services before this committee? It would be better, in my judgment, if she were being paid out of the public funds for the services that she renders. She is working for whom before the committee? My colleague himself says, as I understand, that she has been performing these services for the committee. Does it come to this, that the great Government of the United States, this great body of Representatives, has a committee which desires to obtain information and hires somebody to do that, to be paid by private parties who may be interested in the result? Answer that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In a statement in one of the Sunday papers on Sunday last, credited to Mrs. Grey, she is reported to have said that she was being paid, not by the Government, not out of public funds, but by the chairman of the Committee on Accounts of this House and the chairman of the Democratic congressional committee. [Applause on the Republican side.] Have you not public funds? You have already appropriated and provided for the expenditure of more than $150,000 for these investigations. If you have not public funds, we will join you in voting for the payment of the necessary services out of the public funds instead of asking you to solicit slush funds to hire people to work Who contributes to the slush fund? [Applause on the Republican side.] Who provides the money out of which the chairman of the Committee on Accounts of this House, in control of the contingent fund of the House, pays for services out of private funds, out of slush funds, raised possibly by assessment on the employees of the House of Representatives?

The gentleman spent half an hour here attempting to convict me, because I read from a statement what some one had said was in an affidavit, and the gentleman said it was not in an affidavit; that it was a mere statement, although subsequently corroborated by an affidavit. I accept the gentleman's correction. It may have been a statement, but was it true? [Applause on the Republican side.] It is a matter of minor importance whether the statement was made in one form or another. It is a matter of minor importance whether the chairman of that committee said or did what the affidavit or the statement said he did, but it is a matter of transcendent importance whether the committees of the House of Representatives, engaged in investigating the expenditures of the Government and the fallacies of legislation, shall have under their control employees whose judgment and interest is warped and controlled by private, special interests, paying them for their [Applause on the Republican side.] services.

You talk about special interests affecting legislation, and yet you, who talk and sing your songs from one end of the year to the other about special interests affecting legislation, behold it turns up that you are employing persons admitted to be paid by the special interests out of slush funds furnished to you. I do not understand how the Democratic side of the House can stand and face this charge without investigation, and, if the facts be as I have reason to believe, without rebuke and reprimand. Common honesty and decency demand an investigation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

TERMS OF COURT AT CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the amendments.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the Post Office Department.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Hay in the

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk fend as follows:

For salaries of post-office inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions, at $3,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,250 each; 26 inspectors, at $2,100 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,000 each; 29 inspectors, at $1,900 each; 35 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 75 inspectors, at $1,500 each; 75 inspectors, at $1,500 each; and 65 inspectors, at $1,500 each; in all, $704,450: Provided, That, for the purpose of inspecting and investigating rural-delivery routes and proposed rural-delivery routes, a number of inspectors not exceeding 30 shall be placed subject to the orders of the Fourth Assistant Postmar General whenever and for such periods as in his judgment they may be needed for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the tragraph. I would like to inquire of the chairman about the paragraph. This does not increase the number of post-office inspectors, but provides that 30 may be placed under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, if he thinks that they are needed for investigations of rural routes. Might not that leave the force short? Ought not that to be in the judgment of the Postmaster General instead of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has charge of these matters.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but does not the Postmaster General have charge of the post-office inspectors?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; but the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has charge of them, too. This is a provision that was thought necessary in the interest of the rural-route in-

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that part of it, but it strikes me that where you provide that officials under the Postmaster General shall be transferred from under him whenever the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General thinks it is necessary, that that is putting the cart before the horse.

Will the gentleman from Illinois permit an Mr. FINLEY.

interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, for the past two years the handling of the Rural Delivery Service in the matter of inspection has been delayed. It is behind from a year to a year and The reason for that is that there have been a great many investigations of fraud perpetrated in the great cities of the country. It is not necessary to name these cities, say that there is a widespread complaint all over the rural sections of the country to the effect that the rural service has not had its fair share of attention, and after consultation with the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General in the hearings he intimated that something like 30 inspectors would be sufficient, in his judgment, to give to the Rural Delivery Service such attention as is necessary.

Mr. MANN. Why do you not carry that item under the rural service? I have no objection to it.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman will bear in mind that we have no Rural Delivery Service inspectors, but they are all post-office inspectors, and they are carried under the head of the inspector's force. I think I can assure the gentleman that there is no trouble about it and that it will result in no confusion. The demand is such, not in one State alone but practically in all the States, that it was thought necessary to obviate that difficulty and give some expression, and the committee after taking the matter up with the Fourth Assistant Post master General in the hearings placed this provision in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I thought I made myself clear about it, but the gentleman does not seem to appreciate the point I am making.

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, yes; I do. The gentleman objects to giving the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General an authority that he has not got now.

Mr. MANN. No; the objection I made is to giving the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General power to take officials from under the control of the Postmaster General now under his control. That ought to be left to the Postmaster General on the request of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. Mr. BARTLETT. Are the inspectors al

Are the inspectors all under the Postmaster General?

Mr. MANN. They are.

Mr. FINLEY. They are all under the Postmaster General, and so is the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman from Mr. Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I vield the floor.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman made a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. No; I reserved it, but I am not going to make it. Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I am glad he is not going to make the point of order. The truth about it is that the consideration and investigation of applications for the establishment and for the change or extension of rural routes has been very much delayed, for some cause. I do not believe it is the fault of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, because I have in a number of cases been to see him with reference to certain applications pending in my district, and he has taken the trouble to direct them to be made special, and has himself written to the inspector in charge of that particular territory expressing to him his desire in the premises and directing him to make an investigation and report. I have in mind now an application for an important change in one of the rural routes in my district and several which the Postmaster General himself has made special, has himself recognized the emergency of the application, and I myself, through his direction, have written to the inspector in charge of that territory, and for 12 months or more I have not been able to have a report or to have an investigation made because, I am informed, the inspectors of the Post Office Department, whose duty it is also to inspect and report on applications to establish and change rural routes, had so much business to do in the matter of inspecting other business and in ferreting out violations of the law that it could not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield-

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, we have been unable, even with the activity that the Congressman from that district could put into the matter, to have it done, even with the insistence and urgent request and demand of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General that those routes be inspected. It is almost futile sometimes, and has been for the past few years, to press these applications, and, of course, the only way to remedy that condition is to give the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General a sufficient force to have these applications investigated and passed upon. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for not insisting upon his point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I realize what the gentleman from Georgia has said, but I want to ask him this; It seems to me that this proviso is merely an expression of a legislative desire that Congress would like so many inspectors segregated for the purpose of investigating rural routes. gentleman has read the proviso. Does he think that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General would take these inspectors away from other business and put them on the matter of investigating rural routes without the permission of the Postmaster General in the first instance?

Mr. MANN. I think he would.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know whether he would or not. Mr. MANN. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General will not know what the inspectors are doing in reference to other matters. He is not familiar with the work of inspectors in a large branch of the service. He finds what he needs, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] knows that the head of every bureau and department in the Government, knowing the needs of his own bureau or department, endeavors to get the officials to perform the services which he knows about. there are too many inspectors at the present time, very well. I do not believe, as a matter of fact, that there ought to be inspectors taken away from valuable service that they are now performing to put them at the work of inspecting rural routes. The way to meet that would be to provide an additional number of inspectors and put them on the rural routes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman contend that a Fourth Assistant Postmaster General would, contrary to the wishes of the Postmaster General, assign these inspectors to rural-route service? I think not at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not centend that if the Postmaster General should direct the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General not to do it that he would do it; but the gen-tleman knows better than I do that, while the inspectors are nominally under the control of the Postmaster General, in fact they are under the control of a chief inspector, and that it is a matter of dealing between the chief inspector and the Fourth

Assistant Postmaster General: and under this proviso the Fourth Assistant writes a letter stating that he wants these 30 inspectors, and the law says he shall have them, regardless of the position of the chief inspector.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that since the abolishment of the rural inspector and the consolidation of all inspectors under the chief inspector in the office it is the duty of the chief inspector to furnish, for the purpose of inspecting rural routes, inspectors to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General when he makes an order or requisition upon him for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

It was deemed best by the com-Mr. MOON of Tennessee. mittee, inasmuch as this work was so much behind, that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General himself should have the control of some of these inspectors for the execution of that work on the rural routes. There is no conflict of authority, as I understand, between the officers.

Mr. MANN. There will be; it is bad administration. I shall not make the point of order, but it is bad administration, and it necessarily produces a conflict; and the proper way of reaching what the gentleman desires to reach is to provide inspectors of rural routes, placed under the control of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. BARTLETT. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly, and wish it could be done.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We do not increase the number at all in this case.

Mr. MANN. That is the trouble with it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We do not need any more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses incident to the investigation and testing of mechanical and labor-saving devices, under the direction of the Postmaster General, for use in the postal service, $10,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 13, page 4, as a separate paragraph, the following: "The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to pay, in his discretion, rewards to postal employees whose inventions are adopted for use in the postal service, and for that purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered is a proposition to place in the hands of the Postmaster General $10,000, any part of which shall be paid out to any employee in the postal service who adds an invention to the service which in the opinion of the Postmaster General merits reward. idea of the amendment is to give an incentive to the individual employees to add something to the efficiency of that service. In point of fact, there is a fascinating thread running through the story of the Post Office Department in connection with this amendment and what it attempts to effect. For instance, the whole service itself rests upon the idea of the adhesive postage stamp. But for that idea the service never would have grown to its present magnitude. Before the adhesive postage stamp came in the postal service, such as it was, extended generally over all the United States. Letters were so infrequent at the ordinary post office that when a man received one and did not offer to let his neighbors read it he was thought either to be a fugitive from justice or in love. It was the adhesive postage stamp, the idea of the little perforated plaster, upon which the whole modern system was built.

Take our City Delivery Service-one of the most magnificent services in the world. It is a part of postal history that it grew out of an idea of an Irishman over in New York, an Irishman who went to the post office daily, gathered up the mail belong-ing to the merchants along Broadway, and then delivered it in person. The Post Office Department took the Irishman and his idea over and gave him a place with a munificent salary of about $1,000 a year, and I think now the annual expenditure for this service is over $32,000,000. Take, too, the matter of economy in equipment. In the old days, as a great many gentlemen here will remember, the letter pouch was an enormous leather affair with multiplied iron staples at the top which increased the weight of the pouch 3 or 4 pounds. We pay for the carriage of mail by weight and we pay for the carriage of equipment by weight. For a period of a quarter of a century we paid enormous sums, ranging into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, for the carriage of these old leather pouches loaded up with these heavy iron staples. It was some man in the postal service-who was never rewarded-who first had the idea of a soft, light pouch. The old leather pouch with its make this permanent at the start, but to offer it at the beginning iron staples weighed 11 pounds, and the modern pouch, accomplishing the same thing in carriage, weighs 3 or 4 pounds. There are a great many delicate adjustments connected with the postal service, a great field for further invention. Nearly all the gentlemen on this committee are acquainted with the trouble we have had over the matter of stamp cancellation machinesthe fact that the Government is unable to purchase the better machines, but must rent them. There are other possibilities, in a mechanical way, for the Government to effect savings. For instance, the Government sells a 2-cent stamped envelope for 3 cents, and we will sell two of those 2-cent stamped envelopes for 5 cents, or we will sell two, one at a time, for 6 cents. Because of that odd matter of sale and the fractional cent involved, it has been found impossible to correctly keep account of that matter.

I have been shown a curious device, whether it be practical or not I do not know, a stamp register or a cash-registering sort of device which will enable the Government mechanically to keep account of these sales, a matter which amounts annually to thousands of dollars.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have heard of the invention, but I have never seen it.

Mr. FINLEY. That invention is said to save something like 20 per cent or more of the time that is necessary by a clerk. Is not the gentleman of the opinion that the members of the Post Office Committee are not unfriendly to this proposition any further than this, that there is a general law which prohibits employees of the Government from obtaining compensation and that to place this provision, which was brought up in the com-mittee, on the bill here would be an exception in favor of the postal employees and a discrimination against all others? The law should be applicable to all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, if the gentleman will let me complete this idea, I will say that my thought in regard to this amendment is to make that extension and to offer it to the individual employee of the service, wherever he may be, as an incentive of a reward for his invention.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, I ask the gentleman if the committee did not act unfavorably because this would be an exception, and still we felt favorably toward the general proposition. is going to be a change made in the law, the change ought to be made in the interest of all the employees in the Government, and not simply the employees of one branch of the Government.

Mr. MURDOCK. It might be, it is true, extended to all the different departments of the Government. This service is peculiarly one in which the mind of a man, being hourly close to This service is the service itself, is apt to be inventive along the line of the postal improvement.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that if this item goes into the bill that it might not stay in another year?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is true enough. Mr. MANN. And the men who were led to suppose they might receive this reward might lose it hereafter? Now, the House the other day passed a bill providing for the payment of awards in the same manner as the gentleman now proposes, under the Ordnance Department of the War Department, and it is a law. The Naval Committee of the House has reported into the House a similar proposition in relation to the Navy, in both cases the amount being limited to $5,000 a year. That, of course, becomes permanent law unless Congress repeals it, and would undoubtedly be followed by a permanent policy, not for one year, but right along. Why does the gentleman not now introduce a bill along the same lines, which I have no doubt he could get reported out of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and have it passed by the House by unanimous consent?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that my idea was to follow the suggestion of the Post Office Department in this and try it out for a year. It may be that no part of this award would be given in the first year. may not be inventions suggested which would be considered in the opinion of the Postmaster General meritorious enough to warrant the payment of any part of this. My idea is not to in the hope that it would prove serviceable, and eventually it might be made permanent.

Mr. MANN. But I take it it has practically become the policy now by the passage of one law in relation to the ordnance of the War Department, and the other bill will undoubtedly be passed to follow this course under provisions and restrictions contained in that law. There would be no restrictions and provisions in this.

Mr. MURDOCK. This would be open to discretion.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it would be far more desirable to follow the same line. In other words, it is impossible under our Government to adopt one plan for one department of the Government and then a different plan relating to the same subject matter for another department of the Government, and keep them both going. Whichever works the most favorably to somebody we are asked then to even up, and we always do it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois, while there may be a dangerous principle implied in this sort of legislation, I do not admit, in the expenditure for this postal service, which amounts totally to about $250,000,000 a year, the small sum of $10,000 offered as a reward to the inventive mind out in the service is of the serious import which he gives to it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not put me in the attitude of being against it. I was for the bill that went through the House, and the gentleman is not familiar with it.

Mr. MURDOCK. No, I am not. But I hope the gentleman will not oppose this start after he has passed a similar one for the Ordnance Department, because the latter department does not enter into the life of the people, as does the postal service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not want any more time. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I shall insist on the point of order. The committee considered this matter and thought it was not advisable.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk rend as follows:

For compensation to assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices, 5, at not exceeding $4,000 each; 35, at not exceeding $3,000 each; 6, at not exceeding $2,000 each; 6, at not exceeding $2,000 each; 16, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 140, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 81, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 131, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 155, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 141, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 480, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 152, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 480, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 16, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 135, at not exceeding $7,00 each; 125, at not exceeding $800 each; and 100, at not exceeding $700 each; in all, $3,000,000. And the appointment and assignment of assistant postmasters hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on line 6, page 5, I offer the following committee amendment, to strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert "thirty-eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk rend as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 6, by striking out the word "thirty-five" and inserting "thirty-eight."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was ageed to. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-

DOCK] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do that for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to this item for salaries of postmasters and their assistants, not, however, for the purpose of amending the item. This expenditure has now reached the sum of $30,000,000. The law under which the postmasters are paid is statutory, and has been on the books, I think, since 1879. It is antiquated, and it ought to be changed. But it ought not to be changed until a commission or some board of postal officials has made a careful examination of the subject and followed the examination with recommendations.

The system is antiquated because there are too few classes, among other things. As gentlemen know, there are four classes of postmasters—first class, second class, third class, and fourth class—and the first three classes are presidential postmasters.

Of the total expenditure for pay of postmasters, $30,000,000, about half of it is for presidential offices, and the other half, I understand, is for fourth-class post offices.

Mr. FINLEY. I did not catch the gentleman's remark. Mr. MURDOCK. I say, my understanding is that half of that expenditure of $30,000,000 is for presidential postmasters.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman is mistaken in that, this $30,000,000 is for pay of the presidential class.

Mr. MURDOCK. The whole $30,000,000 is for the presidential class?

Mr. FINLEY, Yes.
Mr. MANN. Where is the other item?
Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman will bear in mind that the fourth-class postmasters are paid by cancellations.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; the fourth-class postmasters are paid by cancellations, not including money-order commissions. fourth-class postmasters are paid on the basis of 100 per cent on their first $100 of cancellations, 60 per cent on their second $100 of cancellations, 50 per cent on their third $100 of cancellations, and 40 per cent on the next $200 of sales.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think one-half of it goes to the fourth-class postmasters. They are paid by cancellations.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes. I say they are paid on the basis of cancellations after the first $100 of sales, not including commissions on money orders. An office reaches the third class when the receipts amount to $1,900 a year, and an office reaches the second class when the receipts amount to $5,000 a An office goes into the first class after the receipts reach $30,000 year.

Mr. FINLEY. Forty thousand dollars.
Mr. MURDOCK. Very well. Now, under that system the pay is not equitably divided. It is sufficient in some places, and in some places it is not. There ought to be a thorough investigation of the subject and a recommendation for new classification and Company should in a presentation for new classifications and company should in a presentation for new classifications and company should in a presentation for new classifications and company should be a presentation for new classifications and company should be a presentation for new classifications and company should be a superficient and company shou fications, and Congress should, in a separate law, pass a new provision.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman if fourth-class postmasters are not appropriated for? Does the law which authorizes their payment, which is so much on the basis of stamps sold, make a permanent appropriation for that?

Mr. MURDOCK. I understand not, but that their payment is based on cancellations.

Mr. CANNON. How do they get their money? Mr. MANN. It is carried in this item. Mr. CANNON. Is it paid out of the $30,000,000, or is there an appropriation just for the payment of fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. MANN. Of course, if there was not, they could not be paid. I understand it is in the $30,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

[Mr. MURDOCK] has expired. Would the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] like to have some time?

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask a question, if I may be recognized for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. Moon of Tennessee] or otherwise. It seems that some years ago, during the administration of a former President, an order was issued under the law which put fourth-class postmasters north of Mason and Dixon's line and east of the Mississippi River into the classified service. I am not objecting to that, but I just wondered whether the balance of the country west of the Mississippi River and south of Mason and Dixon's line was a charmed part of the country.

Mr. PROUTY. Are they not under it now?

Mr. CANNON. Have they been placed under it?

Mr. BUTLER.

No; they have not.
I do not recollect any order of that kind. Mr. CANNON. Mr. MANN. They are in the West, but not in the South. Mr. NORRIS. I think the order of the President included 14

States, which were specifically named. I may be mistaken about that, but I think that was the order.

Mr. CANNON. Did it go as far west as Nebraska?
Mr. NORRIS. No; I am sorry to say it did not.
Mr. BUTLER. I wonder why?
Mr. NORRIS. It took in the State of Indiana. I remember that was one of the States. I do not remember all of them.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite sure it took in Illinois.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. It took in Michigan.
Mr BUTLER. It took in Pennsylvania.
Mr. CANNON. I should like to ask the chairman whether his committee have considered the question of legislation putting fourth-class postmasters in the South and West under the civil

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; we have not.

Mr. CANNON. That is all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word on its classification of fourth-class postmasters. The law as it this classification of fourth-class postmasters. exists now, as I understand it, would permit the President to classify all fourth-class postmasters in the United States. it exists, however, it would not permit him to classify the other three classes of postmasters. The President issued this order classifying fourth-class postmasters, and I became acquainted with it through some investigation that I was making with the Civil Service Commission on a bill that I introduced placing presidential postmasters in the classified service. The President issued this order with a view, I think, of eventually ex-tending it to the entire country. He included in the order 14 States, and since that time the Civil Service Commission have been trying to solve the problem as to just how it could best be worked out and extended to include the entire United States. I think those Members who come from country districts will realize that it is a difficult matter to classify fourth-class postmasters, or to put them under the classified service, where such classification would include the small post offices in the country. The Civil Service Commission in trying to solve the problem and work it out on a practical basis have found that in the case of a great many thousand fourth-class post offices it is not practicable to place them under the civil service, because it is often more a question of getting some one to take the office than it is to decide as between different applicants for the office, And a rule providing for the examination of candidates for a country post office would often result in nobody making appli-I think the Civil Service Commission have finally reached the conclusion that it is not practicable to classify post offices where the salary of the postmaster is less than $500, or if they are classified, that it is not practicable to insist on the same rule that would apply to post offices where the salary is sufficient to attract the attention of men who desire the position. So I think in carrying out their rule, where it has already been applied, they make a difference beween a post office where the salary exceeds $500 and a post office where the salary is less than $500, and that usually where the salary is less than $500 the appointments are made on the recommendation of

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is a distinction drawn in the appointment of fourth-class postmasters based upon the salaries they receive?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I think there is a difference even in the 14 States where they have been classified. The Civil Service Commission have made a different rule where the salary exceeds $500 from the one which is followed where the salary is less than $500.

Mr. BUTLER. I have known instances in my congressional district, where the salary was less than $100, the patrons of the office had great difficulty in finding anyone to take an examination for the office. They have held examinations there in every

Mr. NORRIS. I know that the Civil Service Commission has been trying to work it out along that line, because I have gone over the ground fully with the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska

has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Nebraska have five minutes more.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I suggest that the gentleman take his time on another section.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say that I do not care for more time myself, but the gentleman from New York is desirous of asking me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. AKIN of New York. I understood the gentleman to say that the appointment of the fourth-class postmasters who receive less than $500 is on the recommendation of the inspector. I would like to ask the gentleman who the inspector gets his recommendation from?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that he gets any from anybody. The gentleman will have to take what I said with some degree of modification. I had reference to the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, as it is trying to work out a rule that will apply to the fourth-class postmasters. They have said that the same rule that would apply to post offices where the salary was $900 would not work out as a practical proposition where the salary was $100, because in one case plenty of men would take the examination-make application for the office-and in the other case it might be out in the country where only one man was in such a position, having a country store or something of that kind, to hold the office, and he would not care anything about it and would not accept it if they had stringent rules requiring him to make application and go through an examination.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I have had a number of cases in my district where there was a great deal of strife for the office.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true; but if it happens that there is a contest where the salary is less than $100 that is the exception; it is not the general rule. I have had it happen, where I have had personal experience and observation, where the bitterest controversy might arise over a post office that no one would care about, as far as the office was concerned, but wanted it because of some local strife. That is the exception to the general rule.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Would the gentleman care to know where the inspector gets his recommendation from in my dis-

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the gentleman's district is not in one of those States covered by this order.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Oh, it certainly is.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I do not know where the inspector gets his recommendation.

Mr. AKIN of New York. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume if the rule were worked out properly, and I think the Civil Service Commission is acting in the best of faith, the inspector would not get his recommendation from anybody; he would look the ground over and recommend the postmaster that ought to have the place.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will th Mr. NORRIS. Certainly. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has a bill pending in which he provides a new method for the appointment of postmasters. What does it provide and where does he get his supply?

Mr. NORRIS. The bill I have introduced provides that the postmaster shall be appointed by promotion from men already in the service.

Mr. MURDOCK. Any particular branch of the service?

Mr. NORRIS. It puts the entire Post Office Department in the classified service. It puts the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Assistant Postmasters General in the classified service, and practically the Postmaster General himself, because it provides that his term shall be for 10 years, and that he shall not be removed on account of political or partisan affiliations, but only for cause.

Mr. DYER. Would that authorize the transfer of a man from one State to another State?

Mr. NORRIS. It would provide that the man might be transferred from the railway post-office service to a post office, and vice versa, and from the post office to the department in Washington, and from the railway service to the department in Washington, and, in fact, from every department to every other department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks and employees at first and second class post offices.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I wish the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. In the debate on the preceding paragraph I made the statement that one-half of the $30,000,000 was for fourth-class postmasters. The gentleman denied it. I want the Record correct, and I will read from the hearings from the statement of the First Assistant Postmaster General on page 6. Dr. Grandfield, First Assistant Postmaster General,

Mr. Grandfield. Yes, sir.
Mr. Madden. By reason of the consolidation of offices from which you make the rural-route deliveries?
Mr. Grandfield. Exactly. I think this illustrates it: The receipts of the presidential post offices aggregate $200,000,000, or about seven-eighths of the total postal revenue. The salaries paid to presidential postmasters amount to $14,216,000, which is somewhat less than the amount paid for salaries to fourth-class postmasters, whose offices bring in only one-eighth of the postal revenue.

I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] that I believe that is correct, and that is my authority; and as his statement stood in the RECORD it was not correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

And to provide for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question, and that is whether that provision providing for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in the first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade is an increase in the number of clerks entitled to promotion? What is the existing law on the subject?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand that it is an increase of 25 per cent.

Mr. MANN. There is no law upon the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. Former provisions have been for an increase of 50 per cent?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Yes.

Mr. MANN. There have been no provisions. The estimate of the number of clerks has been based upon a promotion of 50 Of course this does not mean anything in here.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that the appropriation in the past has only been sufficient to provide for the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks entitled to promotion.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the promotions heretofore have been based upon the amount of the appropriation, and usually 50 per cent were

Mr. BORLAND. As a matter of fact, was not that the way in which the appropriation was framed so as to provide for only 50 per cent?

Mr. FINLEY. Not in this out.
Mr. BORLAND, In former bills?
FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. That is, the appropriation was sufficient only to provide for promotions of 50 per cent?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes, The promotions could not exceed the amount appropriated for the purpose of paying these clerks and carriers.

Certainly; and now the provision is specific, Mr. BORLAND. that it shall provide for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in the first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and for the promotion of 75 per cent of clerks in the second-class post offices from the fourth to the fifth grade.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The last appropriation was $35, 900,000, and the gentleman will notice in the next paragraph that the appropriation in this bill for this particular thing is $37,878,250. It is supposed to provide for about 25 per cent more of promotions.

Mr. BORLAND. That is what I want to ask the chairman of the committee, whether the appropriation is sufficient to provide for the additional 25 per cent?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is supposed to be.

Mr. FINLEY. While heretofore it has been 50 per cent, this is sufficient to provide for 75 per cent.

Mr. BORLAND. How much more would it take to provide for 100 per cent of the clerks entitled to promotion?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know. That is a calculation that the gentleman can make as well as I.

Mr. FINLEY. Something over a quarter of a million dollars for clerks and carriers.

Mr. ALLEN. About $280,000.
Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the provision increasing the number of clerks in these first and second class post offices who would be promoted is, of course, to that extent an act of justice to the clerks and a good thing for them. In the past the actual practical result has been that whereas there were 100 per cent of the clerks in a certain grade entitled to promotion by reason of their length of service and good record, provision was made only for the actual promotion of 50 per cent of them, which, of course, had the necessary practical result of giving to the postmaster or whoever was in charge of those clerks the right to designate those who would be promoted, whereas a large number of clerks were entitled to promotion as a right and not as a privilege.

Mr. MANN. Why does it entitle them as a privilege?

Mr. BORLAND. Because of the length of the service; all of the same grade.

Mr. MANN. Upon what basis does it entitle them to promotion?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman probably is aware that the law provides automatic promotions up to the $1,100 grade. But from $1,100 to $1,200 there is no provision for promotion except this provision I have just recited.

Mr. MANN. They ought to have promotion, but there is nothing that entitles them to it in the law.

Mr. BORLAND. There is this: Two clerks serve the same Mr. BORLAND. There is this: Two clerks serve the same length of time in the same office and reach the $1,100 grade. Provision is only made for the promotion of one, and therefore one man is taken out of the $1,100 grade, whereas the other man would remain.

Mr, MURDOCK. The gentleman knows, does he not, there is an efficiency requirement which enters into this matter?

Mr. BORLAND. Unquestionably; and it ought to; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that a man of a lower efficiency than is required is not promoted to the $1,200 grade.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but what I want to call the attention of the committee to is this: Where you make provision for the promotion of only 50 per cent of men whose efficiency record may be absolutely the same you will leave out of consideration the promotion on the efficiency record and will make a promotion merely as a matter of favoritism

Mr. MURDOCK. Of course the gentleman understands that the diminishing per cent, in the first place, was adopted with the idea of making that the end of the promotion to $1,200. Now, would the gentleman be in favor of having 100 per cent promoted?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I would, if the efficiency grade is applied to all clerks equally—and I think it ought to be. Nobody is objecting to the efficiency grade, but men who have been in this service the same length of time and submitted to the same efficiency conditions should have exactly the same right to promotion to the $1,200 grade.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, this provision, if carried out, will provide for the promotion of every efficient man. There are numbers of persons who are not efficient; then there are other persons who are not promoted, but at some time during the year when there are vacancies and various things which occur, so this 75 per cent will provide for all, it is thought, both by the department and by the committee, that are really efficient and entitled to promotion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri

has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. as I have had a great many interruptions.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What is before the committee, Mr.

Chairman? The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, I want to say, in reply to the gentle-man from Missouri, a member of the committee, that I am convinced that the suggestion he made is absolutely correct and in accordance with the facts. I suppose it is probable with this increase of 50 to 75 per cent of eligibles for promotion they will be able to reach the number of efficient men entitled I think this probably will be the case.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?
Mr. BORLAND (continuing). But my idea is—
Mr. COOPER. The gentleman to my right suggests this case: Two clerks in an office were entitled to a promotion. 50 per cent probably only one could get promoted and under the 75 per cent only one could get promoted, both equally deserving of promotion.

Mr. BORLAND. That is absoutely true, and the only variation of that is that one out of four gets it whereas it is one out of two.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing to prevent, under the 75 per cent or 50 per cent, both getting it, because that is not applied to particular offices. This is applied with reference to clerks throughout post offices in the United States. All of your efficient men in one office can be promoted——
Mr. BERGER. They can not.
Mr. MANN. The most efficient can be regardless of what offices there are

Mr. BORLAND. It is possible all men in a particular office might be promoted, but it is not possible—might be promoted, but it is not possible—

Mr. NORRIS. If that were done a great many offices who were entitled to it would be neglected.
Mr. BORLAND. There is no question of that—
Mr. COOPER. Precisely what I was going to suggest.
Mr. NORRIS. And that would work the grossest injustice.
Mr. BORLAND. No doubt in the world of that.
Mr. COOPER. That would give full promotion to all employees in certain offices and no promotions to meritorious clocks in other offices.

Mr. BORLAND. It might possibly be worked out in that way.
Mr. COOPER. That is absolutely unjust.
Mr. BORLAND. There is no question that the gentleman from Wisconsin has suggested the real difficulty in the matter. This promotion is not based on the efficiency test, where three or four men of the same grade, at $1,100, can be promoted and the least efficient left at the $1,100 grade, but the three who are promoted are not selected necessarily according to any efficiency standard. The law does not provide for any. I see no object in providing that 50 per cent of the clerks in a grade can be promoted without an efficiency test.

Mr. COOPER. It seems to me if there are to be promotions it will work serious injustice to have three or four men, equally meritorious, discriminated against.

Mr. BORLAND. That is what has been going on until this committee took hold of it.

Mr. COOPER. But you have not done away with it.

Mr. BORLAND. They have taken the right steps to do away with it.

Mr. COOPER. But it is not the right step.

Mr. BORLAND. I am talking from the standpoint of the clerks.

Mr. COOPER. Why not take the whole step?

Mr. BORLAND. I am in favor of taking the whole step, but certainly they have taken a very material step in advance. believe, gentlemen, under the existing cost of living in the large cities, where first and second class post offices are located, $1,200 ought to be the regular grade, and men ought to be promoted automatically for good service, not in the $1,100 but in the $1,200 grade. When you come to promotion above but in the $1,200 grade. When you come to promotion above the $1,200 grade it should be based on the efficiency test, and might be devoted to assistant cashiers and higher-paid and more responsible positions.

Mr. BERGER and Mr. ALLEN rose. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Allen] is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have given this matter much consideration, and I think I will make a statement here that will satisfy the gentlemen who are making inquiries as to what the 75 per cent will do. The pending bill making appropriations for the servtice of the Post Office Department for the next fiscal year, and for other purposes, is to my mind one of the most important bills that will be under consideration in the present session of Congress, as it deals entirely with the only branch of the Government service with which the public comes in direct contact. As a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I have made a careful study of the postal service, and have concluded that it is a subject to which a Member of Congress could devote his entire time and attention and in the end he could not hope to familiarize himself with all its details. Great credit is due to the chairman of the committee and also the subcommittee who drew up the bill, as they have worked hard and conscientiously in an endeavor to provide for the necessary appropriations for conducting the postal service for the next fiscal year, and at the same time they have endeavored to try and bring about certain reforms among the working force that will improve their conditions and lighten their burdens in many

It is on this subject of improved working conditions for the employees in the postal service that I desire to express my views, in the hope that the knowledge gained through inquiry and investigation might be of benefit to the Members of Congress who have not had the time or opportunity to inquire into the matter. I desire, first, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Fifty-ninth Congress enacted a law for the reclassification of the salaries of city letter carriers and postoffice clerks, which was signed March 2, 1907, and reads as follows:

After June 30, 1907, clerks in the offices of the first and second class and carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $800; third grade, salary $900; fourth grade, salary $1,000; fifth grade, salary $1,100; fifth grade, salary $1,100; sixth grade, salary $1,200. Clerks and carriers at first-class offices shall be promoted successively to the fifth grade and clerks and carriers at second-class offices shall be promoted successively to the fourth grade.

You will note that Congress divided the employees into six grades. The framers of the law very wisely made a provision that all promotions should be made only upon evidence satisfactory to the Post Office Department of the efficiency and faithfulness of the employee during the preceding year, and it further provided for the reduction in grade or salary of an employee from a higher to a lower grade whenever his efficiency falls below a fair standard or whenever necessary for the purpose of discipline.

In order to put the law into practical effect the Postmaster General devised a system to be followed in keeping efficiency records of employees, and mailed to the postmaster in every first and second class post office a copy of the instructions for keeping the records, that would be followed in all cases. The result has been that a high standard of efficiency has been maintained among the carriers and clerks employed in first and second class post offices, and the postal service is now receiving from the employees full measure for the compensation that it

The first session of the Sixtieth Congress made provisions for the promotion of all the carriers and clerks to the highest grades in their respective offices, whose records for efficiency and length of service would warrant such promotion. At that time an attempt was made to prevent any appropriation what- | without?

ever for promotion of the employees to the highest grades, and during the debate it was freely stated that if Congress made the appropriation that it would destroy the effect of the law and that every clerk and carrier would be promoted regardless of his efficiency

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio

[Mr. ALLEN] has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. The fears and contentions of those who took this view of the case were unfounded, as no promotions were made during that fiscal year, nor have any promotions been made during any year since the enactment of the law, unless first recommended by the postmaster and later approved by the First Assistant Postmaster General. The employees who earned their promotion during the year following the close of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress received it and those whose records for efficiency did not measure up to the required standard were not promoted, and they themselves knew the reasons why. The second session of the Sixtieth Congress and each succeeding session, for some unaccountable reason, have seen fit to curtail the appropriation and have only appropriated for the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks and carriers to the highest grades in the respective offices in which they are employed. Since this policy has been in force much contention and dissatisfaction has existed, and the charge has been repeatedly made that promotions of clerks and carriers to the highest grades have been made more on personal favor than on merit. It has also been stated that postmasters have often been placed in the embarrassing position of being forced to make a selection between two equally competent employees and had no other alternative unless he refused to recommend either, in which event no promotion whatever would be made in that office.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. What was the objection to striking out that 75 per cent and providing for the promotion of clerks in firstclass offices?

Mr. ALLEN. In answer to the gentleman I will say that, in the judgment of the committee, 75 per cent could substantially take care of every case.

Mr. COOPER. Substantially. That is the trouble, exactly. There may be some who are meritorlous in some offices that would not get any promotions. The word "meritorious" is the source of the argument. If there are any employees who are discriminated against who are efficient, it ought not to be in the law.

Mr. ALLEN. I will say to the gentleman that all who earn it by efficiency will be promoted.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] suppose that among the 75 per cent there will be none in the way of promotion?

Mr. FINLEY. Assuming that the Post Office Department could expend this money provided for the promotion of clerks, it would only provide for the promotion of 75 per cent, and so it would not help in any way if we struck this provision out. This provision here is simply an expression coming from the

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not suggest striking out the provision. I had in mind simply striking out the words "75 per cent."

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman there is only money enough carried in here—
Mr. COOPER. The United States, instead of discriminating, is very well able to promote the 75 per cent necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

ALLEN] has again expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. I will take into consideration the records of efficiency. You will find the practical working out of this proposition of 75 per cent will take care of any men—

Mr. COOPER. Is it possible under the working of the law, the proposition of the law, at the proposition would not the sec. 75.

not going into details—as this provision would not—to see 75 per cent promoted without any promotions at all in certain offices where they were entitled to it?

In other words, could certain offices use up 75 per cent and other offices, where there were clerks worthy of promotion, go

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] that that is a matter of administration by the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Coopen] and to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Fin-LEY] to answer his question.

Mr. FINLEY. I say that is a matter of administration in the department, and if that were brought about in a particular case, that would be a matter of discrimination in that particu-

Mr. COOPER. Suppose there were three clerks in an office and two of them were promoted under this provision and the other clerk was entitled to it, but your 75 per cent was exhausted. That one man, who was as worthy of promotion as the other two, would be left.

Mr. FINLEY. I would say to the gentleman that this money is not expended among individual or specific post offices, but goes to the whole force of clerks and carriers throughout the country. That case that the gentleman cites could not very well happen.

Mr. COOPER. It could very well use up the 75 per cent. do not see why, in a Government so rich as the Government of the United States, if you are going to make a thing absolutely fair, there should be a possibility of clerks having a service record entitling them to this additional pay not receiving it because of the use of the words in the law of "75 per cent." The Treasury is not so poor that we should put that in the law, and there is no reason why all clerks who are worthy of receiving promotion should not receive it.

Mr. FINLEY. The idea is that to promote 75 per cent would promote all the efficient clerks and carriers. If the gentleman makes that admission, then it is simply a matter of administration to distribute this fund.

Mr. COOPER. I should hate to have it stated as a matter of law and have it admitted into the law that we believe that 25 per cent of the employees in the postal service are inefficient. On the face of it, it looks bad. We should not assume that. We are rich enough to pay for all those who are entitled to promotion.

I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have a bill pending before the committee now, providing for automatic promotion to these two grades. I hope the gentleman will vote for that bill. That will settle any question that may hereafter come up on this score.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BERGER. For a question only. Would not an amendment striking out the words "75 per cent" and inserting instead the words "all efficient clerks," in lines 20 and 22, do what the gentleman's bill intends to do, and do what my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] and I would like to see

Mr. ALLEN. I will say to the gentleman that if in the practical working it does not substantially promote all the clerks, then in the next appropriation bill I will vote for enough to take care of it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ALLEN. With pleasure.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that that 75 per cent is reasonably satisfactory to the clerks themselves and satisfactory to the Post Office Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and I will agree not to yield any more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] in answer to his question, Yes; it is satisfactory; but my bill for automatic promotions is still more satisfactory. Now I will take up the discussion where I left off.

This has had a tendency to create discord among the employees as well as suspicion in their minds regarding the good faith of the postmaster, and has had a tendency to destroy discipline, as can be judged by those who have had experience in dealing with large bodies of men. It was no doubt the intention of Congress when the law was passed to have six grades of clerks and carriers, as it provided for these grades and also provided as to how promotions should be made to each grade.

centage of the men to the highest grades, and why Congress has pursued the policy of only making provisions for the promotion of 50 per cent of those who would be eligible is beyond my comprehension. When we take into consideration the diffi-culties that letter carriers and postal clerks labor under before they can possibly reach the highest grades in their respective offices, I believe that every Member of this House will agree with me that it is a grave injustice to deprive them of a well-earned promotion provided for by law simply because Congress fails to make the required appropriation for vitalizing the law and putting it into practical effect.

There are no drones among the letter carriers and clerks in the post offices, for the reason that the lazy and inefficient men are weeded out long before they receive a regular appointment. The apprenticeship served by substitute letter carriers varies from two to six years, and the service is so exacting that it is only the self-sacrificing man who looks forward to making a life work of the postal service and is willing to put up with all sorts of hardship and inconvenience who will stay in the service until he receives a regular appointment. After eking out a precarious existence for several years and possibly becoming involved in debt, he is appointed to a regular position at munificent salary of $600 per annum, or $50 per month. serving one full year in this grade, if his record for faithfulness and efficiency warrants it, he is recommended by his post-master for promotion to the second grade.

And so it goes from year to year until he reaches the fourth grade in second-class offices and the fifth grade in first-class offices, when his automatic promotion ceases, no matter what his standard of faithfulness and efficiency might be. How long does it take a man to reach these highest grades? If he serves three years as a substitute it will be eight years from the time that he entered the service before it would be possible for him to be eligible for promotion to the sixth grade. Under these conditions is it right, is it fair, or is it just to deprive him of that which the law says should be his, simply through the shortsighted policy of not making sufficient appropriations to provide for his promotion? I have a bill now pending before the committee which, if favorably reported and enacted into law, will make these promotions to the highest grades automatic, and I believe in all fairness that they should be. If the bill becomes a law it will do away with all friction and will still leave with the department the right to refuse to an inefficient or careless employee a promotion until he earns it. The recommendation of the committee in the bill now under consideration will greatly relieve the present condition, as specific authorization is made for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks and carriers to the highest grades, which, added to the normal changes caused by deaths, resignations, and reductions, will, I believe, admit of the promotion of all the employees who earn their promotions and are recommended by their postmasters. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this section by striking out the words "75 per cent," in line 20, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "all efficient clerks," and by striking out the words "75 per cent of the clerks," in line 22, and inserting the words "all efficient clerks" instead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers and amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 20, strike out the words "75 per cent of the clerks" and insert in lieu thereof "all efficient clerks."

Page 11, line 22, strike out the words "75 per cent of the clerks" and insert in lieu thereof "all efficient clerks."

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly necessary to make a long speech in support of this amendment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Borland] made a very good speech in its favor. So did the gentleman from Ohio. They all agree that every efficient clerk ought to have a chance to earn $1,200. That is little enough nowadays, with the cost of living having gone up over 40 per cent in 10 years. It is almost impossible to support a family decently in a town like Chicago, Milwaukee, Washington, or St. Louis on $1,200 a year. Under present conditions every one of these poor clerks is afraid of losing his position if he does not please the postmaster; or if he is not afraid of losing his position, he is at least afraid holding opinions which might offend the superintendent or the postmaster, because if he does he will never get into the $1,200 class. These clerks are afraid to say that they are Democrats in some places, and in most places they would not dare to openly admit that they are Socialists. They are afraid of giving offense.

However, my amendment is not dictated by party considerations. None of us wants to take the manhood away from the em-There is no mention in the law of the promotion of any per- | ployees of the Government. My amendment should be passed simply as a question of justice. Give every clerk a chance to get into the class to which he is entitled by virtue of the examinations he has passed and by virtue of the efficient service he has rendered to the Government, after he has served the number of years required by law.

It has been stated here that the provision promoting 75 per cent will take care of all of the efficient clerks. If that is the case, then let us acknowledge that one-fourth of our postal clerks are inefficient. I do not believe, however, that such is the case. I believe that we are doing the postal clerks a great injustice and that it is really disgraceful for us to tell the world that we believe 25 per cent of our postal employees are inefficient. But this is what we are practically telling the world if we accept this section of the bill as it is before us. And if we believe that only 75 per cent of the clerks are efficient, we should make provisions to discharge the other 25 per cent.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BERGER. Yes. Mr. MURDOCK. As As I remember the history of this item, it was this: The $1,200 grade was created above all other grades as a special grade, and the idea first was to promote 50 per cent as a special recognition of unusual talent. In that connection I should like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of the creation of a $1,300 grade, with a provision for the promotion of 50 or 75 per cent.

Mr. BERGER. I am more in favor of the creation of a $1,800 grade than a $1,300 grade, if the salary is to recognize unusual talent.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would the gentleman in all instances have 100 per cent get up into the extraordinary grade?

Mr. BERGER. No. I think a $1,200 salary is not a salary for an extraordinary grade of ability.

Mr. MURDOCK. That was the purpose of creating it in the beginning

Mr. BERGER. Then, I am sorry for the men who created it. A person should not be required to have unusual talent or extraordinary ability in order to earn $1,200 a year from our Government. Divided into 52 weeks, it means a wage of about $23 per week, which is less pay than is received by the typesetters in printing offices in large cities. And these printers do not have to pass any civil service examination either. To make a long story short

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the gentleman consider the language in the bill more definite than that in his amendment? requires the promotion of 75 per cent, while the language of the gentleman's amendment would leave it in the discretion of the postmaster, and he might promote only 50 per cent. If it is left as a matter of efficiency, it is left to his judgment.

Mr. BERGER. But I used the words "all efficient clerks." Mr. ALLEN. Who will determine that?

Mr. BERGER. Of course, the superintendent, who does that now. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, supposing there are 100 clerks in a certain post office, let us say in Chicago or St. Louis, who are efficient, under the provisions of this bill the postmaster can not promote more than 75 of them, while if you accept my amendment the postmaster will promote the entire 100 per cent.

Mr. ALLEN. If I thought he would do so, I would favor that amendment. I think the bill I have introduced in the House should pass, which provides for automatic promotions to the $1,200 class. That would take care of this situation; but to use the language of the gentleman's amendment will defeat the very purpose he seeks to accomplish.

Mr. BERGER. Well, I shall vote for the gentleman's bill when it comes up. Will the gentleman vote for my amendment

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether, theoretically, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger] would promote more or less than theoretically the provision in the bill, but practically neither one of them will promote anybody. The provisions in the bill with reference to promotion are not contained in that paragraph. That is inserted to please somebody's fancy. The bill carries specifically the number of clerks of the different classes, and the number can not be increased under this provision of the bill a single clerk. If you should put a provision in here to promote all of them, it would not promote any more, because the number in each class is fixed in the bill. Those items have been passed over and nobody has proposed to amend them; nor will there be under the bill 75 per cent of the clerks promoted.

The total number of clerks and other employees of that class carried by this bill is 35,812. At the salaries named the total amount would be $39,820,800. But the bill carries $2,718,000 less of appropriation, so that while nominally it proposes to promote by increasing the number in each grade they have proposed to appropriate $2,718,000 less than enough to pay the clerks.

Now, it has always been customary to appropriate a smaller sum than the total amount would be as authorized by the bill, on the assumption that all of the clerks will not serve in the grades named for the full year. Last year the difference be-tween the total amount authorized and the total amount carried was $1,202,500, while this year it is $1,942,550, cutting off this year in this bill $739,750 more than was cut off last year.

And yet you talk about automatic promotions of 75 per cent. That is pure fancy; that is pure theory. You provide in the bill the number of clerks in each class, but you do not provide the money with which to pay them; and the Post Office Department is regulated first by the number of clerks in each class, and seemed by the appropriations which are made with which and second by the appropriations which are made with which they may be paid.

Now, this particular item in the bill is one put there to make the clerks think that 75 per cent of them will be promoted; but no one will claim that any clerk will be promoted under that specific item because it does not provide for promotion, and the number of clerks authorized will not authorize the number of promotions that is proposed here.
Mr. BERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, am I to understand that the great Democratic Party is playing a game of buncombe?

I do not claim that at all.

Mr. BERGER. Offering 75 per cent of promotions on the one hand and fixing the number of clerks so that they can not be promoted on the other is playing a game of buncombe.
[The time of Mr. Mann having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. MANN. I do not charge that this is for buncombe at all. I have no doubt whatever that the committee would desire to have 75 per cent of these clerks promoted. When this bill was before the House last year I called attention to the fact then that, although there was a shortage of $1,200,000 between the amount appropriated and authorized, 50 per cent of the clerks could not have promotion because the money was not provided. not provided. It is much more true now, when the shortage is seven or eight hundred thousand dollars more in this bill than in the bill of last year.

In my judgment the present method of promotion is not entirely satisfactory. But it is fair to say that when the bill was passed two years ago classifying the clerks no one then claimed that all of the clerks should be promoted from the eleven hundred to the twelve hundred dollar class in large offices, or from the ten hundred to the eleven hundred dollar class in small

When the first appropriation bill came before the House after that classification was adopted, myself, Mr. Bennet of New York, and several other gentlemen representing the large cities went before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, including its then chairman, who, I think, was Mr. Overstreet, and endeavored to make an arrangement of some kind by which the bill would carry some promotion; and we finally agreed with him that upon these items of the bill we would stand with him if the bill carried additional clerks enough to make 50 per cent of promotions. And that custom has been followed since. I am glad that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads puts itself on record, theoretically, in favor of making promotions of 75 per cent, although if any clerk who has served long enough in these offices to arrive at the point where he could have a promotion and is not efficient enough to receive it, he ought to be dismissed from the service.

There is no escape from the constant charge now being made by employees that they are discriminated against for personal reasons-that favoritism is displayed. I doubt whether that often occurs, but I do believe that these clerks ought to have an automatic promotion up to a certain point, and then let it be understood that beyond that there is no promotion for the class as a whole.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] intentionally misrepresents the facts in this case, but if he will examine the RECORD he will find that there was appropriated for the current year $35,900,000 to meet this service, and he will find in the estimates for the year beginning on the 1st of July next the amount recommended by the department to be $37,700,000, an increase of $1,800,000. Then, if he will examine the pending bill, he will find that we have provided not that there be $43,700,000, but $43,878,250. We have provided $178,250 more than was asked for by the department, and this $178,250 is for the purpose of providing for this additional service.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, that is the question I wish to ask, whether the provision which enables the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks is taken care of in the total?

Mr. LLOYD. It is. Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is, if these 75 per cent of promotions are made, the total is sufficient to pay the increased salary?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman surely does not dispute the figures that I gave?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; we dispute the figures.

Mr. MANN. In what respect are any of the figures that I gave incorrect?

Mr. ALLEN. We added to the amount.
Mr. MANN. I gave the amount authorized and the amount appropriated and gave the difference between them, which was

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I read from the RECORD. The amount appropriated for the current year-$35,900,000-and the amount recommended by the department is $37,700,000, $1,800,000 more than is appropriated for the current year. In addition to that this committee-has added to the estimates of the department $178,250, in order to provide for these promotions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there never has been a Post Office appropriation bill since I have been in Congress, I think, where the amount carried in the bill was not greater than the estimates. That is the case here. It has always been the case, but the fact still remains that the clerks specifically authorized by this bill, with the salaries which they would receive under the bill, would require $39,820,800, while the appropriation carried in the bill is $2,718,000 less than that amount, a greater spread between the two than ever was carried in any bill before.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Berger) there were—ayes 33, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 22, strike out the words "75 per cent of the clerks" and insert in lieu thereof the words "all efficient clerks."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk rend as follows:

In all, $37.878.250.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 25, after the word "dollars," insert the following:
"Provided, That the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum, and the assignment of the several grades of compensation to the various offices shall be made, so far as practicable, in proportion to the amount of business transacted through such offices and the respective divisions thereof."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. That amendment has been ruled out of the Post Office appropriation bill for a good many years. The proposition is, and the effect of it is, that although you authorize, as I have just explained to the committee, clerks to the amount of $39,820,000, and although the law provides for automatic promotions up to ten and eleven hundred dollars in the different offices, this amendment is that the amount appropriated, which is sufficient to pay all these clerks, must not be exceeded.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the law provides that the clerks shall be automatically promoted in certain offices up to $1,100. The amendment offered by the gentleman provides that the amount of appropriation must not be exceeded, although that may prevent the automatic promotion. In other words, if the amendment of the gentleman prevails, there can be no deficiency, although the automatic promotion may create a deficiency under existing law. I call attention to the fact that last year these items were in the bill reported from the committee. I made the point of order, and they went out. The year before that they were in the bill reported by the committee. I made the point of order, and they went out. The very purpose-and the department would like to have them in, I suspect-but the very purpose of putting the amendment in the bill is to prevent the automatic promotion creating a deficiency, if it would create it, by promoting these clerks in accordance with the law, and this proposition to change the law is not covered, I understand, by the Holman rule, and is clearly otherwise subject to the point

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the rule has been on the subject heretofore, but the gentleman is correct, however, in his suggestion that the department desires this limitation upon this appropriation, and it may properly be so treated, in my opinion. This promotion is provided for out of the fund provided for it. It is a proper thing we shall not create a deficiency in this item or any other item. promotion itself depends upon the sufficiency of this appropriation, and the amendment is intended for the purpose of limiting it to this appropriation, and I think it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk rend as follows:

Amend, page 11, lines 24 and 25, by striking out the words "in all, $37,878,250" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In all, $37,878,000: Provided, That hereafter post offices shall not be open on Sundays for the purpose of delivering mail to the public."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to have the point of order reserved. I am willing for the gentleman to make the point of order on the amendment, and if he does

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. I wish to be heard on the point of order. Mr. Chairman, Rule XXI provides, among other things:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendments thereto changing existing law he in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill

The amendment which I have offered proposes to reduce the amount of the appropriation by the sum of $250. [Laughter.] And that reduction is warranted by the fact that the closing of these post offices for the delivery of the mail on Sunday would be a saving much in excess of $250 and would leave an additional amount, therefore, for the promotion of deserving clerks in these different offices. But on the point of order I have offered an amendment directly within the provisions of the Holman rule of a reduction of the amount carried in the bill. and anyone can see that the closing of post offices for the delivery of mail on Sunday will actually reduce the expenditures of the Post Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman about his amendment; let him have it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I want to make public acknowledgment to the gentleman from Tennessee in charge of the bill for agreeing to the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Saunders having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. 18956) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DU PONT, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. FOSTER as the conferees on the part of the

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. Curtis, Mr. Warnen, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 244. An act extending the operation of the act of June 10, 1910, to coal lands in Alabama; and

S. 5059. An act granting school lands to the State of Louisiana.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers, 10, at $1,200 dollars each; 4, at $1,100 each; 3, at $1,000 each; and 28, at $900 each; in all, $44,600.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an inquiry. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of members of the committee here if they have taken into consideration whether the salaries provided for here for printers and mechanics, skilled laborers, and so forth, are the prevailing wages in the localities usually paid by private concerns?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The number and the amount is the same as fixed by law heretofore.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is not the question with me. Is this the same that is paid by private concerns?" Is this the prevailing scale of wages?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You mean whether we considered the question of an increase or not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to ask if these are the prevailing wages for work of that nature done in these are the pr wages for work of that nature done in these localities? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think so; better, perhaps.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It seems to me printers get more than $25

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In some places they do not begin to get that

Mr. BUCHANAN. If I may be permitted, I am speaking of the prevailing scale of wages. It is true that some printers who are not efficient printers work in positions for less than the regular scale of wages, but I am talking about the recognized prevailing scale of wages which is usually established by the union.

Mr. COOPER. Are all of these supposed to be employed in the city of Washington?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; throughout the whole country. Mr. COOPER. Where else has the United States a printing establishment?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In almost every first-class post office there is a little printing establishment.

Mr. COOPER. What is the difference in the service rendered between those employed at $1,000 each and those employed at $900 each?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know of the details of the service performed by these men. I could not tell you exactly the service of each man; but the character of service usually performed in those offices is that for which the Post Office Department provides compensation, giving to one man according to his service and capacity more than another.

Mr. COOPER. It says, "For compensation to printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers," and so forth?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There is no change, I will say, in this matter, so far as I recollect.

Mr. COOPER. I want to say this to the gentleman-that when I asked the question a number of gentlemen in undertone aid that they are employed in various cities of the country. There are not many employed in various cities, because there are 3 at $1,000, and there are 10 at $1,200 and 4 at $1,100, and that would not cover a great many cities throughout the Republic of the United States.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I thought you were on the question of the compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers.

Mr. COOPER. This was the compensation to printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers; 10 at $1,200; 4 at $1,100; 3 at $1,000 each; and 28 at $900 each. I do not think that covers an extensive portion of the United States-from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. That is the section we have under discussion. What is the difference in the services rendered by the three classes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Buchanan] has expired.
Mr. COOPER, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know whether it would be in order to increase this compensation now. It seems the Government should pay above the regular wage scales in localities where they are employing men. If I find this does not do that I shall have to introduce a bill to that effect later on, because I believe the Government of the United States should pay more, and not less, than the prevailing wage scale and take the lead in bettering the conditions of the working people in this country, who seem to be suffering from the present high prices.

Mr. DYER. Why does not the gentleman present his amendment to this provision now and let us vote on it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not it ready, and besides, I do not believe it would be in order at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 100, at $800 each; 700, at $700 each; and 600, at $600 each; in all, $900,000. And the appointment and assignment of watchmen, messengers, and laborers bereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum.

Mr. DYER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. One provision of this section provides that 600 men shall receive a salary of $600 cach. Does that mean per annum?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I will ask the chairman if he thinks that is enough money to pay to a man, namely, $600 a year, $50 a month, out of which he must pay his rent, his grocery bills, and educate his children, and maintain a home?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is a provision for the ordinary laborer. It has been recommended by the department. It has been in the law for quite a while. I would be glad to see the laborers get $2 a day.

Mr. DYER. Why does not the gentleman provide for that in

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We do not provide for it in the bill because the law makes provision for this proposition. It would be subject to a point of order if I did offer it.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] permit me to ask the chairman of the committee a question right there? How long has this class of labor been getting this

Mr. MURDOCK. There formerly was a class of laborer that we gave $500 a year, but that was abolished. I believed $600 for labor is too small.

Mr. COOPER. I believe the provision of $600 is too low in these times

Mr. MURDOCK. These places of laborers are filled in many cases by men who have grown old in some other part of the postal service, who are placed on the rolls as laborers and watchmen. As to messengers, I do not know. The old item covered the $500 class, and we abolished that, and I am completely in sympathy with the gentleman in his wish to strike out the $600 grade and make it $700 or $800, because of the circumstances that laborers and watchmen in every other part of the Government get more than the watchmen in the postal serv-Why the discrimination I can not find out.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, laborers and watchmen in the Post Office Department receive higher pay than they do in the Treasury Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is brought out in the hearing that the reverse is true.

Mr. MANN. The hearings are wrong. We increased the pay of laborers and janitors in the Post Office Department a year or two ago

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; we abolished the lower grade.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it means an increase. The same class in the Treasury Department, in charge of the Treasury Building, are paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, where they can not be increased.

In Chicago, working side by side in the same building, engaged on the same work practically, the men charged to the Treasury Department are receiving smaller pay than is carried here for the Post Office Department.

Mr. BERGER. That is wrong, but it does not make anything else right.

Two wrongs do not make one right.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, it can not be disputed that it is impossible for a man to live and try to take care of a family upon $50 a month in a city like Chicago or New York or St. Louis or any of these places where any of these men have to

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. This appropriation provides for the watchmen at the various public buildings in the United States.

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. Not only those in the large cities, but also those in the small towns; wherever they have city delivery, or wherever they have a public building, they have one of these watchmen, and the lowest salary paid to these is $600. The $600 watchmen, as I understand it, are usually assigned to the smaller towns and not to the stand it. smaller towns, and not to the cities; but those in the cities are usually the $900 and $800 and $700 men.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is mistaken, because I know there are some in St. Louis who get only that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, at this time I want to submit a few observations regarding the establishment of a general parcel post.

There is no reason in the world why the people of the United States should be deprived of the advantages of this benign legislation for a general parcel post, that will bring producers and consumers in closer touch and be of inestimable benefit to all the people, especially those who dwell in the large cities and those who live in the producing sections of the country. It has been adopted in every European country, and it ought to be adopted We have either made or are making postal conventions with the countries of the world, by which their citizens can send through the mails to any part of the United States packages weighing 11 pounds at the universal postal rate, and the people of the United States are prohibited from doing the same thing because of our failure to enact a similar postal parcels law. It is a great injustice to the taxpayers of this country. It is a discrimination in favor of the foreigner against the citizen of the United States which is repugnant to my sense of justice. I am opposed to this inequality, and in order to obviate it I introduced long ago a bill for a general parcel post. The Postal Progress League has indorsed it, and the representatives of over 10,-000,000 taxpayers of this country appeared before the committee and urged its enactment. Why should the bill sleep in com-

The time is now at hand for Congress to heed the insistent demand of the people for a general parcel post along the lines of my bill, the express companies and others to the contrary notwithstanding. The citizens of the United States are certainly entitled to utilize the advantages of their own post-office system the same as the people in Europe now do, and they would gladly do so if the Congress would only enact a law.

The demand for a parcel post is growing more insistent. Popular sentiment has now crystallized into a genuine desire for legislation in favor of a general parcel post throughout the country. I believe the people favor it, and I feel confident its establishment will be of inestimable benefit and incalculable advantage to all concerned. The post office is one of the oldest of governmental institutions, an agency established by the earliest civilizations, and the only limit upon the service should be the capacity of existing transport machinery.

A general parcel post once established, with reasonable rates, regardless of distance, regardless of the character of the matter transported, and regardless of the volume of the patron's business, is eminently fitted for great service to the people. That it should be extended over the entire field of postal transportation is absolutely certain; and the people will duly appreciate the aid of those who assist in its extension and development.

As far back as 1837, Rowland Hill, of England, promulgated to the world the law that once a public transport service is in operation the cost of its use is regardless the distance traversed upon the moving machinery by any unit of traffic within its capacity, and upon this law he established the English pennyletter post of 1839. The idea of charging higher postage on a letter or a parcel on account of the greater distance it travels is an absurdity.

The parcel-post provision in this Post Office appropriation bill is not satisfactory to the people and to the advocates of genuine parcel-post legislation. When the matter is reached for consideration I shall move as an amendment the terms of my bill, which are as follows: Strike out section 8 of the pending Post Office appropriation bill and insert the following:

Office appropriation bill and insert the following:

That the common weight limit of the domestic postal service of the United States is hereby increased to 11 pounds, the common limit of the Universal Postal Union, and that in the general business of the post office the 1-cent-an-ounce rate on general merchandise—fourth-class mail matter—be, and is hereby, reduced to the third-class rate, 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof.

That the rate on local letters or sealed parcels posted for delivery within the free-delivery services is hereby determined at 2 cents on parcels up to 4 ounces, 1 cent on each additional 2 ounces; at nondelivery offices, 1 cent for each 2 ounces.

That all mail matter collected and delivered within the different rural routes of the United States is hereby determined to be in one class, with rates, door to door, between the different houses and places of business and the post office or post offices on each route, as follows: On parcels up to one twenty-fourth of a cubic foot, or 1 by 6 by 12 inches in dimensions and up to 1 pound in weight, 1 cent; on larger parcels up to one-half a cubic foot, or 6 by 12 by 12 inches in dimensions and up to 11 pounds in weight, 5 cents; on larger parcels up to 1 cubic foot, 6 by 12 by 24 inches in dimensions and up to 25 pounds in weight, 10 cents. No parcel shall be over 6 feet in length, and in no case shall a carrier be obliged to transport a load of over 500 pounds.

That on all unregistered prepald mail matter without declared value an indemnity up to $10 shall be paid by the Post Office Department for such actual loss or damage as may occur through the fault of the postal service, and this without extra charge. Certificates of posting shall be provided on demand. On registered parcels of declared value, and on which the fee for registration, insurance, and postage has been duly prepaid, the Post Office Department shall pay the full value of any direct loss or damage that may occur through the fault of the postal service. The fees for insurance and registration shall be as follows: For registration and insurance up to $50, 10 cents; for each additional $50, 2 cents. No claim for compensation will be admitted if not presented within one year after the parcel is posted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that provision will give the people immediately a genuine general parcel post; will give them what they want and what they expect; and I trust it will be adopted by the Members of this House.

In this connection I want to say that I appeared this morning before the Committee on Rules in favor of a rule that will make this legislation for a general parcel post germane to this bill and not subject to a point of order under our rules. I hope the Committee on Rules will act favorably on the proposition, and thus give the Members of the House an opportunity to vote for or against legislation for a general parcel post.

Some real friends of the general parcel-post legislation have requested me to submit another amendment to section 8 of the Post Office appropriation bill in case the former amendment fails to be adopted. It is as follows:

fails to be adopted. It is as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 16 to 25, inclusive, on page 35, and by striking out lines 1 to 17, on page 36, and by striking out all of line 18, page 36, being the words "up to and including a total of 11 pounds," and by substituting the following:

"Sec. S. That hereafter the postage rates on mail matter of the fourth class, except as hereinafter provided, shall be as follows: One cent per onnee or fraction thereof on all matter of such class weighing not to exceed 8 ounces, and on such matter weighting in excess of 8 ounces, 8 cents and 2 cents additional for each 4 ounces or fraction thereof in excess of 8 ounces, and that the weight limit of mail matter of the fourth class be 7 pounds after January 1, 1913, and 11 pounds after June 30, 1913, except as hereinafter provided:

"That hereafter the postage rates on mail matter of the fourth class, delivered to any post office or branch post office where the haul thereof does not exceed 50 miles, shall be as follows: Five cents for 1 pound or fraction thereof, and for this service no package to weigh in excess of 11 pounds. For the purposes of this service each rural mail route shall be considered a post office for any point on such route.

"That the word 'packet' wherever used in laws relating to the postal service means all matter of every class which is by law made mailable."

Mr. Chairman, this substitute will give the people of the country

Mr. Chairman, this substitute will give the people of the country a real parcel post, and would add approximately $100,000 daily to the postal revenues, or, say, $40,000,000 yearly, and while at rates lower than provided in the pending bill such rates are lower than the average express rates on similar packages carried by express. Under the provisions of the substitute the post office would be of greater service, reaching, as the mails do, to places not reached by express service.

This substitute will inaugurate immediately a parcel post confined to a 50-mile haul. This will cover all rural service and most suburban services, and at same rates provided in the bill for rural-route service. This provision will disillusion the local retailer of his bugaboo of mail-order houses using the mails to his detriment

This substitute will enforce the present 4-pound parcel-post service at a rate of 12 cents for the first pound, and 8 cents for each additional pound; a safe rate; slightly higher than the "reciprocity treaty" between the American Express Co. and Great Britain, whereby the American Express Co. contracts to deliver British parcels from New York City to any point in the United States for 36 cents for a parcel not exceeding 3 pounds in weight; 48 cents for parcels from 3 to 7 pounds in weight; and 60 cents for parcels from 7 to 11 pounds in weight.

In order not to excessively burden the facilities of the Post Office Department, the substitute provides for an increase in weight in the general service to 7 pounds January 1, 1913, and 11 pounds July 1, 1913.

The increase in business will thus come on gradually at intervals of six months.

The substitute will further put all publications using the mails on an equal footing, so that all publications, great or small, would pay exactly the same for the out-of-town transportation of their issues, a thing which they do not now do; and this one feature will add $5,000,000 annually to the postal revenues on this class of matter.

Recent investigations of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that 34 per cent of express business is packages weighing 11 pounds and under; that the average weight is 4.4 pounds per package, and that the number of said packages approximates 100,000,000 yearly, carried at an average rate of about 9 cents per pound; that on packages now mailable, 4 pounds and under, the average express rate is 13.20 cents per pound, such rate undoubtedly being maintained on account of the present postage rate of 16 cents per pound.

These investigations further show the average haul of the express is about 200 miles, so on small-package business the 50-mile distant postage rate will meet the needs of much the greater portion of the community in the transportation of their small parcels.

Thirty-three years ago we had a postage rate of 8 cents per pound on this class of matter. The pending bill proposes 12 cents a pound; the substitute gets back to near 8 cents a pound on the general service.

As was said in the unanimous report of the Post Office Committee in 1844:

The recent discovery that a power which has been exercised (by the Government) from its infancy without question and without doubt may be violated with impunity renders further legislation necessary to protect the public service, and presents a question no less momentous than this: Whether the Constitution and laws of the country or a law-less combination of refractory individuals shall triumph?

The provisions of this substitute, fair, reasonable, and just as they are, are such that I think all friends of the post office can and will unite to make them a law.

Mr. Chairman, just a few words in conclusion. propositions to the careful consideration of the Members of this House, and at the proper time shall ask for a vote. The neglect of the United States Government to establish a general parcel post has so far limited the easy exchange of commodities and merchandise between the producer and the consumer that it is making our Government appear away behind the times as compared with foreign nations, such, for instance, as England, France, and Germany. It is a fact to-day that an American in Europe can send home by mail to any part of the United States a parcel weighing two and one-half times more than the United States limit for about one-third less in cost than the present In other words, the world postal union package unit is 11 pounds to the parcel, at the rate of 12 cents per pound, whereas the United States unit is only 4 pounds to the package and at a cost of 16 cents to the pound. The parcelpost rate in the United States prior to 1874 was 8 cents per pound for a package limited to a weight of 4 pounds. After that the rate was doubled, but the weight remained the same. Who did this? For whose benefit was it done? Look up the records and judge for yourself. Since 1874 the cost of transportation has greatly decreased. The question is, Why should not the people be given the benefit of this decrease by the establishment of a uniform low postal rate for parcels that will encourage the use of the post office as a medium of exchange of commodities between producer and consumer and thus greatly facilitate trade and lessen the cost of the necessaries of life?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], how long these employees have been receiving $600 each-those provided for in lines 8 and 9?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand for the last few years

Mr. FINLEY. They were increased some two or three years ago from $500 to $600, the lower grade.

Mr. COOPER. From one starvation wage to another. Mr. KENDALL. That simply meant the abolishment of the lower grade, and the employees took the upper grade?

Mr. COOPER. Yes. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, there has been an average increase in the cost of living generally, since these wages were established, of 40 per cent; some cities more, for certain vital necessities of life; and the United States Government, incomparably the richest employer the world has ever seen, proposes to have its employees in such cities as Chicago, St. Louis, New York, and elsewhere work for $600 a year and out of that sum pay for their house rent and clothing and physician's bills and everything else.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any amendment to offer?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; I have.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will offer an amendment.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to say this to the gentleman: The committee does not make new law. It is against the law to make it. We put these items in here in accordance with the existing law.

Mr. COOPER. But you could suggest amendments to existing law.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, raising the limit to $720, which I send to the Clerk's

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned personally, I would be glad to amend the law. But I do not want gentlemen to talk about increasing these matters for the purpose of talking, merely.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] says he is about to offer an amendment increasing that from $600 to $720.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. COOPER. I think it should be a living wage. United States Government can afford to pay $70 a month to people who live in the city of Chicago and the city of St. Louis, and enable them to pay their rent and clothing bills and fuel bills, which they are obliged to pay in those large cities. That will not represent the increase in the cost of living since the wages were first established. It does not represent a 40 per cent increase over what these wages were when first established. It does not begin to. These wages have been $600 and $700 for many years.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No. The statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] is that it is only a few years since this has been raised.

Mr. COOPER. What was it before?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. COOPER. That has been abolished. The others have been receiving $600 or more. That is not a living wage to-day in the city of Chicago to a man who wants to live as he should live in this day and generation. Particularly that is not a wage that ought to be paid by the richest Government the world has ever seen-incomparably the richest Government.

Mr. MURDOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 12, strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirteen."

Mr. FINLEY. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order?

Mr. FINLEY. It changes existing law.

Mr. MANN. I submit that there is no change of existing law. There is no law fixing the number of these employees.

Mr. FINLEY. This is an amendment to change the compen-

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; this is not an amendment to change the compensation at all. It is an amendment to change the number of employees employed at a salary of $700 each, and if this amendment is subject to a point of order, then every line in this bill is subject to a point of order. How about these clerks that we have just passed over? There is not a single item that contains the same number as are contained in the current law. The number of post-office clerks is increased, and necessarily increased.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not understand that it was simply the number of clerks that the gentleman from South Carolina was objecting to, but the compensation. Let us have the amendment reported.

Mr. MANN. I can not tell what the gentleman from South Carolina is objecting to, but the amendment which the gentleman from Kansas offers is to strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "thirteen," relating to the number of employees, and that is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; that would not be. Mr. FINLEY. I understood that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas proposed to raise the compensation from $700 to $800.

All he proposed was to increase the number, and Mr. MANN. we have a right to increase the number as the service increases.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. MANN. Let us have the point of order passed on.
Mr. FINLEY. I misunderstood the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, Mr. KENDALL. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the words "and 600 at $600 each" ought to be stricken out of the

Mr. MANN. We can do that afterwards. One amendment at a time.

Mr. MURDOCK. I offer another amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. COOPER. Why not make it all one amendment? The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "and 600 at $600 each."

Mr. KENDALL. Let them be considered in connection with each other.

Mr. MURDOCK. The two amendments are to be considered in connection with each other.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better be satisfied to consider them one at a time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not care to be heard. Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the purpose of increasing the

Mr. MURDOCK. To increase their salaries. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mi The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bor-LAND] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MUR-DOCK] yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas did not resume his seat and he had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] if he desired to be heard on his amendment and he said he did not, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas has offered an amendment to increase the number of watchmen, and so forth, at $700, from 700 to 1,300?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. If that amendment prevails, is it the gentleman's intention to offer an amendment to strike out of the bill the provision carrying 600 watchmen, and so forth, at $600 each?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. So as to leave the total number the same. Mr. MURDOCK. The same number of watchmen, but to increase 600 of them $100 a year.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment is to abolish the $600 grade, and to provide for the appointment of the entire number of $600 and $700 watchmen at $700.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to say that I am in sympathy with that idea. I think the $600 grade, even for watchmen, is pretty low; but before we go into such a change as that it is desirable to look at the scale of salaries being paid to other employees in the Post Office Department as well as in Washington. We have passed over a section which provides for $600 grade of clerks, who must live, presumably, on a better scale than a watchman and come up to a higher standard of qualification.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Is it not the law that these clerks receive automatic promotion at the end of a year?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I was just going to refer to that. have provided for 1,500 clerks at not exceeding $600. These clerks and the carriers that correspond to the same grade must have served from one to three years as a substitute before they get an appointment at $600, and then they serve another year after having passed a rigid examination at $600. I have ascertained the fact to be in cities the size of Kansas City-a quarter of a million people-and from that up, that young men with the qualifications necessary to enter the Government service are not being attracted by the $600 grade for clerks and carriers; that the $600 grade is too low, whatever it may be for watchmen. I have the utmost sympathy for this amendment, but I do not believe that we ought, by a chance shot here and there, put the watchmen on another grade above the grade of men who enter into the clerical service. I do not believe that is going to improve the service in any direction at all. As the gentleman from Kansas said, a good many watchmen-and I know some of them personally-are men who have been in some capacity in the postal service or in the railway service until they have got old and a little stiff, and sometimes just at the point of the end of their usefulness, and then put in as watchmen, which is a suitable position for them to hold. The same is true of unskilled labor; their business is to push a truck loaded with mail around the different parts of large post offices, put them on the elevators, take them to the basement, put them on the wagons, and so forth.

[The time of Mr. Borland having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.1

Mr. COOPER. I suppose that the gentleman will admit that the unskilled laborer has to support a family, a wife and chil-

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose so. Mr. COOPER. Pay house rent and incidentally clothe them. Does the gentleman think he ought to ask a white man, or a to $700 instead of to $650.

black man, for that matter, the average price of living having gone up 30 to 45 or 47 per cent, to work for $600 a year in Chicago, St. Louis, or any other large city?

Mr. BORLAND. I started off by saying that I was in entire sympathy with this amendment; that I believed in the abolition of the $600 grade, but not until we have a readjustment of the postal service, because the $600 applies to clerks exactly as the gentleman says this applies to watchmen. Then I was trying to point out that there might possibly be some reason why clerks might have some requirements that put them on a higher plane than that of watchman.

Mr. COOPER. Although others may need additional compensation-I think both of them need additional compensationthere is nothing wrong in the suggestion covered by this amendment increasing the pay of the $600 employees, as proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. BORLAND. I will. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AKIN of New York. To bring this matter more vividly before the minds of Members of the House, does not the gentleman think it might be well to draw attention to the picture of my dinner pail which we had on exhibition some time ago? [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, when the postal committee charged with this duty pursues the plan that I understand they have begun upon I hope they will abolish the $600 grade in the first-class post offices for clerks and carriers and messengers and unskilled laborers, and for watch-

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. WEEKS. Originally there were four grades in the service, seven hundred, six hundred, five hundred, and four hundred dollar grades. I call this particularly to the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, because there have been increases in pay. The $700 has been increased to $800, and a large number from $500 to $600 and to $700. Several years ago—I think six or eight years ago—the $400 grade was abolished. Two years ago, without any recommendation or any request from the force, the $500 grade was abolished, and the pay was increased to $600. I do not think myself that $700 is an unreasonable rate for these men to receive. At the same time you must remember, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] called our attention to the fact, that there are men working alongside of them who are receiving less money than they are receiving to-day.

If there is to be an increase of pay of laborers in the Government service there should be some means of bringing about that increase of pay, a general raise, rather than in some particular case. There should be some general law which should apply to the increase in the rates of pay. Men employed in navy yards and arsenals as laborers are receiving less than $2 a day in Government service. These men are quite as well paid as other laborers in the Government service. At the same time I believe that $700 in large cities, where all of them are employed, is not an unreasonable rate of pay.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this section provides for compensation of watchmen, messengers, and laborers. The policy of the law has been to regard one as a higher official and to give him a higher pay than others. That has been followed. We have here 100, at $800 each; 700, at $700 each; and lowed. We have here 100, at $800 each; 700, at $700 each; and 600, at $600 each; in all, $900,000, as compensation for these men. I hardly think it is quite proper to put the compensation of the ordinary laborer around the post offices at the price that is paid for the watchmen or the messenger. They have been graded differently, the character of work is different, and the compensation ought to be different. I do not believe there ought to be a change in the classification. I believe we ought to vote down this amendment. I have favored the increase in the compensation, and I had made no point of order upon that proposition. I would suggest that instead of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas we amend the amendment so as to strike out the word "thirteen" and let the amended amendment read as follows: .

One hundred, at $840 each; 700, at $750 each-

Mr. DYER. Seven hundred and twenty is the next grade, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We are changing the amount-Seven hundred, at $750 each, and 600, at $650 each.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to accept that amendment if the gentleman would raise the last class Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the laborer is entitled to as much as the messenger.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman will remember, in the hearings the First Assistant Postmaster General said that the duties of these men are much the same. I do not think that the gentleman ought to cut the last grade to $650. gentleman's amendment is better than mine, with that exception, and I hope the gentleman will raise that to $700.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That would put them all in the

Mr. MURDOCK. No; let us make the first grade $840 and the second grade $720 and the third grade $700.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not object to that. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by making it read, "100, at $840 each; 700, at $720 each; and 600, at $700 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas as amended by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk correct all totals in the bill.

Without objection, it will be so ordered. The CHAIRMAN.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 11 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 11. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, for what purpose does the gentleman desire to return to that page?

Mr. FOWLER. For the purpose of offering an amendment. Mr. DYER. To what?
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not object. The gentleman from Illinois is a member of the committee. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 11, line 24, there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN | reading as follows:

Amend, page 11, lines 24 and 25, by striking out the words "in all, $37,878,250," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in all, $37,878,000: Provided, That hereafter post offices shall not be open on Sunday for the purpose of delivering mail to the public."

Mr. Chairman, after the words "to the public" I desire to offer this amendment, "except for one hour to be designated by the Post Office Department." Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing now pending to which the gentleman can offer his amendment. We have passed that stage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asked unanimous consent. Mr. MANN. There has been no such request put to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there was.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, we are entitled to have requests put so we can hear them.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; if the gentleman did not hear it, then it is the gentleman's fault and not the fault of the Chair. The Chair put the request of the gentleman from Illinois clearly, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] had some words with the gentleman from Illinois on the subject and then said he had no objection.

Mr. MANN. I was endeavoring to pay attention, Mr. Chair-I do not question the Chair's statement, but I certainly did not hear the request.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be; the Chair is not responsible for that.

Mr. MANN. The Chair ought to have order when he submits a request to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had very reasonably good order.

Mr. MANN. My hearing is very good.

The CHAIRMAN. So is the Chair's.
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in prefacing my few remarks

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, let us have this amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment, without objection.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have as great reverence for Sunday, the day commonly known as the Lord's day, as any man. We are commanded to keep it sacred as a day of rest and spiritual worship. I believe all men should heed this divine injunction, but to close up the post offices throughout the country all day on Sunday and deprive the public from getting the Saturday and Sunday mail, in my judgment, is a very unwise provision. Nine-tenths of the laboring people of this country are so employed during the week in making a living for themselves and their families that they do not have time to get their mail and read it until Saturday night and Sunday. If they are deprived of the privilege of getting it on Sunday it will work a hardship upon them of doubtful propriety, which I do not believe this House can afford to indorse. The rights of the people in the country are just as sacred to them as are the rights of those living in populous cities. In the rural districts the daily papers in many instances come through the post offices and are delivered on Sunday. Now, if the post office should be closed on Sunday, these people would not have an opportunity to read them until Monday. The same logic that closes the post office on Sunday would close the telephone and telegraph offices of the land on Sunday. We all know that the news on Sunday is as eagerly sought on that day as it is on any other day. It is sought by the layman in the cross-road districts the same as it is by the politician or the professional aristocrat in the most populous district of the country, and to close the mails all day on Sunday so that the public can not have access to these avenues of ordinary information and intelligence, in my opinion, is very unwise.

I would have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to closing the mails the greater part of Sunday, and I grant that they ought to be closed for the purpose of giving the people an opportunity to attend Sunday school and church, places where everybody ought to have the privilege of going on Sunday; but I grant, Mr. Chairman, that to take away from the public the right to get the newspapers on Sunday morning, and get the other mail that is important to the individual and often to the public, is, in my judgment, a very unwise course to pursue.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. In just a moment. I have had a contest in my district upon that proposition recently [laughter and applause]

Mr. KENDALL. We can not legislate for the gentleman's district.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not want you to legislate for me; I want you to legislate for the American people of this Republic. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I say I have had a test of the strength of the common people on the question of Sunday closing in one of the towns in my district recently, in which an order had been given by the First Assistant Postmaster General to close the post office entirely on Sunday. A petition was circulated requesting the office to be kept open, and 191 business may additions of that little town signed that petition to have men and citizens of that little town signed that petition to have the post office open for one hour on Sunday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for an extension of my time for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanthe cytonded for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Pow-

Mr. FOWLER. In one moment. I have agreed to yield to some Member on this side of the House presently.

Mr. Chairman, the postmaster circulated a remonstrance to this petition and he secured only 26 names. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that if you put that question to the common people of this country I have no doubt but that the result will be in the ratio 191 to 26. The people are not dreaming now and can not be fooled. They well know that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance. They are self-armed "as a strong man to run a race."

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question? Mr. FOWLER. I agreed to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the amendment just passed involve putting the mail in boxes?

Mr. FOWLER. No; it absolutely closes every avenue on earth leading to the post office on Sunday.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is to say, the man who is able to have a box can get his mail and a poor man can not get his? Is that right?

Mr. FOWLER. You may construe it that way.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am asking for information.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; and I will be glad to give you what information I may have. The amendment closes the post office all day on Sunday.

Mr. TRIBBLE. So that no mail can be delivered at the windows?

Mr. FOWLER. My amendment to that amendment provides that it can be open one hour on Sunday—an hour to be designated by the Post Office Department.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Each individual post office in the land? Mr. FOWLER. Yes. Under the rules of the Post Office Department the post offices of the country are kept open on Sunday wherever required, but now this amendment seeks by law absolutely to close them every hour in the day and shut out every man in the Republic from the post office and his

Powers]

Mr. POWERS. If I understand it, this closing of the mails on Sunday applies to all the different classes of post offices throughout the country?

Mr. FOWLER. I so understand it.

Mr. POWERS. The first, second, third, and fourth classes?

Mr. FOWLER. All of them.
Mr. POWERS. And, if strictly construed, would apply to locking the doors so that the men who have boxes could not get to their mail?

Mr. FOWLER. I so understand it.

I now desire to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

DYER].

Mr. DYER. As I understood the gentleman, he said that this change in the bill would strike at the common people. I want the gentleman to state who are the common people in this

Mr. FOWLER. The comon people of this country are the 90,000,000 people of this country

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.
Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it would not suit his purpose just as well to have the third and fourth class offices open on Sunday and let the first and second class offices close if they want to do so? The reason I make that inquiry is this: The third and fourth class offices contain a very limited number of employees, and they serve the patrons he is speaking of-

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. But the first and second-class offices contain a large number of employees who will be compelled to work on Sunday.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am individually concerned, if I wanted to be selfish for my own district, I would agree to that proposition, because there is not a first-class post office in my district. They are second, third, and fourth classes. But I want to be fair to the people in this Republic in whatever legislation I may take a part. And, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I trust that in the wisdom of this House you will pass my amendment and not close the door of the post office to every man, woman, and child in this country on Sunday. [Ap-

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, before I close I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's re-

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not intended to say a single word upon this amendment, but after what has been said I want to express my views on the proposition. If we, by this law, close during the whole day on Sunday the doors of every post office in this country, first, second, third, and fourth class, you will hear a howl of discontent going up all over the land. I believe in people going to church on Sunday; I think the day should be held sacred, and all that; but I believe further that the laboring men, the business men, and everybody else who desire to get their papers on Sunday should have the opportunity to do that between 9 and 10 o'clock Sunday morning. Only one hour on Sunday is consumed in this way. When Monday morning comes around there are a thousand and one demands upon the time, the attention, and the energies of the great mass of the people throughout the land, and to deprive the people of the opportunity of even getting the Sunday papers and reading their mail will prove to be a very unpopular proposition, at least, and in my judgment a proposition which should not be approved by the Members of this House.

So far as I am individually concerned, Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler]. The Fowler amendment provides that the postmasters throughout the country are required to keep their offices open one hour on each Sunday for the delivery of mail to the public. One hour is not much. It will not interfere with the religious observance of the postmasters nor that of the people, but will be a great convenience to a great many of them, especially people in the country who live several miles from the post office.

Mr. Mann. Mr. Chairman, I know by personal experience that one can get along all right without Sunday mail. I believe that the House will agree that I do my fair share of work in the House, but for years I have declined to receive or open mail on Sunday [applause], not from a religious standpoint, but because I thought there was one day in the week when I was entitled to be free from any requests coming through the mail. [Applause,]

If I could have my way about it, I would take my way on Sunday where no one could reach me with any kind of request, and that which I would do for myself I would do for the employees of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. You can not open the post office for delivery of mail to the public without requiring the presence of the employees of the office, not merely for one hour, but for many hours. I can see no reason why they should not have an opportunity to rest, and I can see no reason why delivery of mail should be made on Sunday any more than why dry-goods stores should keep open to sell calico on Sunday.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I just came into the Chamber, and perhaps I am laboring under a misunderstanding. The gentleman referred to the mail delivery, as I understand it, which involves the keeping of the post office open?

The amendment, which has already been agreed Mr. MANN. to, provides that post offices shall not be kept open on Sunday for the purpose of delivering mail to the public.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says he does not answer or receive letters on Sunday. Does he read the Sunday newspapers?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not see what that has to do with the question.

Mr. MONDELL. In all the country towns the people receive their newspapers through the post office.

Mr. MANN. In very few country towns do the people receive their papers on Sunday. They have their Sunday papers de-They do not do it in the gentleman's town. how papers are received in the country.

Mr. MONDELL. I know how I receive my papers better than the gentleman from Illinois does, and I know I receive them in the post office in wrappers.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman receives his Sunday papers wrapped up, he had better wait until Monday to read them. Then he can not read the Sunday papers on Sunday in that way, I take it.

We have no Sunday daily in our town. Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. MANN. Why do you not force them to publish a Sunday daily? They have not a Sunday daily there, but you want to force the post office to keep open on Sunday so that you can read the Sunday papers published elsewhere.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman lives in Illinois, and he Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman lives in Illinois, at does not care what the people in the country suffer from.

Mr. MANN. I admit with a certain degree of shame that I do more or less read the Sunday papers, and I know I would be better off if I did not. [Laughter and applause.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have three minutes more, or five if he desires it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague's time be extended five minutes.

Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this bill provides for compensatory time for all the work that is done by clerks on Sunday?

Mr. MANN. I believe it carries an item to that effect.

Mr. FOWLER. I believe my colleague says he reads the newspapers on Sunday?

To a certain extent. Mr. MANN.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman want to deprive the people in the country of the same right he claims for himself? Mr. MANN. I wish somebody would deprive me of the chance of seeing any paper on Sunday.

Mr. BUTLER. We will put an amendment on the bill.

Mr. MANN. I will not raise any point of order against it. am unwilling that the post-office employees should be kept at work on Sunday in order that somebody may have a Sunday newspaper, and everyone knows that the bulk of the Sunday newspapers do not go through the post offices.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman, further, if he has not the power within himself to restrain himself from reading the Sunday papers?

Mr. MANN. Well, I will say to the gentleman that in the main I do restrain myself on Sunday. I think I have not read a Sunday paper through in five years.

Mr. BERGER. No one ever did. Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman know of any man who has read a Sunday paper through in 5 years or 10 years?

I have no doubt my colleague has. Mr. FOWLER. I never read one through in my life.

Mr. MANN. Then my colleague ought not to be so anxious to give other people the opportunity to do it.

Mr. FOWLER. I select what I want to read. Mr. MANN. How can you tell until you see it?

Mr. FOWLER. Aye, there's the rub. I want every man to have an opportunity to tell by seeing.

Mr. MANN. They will have a chance to see the papers soon enough, and enough of them. The last thing we need to do in this country is to increase the opportunity to see the daily papers. We have them on all hands, on all sides, above us and below us, around us, and every place else,

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask one further question, if the gentleman will yield. Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask, if my amendment does not prevail, will not the gentleman's amendment discriminate in favor of the cities where newspapers are published and circulated by newsboys, and against the country papers that depend upon the post office as a channel through which to reach their subscribers?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so. I think there are very few country papers which are published with a view to delivery on Sunday

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] which has already been

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Fowler) there were—ayes 20, noes 47.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. Fowler was rejected. Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph beginning on page 11, line 26, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 11 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I object. We must

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman be getting along with this bill. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rental and purchase of canceling machines, including cost of power in rented buildings, motors, repairs to motors, and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation, $310,000: Provided, That the rental paid for any canceling machine shall not exceed $300 per annum, including repairs on said machines, and that all contracts entered into shall be let after having advertised for bids and shall be awarded on the basis of cheapness and efficiency.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what one of those canceling machines costs.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. My recollection is about $400. Mr. COOPER. Three hundred dollars rental for a year. We are paying 6 per cent on $5,000 for a machine that is worth about $400.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Some of the machines do not cost that and some cost more, but about $400 on an average.

Mr. COOPER. Is the Government of the United States obliged to pay such a high rental?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is obliged to pay it because they are patented machines and you can not buy them.

Mr. COOPER. How many kinds of canceling machines are there? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There are four or five of them. The gentleman can find that information in the hearings.

Mr. COOPER. Are these manufacturers in combination so that you can not procure them for a less sum?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. They are owned and held under patents which are still in existence, and you can not buy them at all. The department regards them as essential to the public service, and is at the mercy of the owners.

Mr. COOPER. We are paying 6 per cent on $5,000 a year for a machine that only costs $400.

Mr. MURDOCK, May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK, What would the gentleman do if he had complete control of this situation? Would be go on stamping letters by hand?

Mr. COOPER. No; but I was wondering if there was not some possible way of making a better bargain. The gentleman says there are four different makes of machines that cancel

Mr. MURDOCK. As a matter of fact, the Government is the owner of some cheap machines which do inferior service, but the higher-priced machines, the higher-speed machines, the Government is unable to buy.

NOON of Tennessee. We are at the mercy of the owners of the patents on these machines.

Mr. MANN. We made an appropriation last year of $35,000 to buy machines. Were they able to buy them?

Mr. MURDOCK. My understanding is that they have not been able to purchase them because of the excessive price of these high-speed machines.

Mr. MANN. While we pay this amount, and it looks to me as if it was an exorbitant price, yet we pay $400 a year for the use of a team that does not cost probably over $250. For a horse and a wagon to collect the mail, which would not cost probably more than $250, we pay $400 a year.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the owner keeps the team going. Mr. MANN. So the owners keep these machines going.

Mr. MURDOCK, Yes; they keep them in repair. There is no question at all but that the rental price charged for these high-speed machines is exorbitant, but how are you going to correct it?

Mr. COOPER. The fact that they keep up the machines does not look like a great hardship when they are getting $300 a year rental for a machine that is only worth $400 when

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will examine the hearings he will find a full statement of the matter there

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 23, page 14, the words "three hundred" and insert the words "two hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 23, page 14, strike out the words "three hundred" and insert the words "two hundred and aftty."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, two or three years ago-I have forgotten the exact time—we were paying a rental for these machines of $400 a year. That was for these high-speed machines that the gentleman from Wisconsin has been talking about. In that Congress the rental was reduced from $400 to $300. I notice by the testimony of the Assistant Postmaster General that we have made a saving in the buying of these machines and the contracts for renting of some $42,000.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman say in the "buying" of the machines?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think we have bought some.
Mr. COOPER. If you have bought some, why not buy all?
Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin entirely right in saying that this is an exorbitant price. I w state that there is a firm in Boston that makes possibly the best grade of these machines, but they, I think, refuse to sell the machines, but rent them to the Government. In the city of Chicago there is a firm which is called the Time Marking Machine Co., which is ready and, I think, is willing—I know they were a year or two ago, but since that time I have not paid much attention to it—ready and willing to sell to the Government a lot of these machines. I have taken a little trouble to go to the post office in Washington and examine the machines in use at that place.

I find some of these high-power machines, I do not recall the name, manufactured in Boston, and some of the machines were manufactured, I think, by this Time Marking Machine Co. in Chicago; and while there are some advantages about the Boston machine, and it is possibly a better machine than the one manufactured in Chicago, yet the machine manufactured in Chicago does good work, and I think that the Government can get all of the machines it desires from companies that are willing to rent these machine for less than $300.

Mr. COOPER. What is the cost of these machines which the gentleman saw in Chicago?

Mr. FOSTER. I think they cost about $1,000.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman say that he saw one of them in operation?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think one of them at that time was down here in the post office at Washington.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I think I can supply the information to the gentleman. Those are the time-marking machines, of Chicago.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. With a capacity of 36,000 cancellations per hour. We have 124 of them rented, at $270 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I think they could make a contract at this time for this amount of money, and I believe it is well to put this amendment on the bill, limiting the amount to $250 per year for these machines. I believe the Government can get all of the machines that it desires for that amount of money, to be used in the larger post offices of the country. I would say this to the gentleman, that in the smaller post offices, that is, post offices in cities of five to ten thousand people, the Government rents machines that are run by hand. No doubt the gentleman has seen them. I think we pay something like $90 a year rental for quite a lot of those machines. The gentleman is probably familiar with them and knows about what they might cost to manufacture in large quantities, as they would be.

Mr. GARNER. We pay as much as they are worth for one year's rent.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that possibly about the cost of them or nearly so each year we pay as rental.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman say that the machine can be purchased and title given to the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think the Time Marking Machine Co., of Chicago, is willing to sell all of the machines that they can manufacture to the Government. They do not ask that the machines be rented, but I think they are willing to sell their ma-chines to the Government. The other machine company is not willing to sell the machines to the Government.

Mr. GARNER. As I understood the gentleman from Kansas, they have 124 of these machines already rented at $270 per year.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. Mr. GARNER. It seems to me that if you can purchase these machines for $1,000, and we are paying a rental of $270 a year for them, it is not a very good business proposition to continue to pay the rental.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to suggest that the machines that can be bought are the low-priced machines, and the Government now owns a number of them, but the machines on which the patent still exists can not be purchased, and they are the machines of high rental. They are very much superior to the others and effect a very large saving. As a matter of course, I am not interested in anything other than to get the very lowest possible price. We fixed $300, at the suggestion of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. And they fixed it at $400 the other time. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In the hearings Dr. Granfield gives the number of machines used of each type, the efficiency of the machines, and their prices. It seems that there is a total expenditure for the rental of machines of $274,570, and the entire appropriation was $310,000. There is one machine here, of which they have 173, at a rental of $80 per annum. others at $54, some at $72, some at $00, some at $135, and some of them are owned by the Government.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask this question: How did the gentleman, in response to my question, fix the value of the machine at $400? Have they sold any of these machines?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No.
Mr. COOPER. Some gentleman here fixed the value of the machine at $400. Have they sold any of the machines to the Government?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Here is a concrete proposition. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] says that the hearings show that there are some 40 machines rented from a Chicago firm at the rate of $270 a year. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] says that those machines can be bought—they are willing to sell-at $1,000. Now, it does seem to me as a business proposition that the Government ought not to pay $270 a year in rent for a machine which they can buy for $1,000, and they have rented these machines. Now, they can buy them for $1,000. If that is true, it seems to me it is a concrete proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is correct about that if true.

Mr. GARNER. I am giving the statement that was made,

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure that $1,000 is right.

Mr. MANN. Last year we made provision of $35,000, which could be used for the purchase of these machines. That is for the current year and that is the law now.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he can tell me why it is that the Post Office Department did not see proper to purchase these machines that could be purchased for $1,000 in place of renting them at $270?

Mr. MANN. I do not know why it is; I do not know whether they can be purchased for $1,000 each or not. I am endeavoring, like the gentleman, to obtain some information on the sub-

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield? Mr. FOSTER. I have the floor. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman from Illinois know that the department gives as one reason for not purchasing these machines when it has an opportunity to purchase-and that opportunity is rather indefinite—the fact enters into consideration that all the time there is an increase in the efficiency of these machines; that manufacturers are putting better machines on the market; and whereas we have had on the market cheaper grades of machines with limited capacity of a few thousand an hour they are now putting on the market, according to the hearings, machines with a capacity of 60,000 an hour? Now, I think one of the arguments of the department, and it seems to me quite good, is this, That if it should purchase some of these machines on the market now with a capacity of twenty or twenty-five thousand an hour they would load up the Government with machines which in a few years would be antiquated.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: In all these machines and the different kinds of machines there are some improvements of one kind and another. For instance, with the Time Marking Machine Co., of Chicago, I understand those machines have an advantage like this: That automatically they change the time every minute when the machine is stamping letters. For, commencing at the hour, each minute it automatically changes the time it stamps the letter to that minute. Now, I think there is no doubt the Post Office Department and everyone who has investigated this subject at all will agree that the machine that is manufactured in Boston is probably a better machine than that manufactured in Chicago, but I think one will agree that a machine that will take letters through and stamp them at the rate of 25,000 or 30,000 an hour is as fast as that machine will ever be run. getting up to 60,000 an hour, but the probability is the capacity of 60,000 is not going to be used, and if you will go into all of the great post offices of the country and look at it you will find that these machines are not running to their full capacity and will not run to their full capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Just two minutes more.
Mr. POWERS. How long do these machines last?
Mr. FOSTER. These machines will last, I understand, something like 10 years. Now, I am giving you some statements here that I could not vouch for the exact correctness of, because do not know exactly some of the details, but my understanding is that some 10 years is the life of one of these machines.

Mr. LLOYD. I think you will ascertain the fact that while it is claimed that typewriting machines will last 10 years, yet the experience of this body here is that a typewriter does not last but four years.

Mr. LANGLEY. And frequently gets out of repair in that time.

Mr. LLOYD. It frequently gets out of repair, Mr. MANN. You can not get me to use a typewriter for four years. It would not do good work.

Mr. FOSTER. I was taking what the Post Office said.

Mr. LLOYD. I imagine as a practical proposition that either one of them would be ready to be thrown away at the end of four or five years.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is wrong about that.

think they last longer than four or five years.

Mr. LLOYD. It is the same with this machine as it is with a typewriter. One typewriter may last three or four years, and another will be out of repair in two years.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the cost of the Boston machine?

FOSTER. I can not tell you exactly. But my understanding at the time was that they cost something like $1,000. However, I might be mistaken in regard to that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. You mean the Boston machine?

Yes. FOSTER.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I thought that was considered a better machine than the Chicago machine.

Mr. FOSTER. It is considered to be a little better perfected. It was the machine that was first on the market, the Chicago machine coming later, and they had not at that time perfected the machine in some particulars as well as the machine which is manufactured in Boston.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Illinois said that there was no use for the high-speed machine.

Mr. FOSTER. I think not.

Mr. MURDOCK. There are some 40 of those machines run in the New York office.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and you will find a number of them in all the great offices, but I do not suppose they run them at full capacity

Mr. MURDOCK. They run them as fast as they can possibly be fed when the bulk of the mail is in. Of course there are moments when they are not run entirely at their full speed.

Mr. FOSTER. My investigation was that they were not able to feed them at their full capacity, as oftentimes a letter did not get in right, and there would be a delay.

Mr. MURDOCK. After the gentleman's investigation of the subject, does he believe we can purchase them? I confess to him I have been puzzled for some years as to what he ought to do with a stamp-canceling machine.

Mr. COOPER. I think an answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] could be found in the statement of the average repairs each year. How much time is devoted by the lessors of these machines to repairs, and how frequently do they get out of repair?

Mr. MURDOCK. My understanding is they get out of repair very frequently; that the wear and tear on the stamp-canceling machine is very considerable; and the old machines that we had in the service-and have not been satisfactory-have been, as a matter of fact, relegated to the smaller offices.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the Boston machine formerly had a monopoly. You remember that Congress at one time put a provision in the Post Office appropriation bill providing something like this, namely, that they should not pay more than so much for these canceling machines, and as a consequence this same machine company-although I am not sure, but I thought it was on the market then-had a monopoly of the business of the Government, and as a consequence of the limitation being placed in the bill they withdrew all the ma-chines from the Government. And that one year, in which the Government had to go back to canceling by, hand, cost $1,000,000. That was the sort of treatment received from that company. am glad to say that condition does not exist now, because I be-lieve there are other machines on the market that will supply the Government what they need, and I believe the Time Marking Machine Co., of the city of Chicago, will be able to supply a large number of these machines if necessary.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think the gentleman will find the time-marking machine is under a patent and can not be bought

Mr. FOSTER. If they can not be bought, I think they could be rented for this amount of money and make quite a saving to the Government.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

BOWMAN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BOWMAN. As I read this paragraph, it states that it is for the rental and purchase of canceling machines, and it states that the machines shall be rented or purchased after advertisement for bids, and that the contracts shall be awarded on the basis of cheapness and efficiency. Now, I find, by referring to the hearings on this subject, at the bottom of page 99 and the top of page 100, the following statement:

Mr. Grandfield. No, sir. I will say this in regard to the purchase of machines: The cheapest machine we have bought heretofore in recent years cost the department $175 each. Recently, some two or three months ago, an inventor showed me a machine that could be operated either as a hand-power or an electric-power machine. It is so small and easy to operate that an ordinary incandescent light will furnish sufficient power to operate it with a one-eighth or one-sixteenth horse-power motor. The proposition came in a few days ago to sell machines of this type for about $90 each, including the motor, freight, drayage, and the expense of installation in the post office.

Now, several pages here are devoted to the examination of the merits of these different machines. The department has the right to select the machine, based on its cheapness and That is all there is to it. The post-office authorities are abundantly capable of performing the duty.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. BOWMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. However, if the gentleman will read in the hearings just preceding the portion he has cited, he will find that most of the existing stamp-canceling machine companies have attempted to hold up the Government in this, that they offered to sell the machines, but they will not sell unless the Government takes a certain number, like 50 or 75 or 100.

Mr. BOWMAN. I understand that; but there is nothing of that kind in this proposition.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; but this machine is new, and, according to the Third Assistant Postmaster General, it is untried as yet. It is a small machine. Dr. Grandfield says, in speaking of the price of the machines:

The Universal Stamping Machine Co. offered to sell their automatic high-grade machine—a new machine not yet in use in the service, although it has been tested and found to be an excellent machine—for $875, provided 50 or more were purchased, and for $800 each, provided that 100 or more were purchased.

Mr. BOWMAN. One word more. I will answer the gentle-an's question. Other machines were offered on a different man's question. Other machines were offered on a uniterest basis. The whole proposition is up to the Government. They have men qualified to examine into the merits of these machines and find out which is the best, whether to purchase or to rent. They are abundantly qualified. They are not bound to rent a machine or buy 50. There are others. The choice is not confined to a single machine. I think they can test all of them. I think the situation is abundantly covered by the paragraph. The Post Office authorities are competent to determine whether to buy or to rent.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The section of the bill provides not only for buying machines at $300, but the machines are to be taken care of and repaired and kept in a proper condition during the time they are used by the department. You will find by reading the hearings that the machines that are under patent do perhaps ten times as much work as those that are not under That is the reason for the superiority of the machines patent. on which the patent exists, because they can do so much more work than the others.

I think the House should not adopt this amendment. Discretion ought to be left to the department as to the amount to be paid for this machine, or the rental of it. Heretofore they have been unable to rent them for a less figure than this, and I suppose they will not be able to do so now, or to purchase them, either.

Mr. GARNER. From past experience would it not tend to influence or persuade the Post Office Department to limit this to $250? Was it not necessary in the past for Congress to cut down the limit from $400 to $300? If we do adopt the limit, we might still be held up to that amount, whereas if we cut it down to $250 the owners of the patents would say, "Congress has set the limit, and we will let you have it for $250."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think the discretion ought to be left with the department there. We ought not to assume, for a mere matter of $25 or $30 difference in the machine, that the department is going to do the wrong thing. I do not know just how these contracts are made, but my impression is that we have a contract for three or four years on these machines which the department will have to pay for.

Mr. FOSTER. I think they make them for three years.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think there are contracts in existence now that will have to be paid for on this basis. In a matter of this sort, particularly a matter of so little difference as this, it should be left in the discretion of the department, especially where the repairs have to be kept up.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois? Yes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. FOSTER. The trouble was that when we fixed the limit at $400 the department went right ahead and paid them $400. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We authorized it at $300, and they went along and made contracts at that.

Mr. GARNER. And if you cut it down to $250 is it not likely that they will accept $250?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You might as well say $25 arbitrarily. There would be as much sense in that proposition as in the other

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman be willing to cut this rental down to what the Government is now paying, the highest-$270?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The Government is now paying $274.50, I believe.

Mr. FOSTER. No; $270. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not like to limit the discretion of the department too much, but I would not object to that.

Mr. GARNER. You have to force the companies to take it.
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Illinois wants to change his amendment to $270, I will not object.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making it $270.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 23, by striking out the words "three hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and seventy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for letter carriers absent without pay, and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade; City Delivery Service, $32,802,175.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee in this connection the same question I asked him about the clerks, and that is whether the amount provided here is sufficient to take care of the promotion of 75 per cent of the carriers?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The amount carried in this bill is $32,802,175, which is an increase over the current law-

Mr. MANN. It is an increase of about $600,000.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The difference is intended for promotions, as calculated by the department.

Mr. BORLAND. According to the hearings, will this provide for the additional 25 per cent of promotions?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Allen] is particularly interested in this matter, and perhaps he will explain it.

There is no question about it. There has been Mr. ALLEN. an increase made over the estimate of the Post Office Department in the number of clerks to be promoted and also in the number of letter carriers. It was originally provided that 14.819 letter carriers were to be taken care of—on page 10 of the bill-and that was increased when the percentage was increased from 50 per cent to 75 per cent, the number now being 16.479. The same thing was done with reference to the clerks. There can be no question about it.

Mr. BORLAND. I can only say that I am for the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN], which provides for the automatic increase of pay up to the $1,200 grade, and I hope it includes the letter carriers as well as the clerks.

Mr. ALLEN. It includes the letter carriers as well as the clerks. The increased amount to take care of the additional 25 per cent of promotions of letter carriers amounted to $178,250, and the additional amount to take care of the additional 25 per cent increase in promotions of clerks amounted to $102,175. have increased the amount and increased the number in the classes to be taken care of, so that we have added $280,425, Mr. BORLAND. I hope that the bill which the gentleman from Ohio speaks of-providing for the automatic increase for clerks-will also be made to apply to the carriers.

Mr. ALLEN. It does.

Mr. BORLAND. And that eventually they will abolish the $600 grade of carriers as well as the $600 grade of clerks.

Mr. ALLEN. I am very glad to have the gentleman's cordial support of my bill.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last two words. this place in the bill last year we carried a provision requiring not to exceed 48 hours per week by the carrier. That is left out here. I take it that the gentleman from Tennessee is relying upon a provision later in the bill to take care of that?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; in the latter part of the bill we take care of that.

Mr. MANN. Supposing the provision in the latter part of the bill should not be agreed to, it being, in the first place, subject to a point of order, and, in the second place, subject to the will of the House. If the provision in the latter part of the bill should not be agreed to, would the gentleman have any objection to recurring to this paragraph, so as to insert the item in the current law?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We want to take care of the question in the way we think it should be taken care of, in the latter part of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. But if we can not do that, we will come back here and do the best we can.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers, substitute and auxillary letter carriers at offices where City Delivery Service is established during the year, $50,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman whether or not this carries the amount estimated by the department.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think that is the estimate. Mr. MANN. The appropriation for the current year is

$75,000. Mr. GARNER. And the estimate for the ensuing year is only $50,000

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think that is so.

Mr. MANN. I think the estimate is the same as the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I read from the hearings, page 117:

Mr. Finley. You did not expend the appropriation last year by $54,730.92?
Mr. Grandfield. The unexpended balance on December 30, 1911, was $27,668.62.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that. The Post Office Department has been making an economic record, and in doing so they have made it at the expense of the smaller towns and rural communities. There are places in this country which under the rules are entitled to city delivery that do not get it. If you cut this appropriation the department will be able to come in and say to Members of Congress or to these cities entitled to this delivery, "We can not do it because we have not got the money." That is the reason I asked the question. I know that the Post Office Department is now conducting a so-called policy of economy which is done, as I say, at the expense of the rural communities of this country and the smaller cities.

We who live in the large cities do not think so.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois may not think so but we have been made to forcibly realize it in connection with the star routes and the rural-delivery routes and the smaller cities where we have felt the force of this economy of the Post Office Department. I am unwilling to deprive cities where the receipts are more than $10,000 of the service that they are entitled to under the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MANN.

I do not propose to offer an amendment increasing this, but I wanted to call the attention of the committee to the fact so that the Post Office Department in the next fiscal year may not that the Post Office Department in the next useal year may not be able to say that we have reduced the appropriation so that they are unable to do this. I do not want them to be able to say that we can not do this because we have not got the money.

Mr. MANN. They will be able to say it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there are a number of items in the bill where the department has not expended the amount allowed in the last appropriation bill, and in some cases the committee thought it best to confine the new appropriation to an amount equivalent to the last expenditure.

Mr. GARNER. Let us suppose that the department has failed to do its duty in the establishment of city deliveries in cities where they are entitled to it, and therefore has expended an amount of money less than Congress authorized it to do. Does the chairman of the committee think that the future administration of the Post Office Department ought to be deprived of a sufficient fund to establish them where they ought to be established?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; on the contrary, if that state of facts existed the appropriations should be altogether ample. Mr. GARNER. The gentleman believes that $50,000 for the ensuing year is sufficient for this purpose?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. So far as we are informed it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the postal service, office of the First Assistant Postmaster General, $1,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last A moment ago we agreed to an amendment offered by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Foster] in reference to the rental of conceling machines, reducing the amount carried in the bill, which was the same as the existing law-$300 per annum-to $270 per annum. I am reminded by finding at this point in the bill a provision which we inserted last year, authorizing the Postmaster General to enter into contracts for a period not exceeding four years for the rental of canceling machines.

Now, I take it that if any such contracts have been entered into at a rental of $300 per annum, no one would desire to have the faith and credit of the United States Government impugned.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my colleague that I would not do that; that if they have entered into contracts for four years those contracts ought to be lived up to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois absolutely prevent the carrying out of that con-

Mr. MANN. They could bring a claim in the Court of Claims against the Government, but it would prevent the use of any of this appropriation in the payment of the contract. I do not intend to ask the gentleman to make any change now, but I hope the gentlemen of the committee or some one will find out about it

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I suggested to the gentleman from Illinois that we had contracts running two or three years.

Mr. GARNER. The statement was made by the gentleman from Illinois that the highest contract price was $270, and if that is true it makes no difference how long the contract runs for.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the highest price is. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that the company had machines in at $270 per annum.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that was all the statement I made.

did not say that was the maximum.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. I do not know what the highest contract is, but I suggest at this time that somebody, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Foster], or somebody on the committee, should ascertain in regard to the facts, the amendment having been already agreed to, and if it is necessary to make any change I think there would be no difficulty about doing that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we will take care of that when the fact develops that contracts have been actually made.

Mr. MANN. It is desirable to take care of it in this House. We do not desire to pass a provision that repudiates a contract which we have just authorized. I think no one in the House wants to take that position or to put the House in that

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois before he takes his seat that the rentals for the different machines that we rent run as follows: $225, $135, $90, $72, $54, $300, $150, $80, $270, $110, and $150; so there is one machine for which we pay an annual rental of $300.

Mr. FOSTER. I think if we have any contracts running at this time they ought to be taken care of.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, that machine to which the gentleman from Kansas has just referred is what is known as the Hay-Dolphin Flier, and the rental of that machine was cut down by an amendment upon the floor last year, or the year before, from $400 to $300 per year. There are contracts out. I think I am correct in saying that we authorized contracts for this machine in an appropriation bill last year for a period of four years. I think in all cases contracts which are now outstanding cover a four-year period.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of this amendment. Has it been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the amendment which he proposed some time ago and which was agreed to, which provided, "That hereafter the post offices shall not be open on Sunday for the purpose of delivering mail to the public." Did the gentleman take into consideration in offering that amendment "the star-route serv-

Mr. RAKER. I want to ask the gentleman if this provision ought not to be added to his amendment:

Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to post offices which are supplied by the star-route service.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that a stage starts out from the railroad and travels-some of them-100 and some of them 150 miles. The post offices are in the homes or the stores of the people that the stage goes to, and under this provision their stores will be closed and they can not be opened on Sunday for the delivery of mail. There are no mail boxes or lock boxes from which the people can go and get their mail if they want to. The owner of a store or the residing in the towns, and these people, numbering millions, owner of a station runs the post office. It does not seem to me that a community, and there are many of them which will be involved in this, ought to be deprived of the opportunity of getting its mail. Many men go 20 miles on Sunday to get their mail; 10 miles or 5 miles, and do not have the time in the week Under this provision, when they go to town to get their mall, the postmaster, who has no assistant and whose store is closed, is prohibited from giving them their mail. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that there ought to be a proviso exempting these post offices on the star-route service?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from California that I do not know whether there ought to be such a proviso or not. I do not know whether mail is delivered through the star route on Sunday, being the only day in the week in which the star route reaches the post offices. I should think that if there was a case where the contractor on the star route delivers mail on Sunday only at the post office it would be hardly desirable to have the post office open upon Sunday. I will say to the gentleman and to other gentlemen in the House that I have talked with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] in charge of the bill in reference to this amendment. I understand from what he has said to me that he proposes to take into consideration all of these propositions, and if there need be a change in that provision, that change will be made at some time in the proper way and presented to the House.

Mr. RAKER. If it is a question as to getting at it afterwards, very well. I did not fully comprehend the situation until the vote was taken. I see now the position in which I am placed. I am satisfied that 90 per cent of the people in my district go to the post offices on Sunday to get their mail.

Well, I am satisfied they ought to be reformed. Mr. MANN. Mr. RAKER. Well, I do not live in a large community, but the people are scattered over the West and they are trying to get their mail and trying to see what is being done throughout the country, and I do not believe that law should apply. It might apply to people living in large centers, but you can see that these people living in the rural districts should receive their mail upon Sundays, and if the post office should be closed it would work a hardship. You might make the provision in regard to the larger cities on the railroads and on the rural routes, and it may be all right to close them—I am not saying anything in regard to that—but upon the star routes, where the stage goes on Sunday and where the office must be open for the purpose of receiving and delivering the mail, to say that those can not be open for the purpose of delivering mail will work a hardship. I shall take an opportunity, Mr. Chairman, when we reach the rural part of the bill, to try to offer this amendment and show the committee why it should be adopted, for the purpose of giving the star routes opportunity-

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. POWERS. Is it not true that if this matter is carried out as it passed the committee that it will result in endless confusion in your country in the delivery of the mails through star routes and rural routes?

Mr. RAKER. Why, absolutely endless confusion, and instead of giving us a mail six times a week it will give us mail about four times a week, because they will not be able to handle and dispose of the mail.

Mr. POWERS. I want to say to the gentleman that is true in my section of the country also.

Mr. RAKER. We seem to be unfortunate, so far as mail service is concerned, in living in a rural district, although I want to say it is the finest country on earth to live in.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, it is desired, for a few minutes, to invite particular attention to the paragraph in the postalservice appropriation bill, now under consideration, which will permit the experimental establishment of mail-carrier service in the towns and villages having second and third class post offices. As fully 300 congressional districts embrace towns which can ultimately secure benefits from this legislation, and as almost every Member who votes for this proposition will be doing his own constituents a service as well as giving support to a genuinely meritorious measure, I hope that the entire membership of this House will support the proposition to extend the mail-delivery service to the towns and villages.

For many years millions of people residing in the great cities of the United States have enjoyed free mail-delivery service, and during the past decade we have witnessed the installation of the convenient and valuable rural mail-delivery These systems of mail delivery have been developed system. to a high standard of efficiency, and have become indispensable to the American public. But, unfortunately, there exists what is to-day recognized as a discrimination against the people have patiently awaited the elimination of the postal deficit so that modern postal conveniences might be afforded our prosperous towns and villages without serious embarrassment to the Government finances.

Time, as usual, has brought changes, and public opinion to-day demands that the American people shall be accorded that character of postal facilities which is recognized as essential to the domestic, business, and social welfare of the people. The gross postal revenues are constantly increasing, and business methods are being rapidly applied to the greatest of all business institutions-the United States Post Office Department. Along with the growing revenues and increased business efficiency must come extensions of the mail-delivery conveniences.

Two years ago in an address to this House an appeal was made by me for an extension of the mail-delivery service of the Post Office Department so as to provide for the collection and delivery of letters in the towns, villages, and boroughs, and as the postal deficit was very great in 1909 it was suggested that the extension should be made as soon as the condition of the postal revenues would permit. The official reports indicate that the postal receipts and expenditures have been so balanced as to permit of service improvements, and an appeal now comes to the Congress from all parts of the country for an extension of the mail-delivery facilities. In illustration of the popular demand for this legislation I need only point to the fact that since I introduced H. R. 16819, in January last, for the experimental establishment of a town mail-delivery system a number of petitions, representing a score of States of the Union, have been filed in Congress praying for its enactment.

There is an urgent appeal from the people for an extension of the mail-delivery service to the cities, towns, villages, and boroughs which have presidential post offices of the second and third classes. The people in cities having less than 10,000 population or less than $10,000 worth of annual postal business are without mail-delivery service, notwithstanding the fact that many such towns have splendid streets, sidewalks, street lighting, and so forth, and give every evidence of true American progressiveness. It is unjust and even unwise that the Government should longer deprive the residents of these communities from the enjoyment of any form of modern postal methods for which they petition. I hope that the Congress will authorize the postal department to provide the people of our American towns and villages with a mail delivery at least once daily.

It is not essential that any particular method shall be pursued or special system be adopted, but it is desirable that initial action be taken, even if the appropriation is not large for the first year. Not less than $100,000 should be provided if material results are to be promptly attained, and I think that $300,000 could be well expended for this purpose.

It is pleasing to know that the Post Office Department officials have awakened to the importance of this legislation. They concede the justice of the popular demand for it, admit its practicability and advisability, and commend to Congress the instal-lation of experimental service. The First Assistant Postmaster General in his last annual report urged the establishment of an experimental service in the following language:

EXTENSION OF THE FREE DELIVERY SERVICE.

EXTENSION OF THE FREE DELIVERY SERVICE.

Under the present law, which was enacted in 1887, City Delivery Service may be established in any city having a population of 10,000 or more, or at any post office where the gross receipts during the preceding fiscal year amounted to $10,000. Owing to the increase in postal receipts per capita (in 1887 it was 83 cents; now it is $2.53) it is not unusual for the postal receipts to amount to $10,000 at an office in a city having a population of not more than 3,000. On the other hand, there are a number of cities having a population of 7,000 or 8,000 where the gross receipts of the post office are less than $10,000 annually, and the operation of the law is therefore somewhat inequitable. The law could be more fairly applied if it were amended so as to make possible the establishment of Free Delivery Service in any city where the gross receipts of the post office amounts to $8,000.

The City Delivery Service is now in operation in 1,541 cities, serving more than 46,000,000 people. On the 42,000 rural routes 20,000,000 people receive their mail from rural carriers. This leaves a considerable percentage of our people, the majority of whom reside in towns and villages, without any form of Free Delivery Service, and under the present laws there is no way by which the department can relieve this inequality. The establishment of City Delivery Service, however, in towns and villages under the present practice of the department and the law governing the employment of letter carriers is not feasible, since the expense would be altogether out of proportion to the benefits conferred. At many post offices, however, serving a population of from reasonably satisfactory service for practically all of the patrons. It is believed, therefore, that an experimental service should be authorized.

And the Postmaster General is equally favorable in his revert

And the Postmaster General is equally favorable in his report. He says:

VILLAGE DELIVERY SERVICE.

Delivery by letter carrier, except on rural routes, is confined under existing law to cities and towns having as much as 10,000 population or annual post-office receipts amounting to $10,000 or more. Thus the residents of many small towns and villages are obliged to go to the post offices for their mail, while delivery service by carrier is afforded both to the inhabitants of cities and to people residing along the rural routes in sparsely settled country districts. The carrier delivery system is now in operation in 1,541 cities, serving an urban population of about 45,000,000, while rural carriers deliver mail on 42,000 routes that reach about 20,000,000 people. This leaves about 25,000,000 people in the United States, most of whom live in small towns and villages, without any form of mail delivery. The establishment of such a service in these towns and villages under the present law governing the employment and compensation of city letter carriers would be hardly feasible because of the heavy expense involved. It is believed, however, that in many villages not now entitled to free delivery a comparatively small allowance would enable the postmasters to employ the assistance necessary to carry mail to the residences, and an appropriation to cover the expense of such a service is recommended.

Acting upon these recommendations and the public demand that has been aroused throughout the country by the advocates of the town and village mail-delivery service, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has recognized the merit and desirability of the proposed legislation by incorporating it in the pending bill.

It is hoped that the amendment will become law and that with as little delay as possible all of the 6,500 towns now without free delivery will be accorded that celerity and certainty of mail delivery which obtains in the cities as well as among the residents of rural routes.

I most heartily congratulate the Democratic majority of the committee on falling in line in the year 1912 with what the Republican national platform advocated 20 years ago in the following language:

We approve the policy of extending to towns, villages, and rural communities the advantages of free-delivery service enjoyed by the large cities of the country.

Since the adoption of that resolution by the Republican national convention of 1892, fully 20,000,000 of people living in "rural communities" have been accorded "the advantages of free-delivery service" through the agency of 42,000 rural freedelivery routes. Let the good work be proceeded with so that in a very short time the discrimination now existing against the people residing in the towns will be obliterated by statute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hay, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

MINORITY REPORT ON H. R. 22527.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the minority may have until next Tuesday night, one week from to-night, to file the minority report on the bill (H. R. 22527) to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States. (H. Rept. 559, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 23246. An act appropriating $300,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against the impending flood the levees on the Mississippi River and rivers tributary thereto;

H. R. 19863. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide and extend the deferred payments of settlers in the Kiowa-Comanche and Apache ceded lands in Oklahoma;

H. R. 9420. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Jackson, Miss., carriage and cannon or fieldpieces; and

H. R. 20486. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Willamette River at or near Newberg, Oreg.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to joint resolutions and enrolled bill of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 77. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic encampment, to be held at Pullman, Wash., in June, 1912:

S. J. Res. S7. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Messrs. Humberto Mencia and Juan

Dawson, of Salvador; S. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Mr. Manuel Agüero y Junqué, of Cuba;

S. 2577. An act authorizing the lease of school lands for public-park purposes by the State of Washington for a longer period than five years.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 23246. An act appropriating $300,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against the impending flood the levees on the Mississippi River and rivers tributary thereto;

H. R. 9420. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Jackson, Miss., carriage and cannon or fieldpieces:

H. R. 20486. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Willamette River at or near Newberg, Oreg.; and

H. R. 19863. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide and extend the deferred payments of settlers in the Kiowa-Comanche and Apache ceded lands in Oklahoma.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Minnesota River, Minn. (H. Doc. No. 700); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Charlotte Harbor, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 699); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22527) to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 559), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23287) granting an increase of pension to Emma Chapman; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22679) granting an increase of pension to James B. White; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 13744) granting a pension to Mary Colby; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions. A bill (H. R. 4962) granting a pension to Moses A. Coleman; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions. A bill (H. R. 20242) granting a pension to Charles E. Welker; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions. A bill (H. R. 9795) granting a pension to Patrick Eurke; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 17509) granting an increase of pension to Celia W. Boothby; Committee on Pensions discharged; and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 23407) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 23408) establishing the Wind Cave National Game Preserve, in South Dakota; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HARRISON of New York: A bill (H. R. 23409) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris; to the Committee on the Judiciary

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 23410) for repeal of a part of chapter 248, approved May 18, 1910, entitled "An act making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FERGUSSON: A bill (H. R. 23411) granting public lands to the State of New Mexico for the construction and maintenance of public roads and bridges in the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 23412) to amend paragraph 709 of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 23413) to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23414) granting public lands to the State of California for the construction of public roads and bridges; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 17, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D. The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. Longe and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LOSS OF STEAMER "TITANIC."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce the resolution I send to the desk. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. No. 283), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the causes leading to the wreck of the White Star Ilner Titanic, with its attendant loss of life, so shocking to the civilized world.

Resolved further, That said committee or subcommittee is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take such testimony as may be necessary to determine the responsibility therefor, with a view to such legislation as may be necessary to prevent, as far as possible, any repetition of such a disaster.

Resolved further, That the committee shall inquire particularly into the number of lifeboats, life rafts, and life preservers, and other equipment for the protection of the passengers and crew; the number of persons aboard the Titanic, whether passengers or crew; and whether adequate inspections were made of such vessel, in view of the large number of American passengers traveling over a route commonly regarded as dangerous from icebergs; and whether it is feasible for Congress to take steps looking to an international agreement to secure the protection of sea traffic, including regulation of the size of ships and designation of routes.

Resolved further, That in the report of said committee it shall recommend such legislation as it shall deem expedient.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I hastily drew a resolution much in the same thought with the resolution which has just been presented by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and it is so hurriedly written that I ask permission to read it myself. I wilt say that the recently announced and most horrifying disaster to the steamship Titanic, whereby hundreds of lives were lost at sea, proinpts my introduction of this resolution (S. Res. 284):

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, advised that the Senate would favor treatles with England, France, Germany, and other maritime Governments, with a view to directing the course of all vessels engaged in the carrying of passengers at sea.

And, further, to confer as to all matters appertaining to the safety of such craft and passengers.

Permit me further to say, if I may, Mr. President, had the race for speed and the desire for greed not controlled the action of the owners and officers of the Titanic, this disaster would doubtless have been averted. Had the southern instead of the northern course been pursued in passage by this craft, a thousand homes in our land would have been saved this day of sadness and desolution. A few years ago the La Bourgogne went down in the same path and to the same fate. There has been no thought of change of path. Speed must be kept up at any sacrifice; Mammon must be satisfied.

Mr. President, sea navigation at best is hazardous. Hence I feel that every safeguard, not only in appliances, but also as to the course these great leviathans should pursue, is a fit and proper subject to command the attention of the governing authorities of every civilized country in the world.

Senators, let us act at once. True, we can not help the unfortunate souls who went to their watery graves; but lest another craft shall go to the bottom of the insatiable sea with her human cargo, I urge the passage of this resolution.

Something should be done; something can be done. is now, everyone who ships on these great craft takes a gambler's chance. Such a condition is a disgrace to our civiliza-tion. The passenger list of every steamship should be limited to her supply of life-saving apparatus. It can be done. Congress has full control over American shipping. Congress can control the shipping of every other nation by refusing to allow to enter in or depart from any American port vessels not so equipped. Will we not learn? We must enact a law, and even though it may seem burdensome such a law must be enforced.

I most respectfully, Mr. President, ask for the adoption of this resolution. My purpose is, as it plainly portrays, that the President, in connection with the great maritime nations of the world, may confer. They can annul the charter or the register of any vessel that fails to go in the path lined out. One hundred or two hundred miles farther south of the course, which would have taken the Titanic from 10 to 24 hours more, would have saved hundreds of lives and thousands of mourning American hearts and millions of treasure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, my purpose in offering the resolution and its reference to the Committee on Commerce was prompted by the fact that the Committee on Commerce was prompted by the Committee on Commerce was prompted by the Committee on Commerce was prom on Commerce is now in session, and may take immediate jurisdiction of the resolution and make a prompt report thereon. It seemed to me that under the circumstances the resolution might appropriately go to that committee, and I wish the Senator from New Jersey would permit his resolution to go to the Committee on Commerce. We will report promptly, possibly this afternoon.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. I have no other ambition than to relieve a situation which may possibly occur again to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought, from the reading of the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Jersey, that a more appropriate reference would be to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was speaking as a member of the Committee on Commerce, to which the first resolution would naturally go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The other resolution, however, is quite different from this one.

Mr. LODGE. I think, as the resolution relates to the making of treaties, it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It, of course, will have immediate action.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is the distinction between the two resolutions. One naturally goes to the Committee on Commerce and the other naturally goes to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, The resolution which I intro-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that after drawing the resolution I consulted with a senior Senator in this body. At first I thought of its reference to the Committee on Commerce, but at his suggestion I changed it. However, I am perfectly indifferent to what committee it may be referred, so long as we can accomplish something; and in God's name let us do something.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, my resolution also contemplates the recommendation by the Committee on Commerce, after an investigation of the question, as to whether an international agreement could not be entered into which would be effective and far-reaching in such an emergency. If Senators are willing that the pending resolution shall go to the Committee on Commerce, I think I may say without any hesitation that they will report promptly their conclusions, and if there is any matter in the resolution which should appropriately go to the Committee on Foreign Relations I have no disposition whatever to deprive that committee, of which I am a member, of jurisdiction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I made the point in regard to the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine] that as it clearly related to treaties and to the passage of a resolution requesting the President to make treatles with other powers for a certain purpose it should undoubtedly go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I was called from the Senate to the telephone, and I have been informed since I returned that the resolution has gone to the Committee on Commerce. I think it ought clearly to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as it relates to treaties. Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction of the legislation which is so well expressed in the resolution of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], but I think the other resolution ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair agrees with the Senator from Massachusetts, but the Senate, by unanimous consent, referred the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey to the Committee on Commerce. That committee now has charge of it.

It can be taken away from it, of course.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I venture to suggest that while the Senate acquiesced in the reference there was no formal unanimous consent. Certainly, if it had been asked, I should have objected, but the Senator from Michigan had asked that the resolution go to the Committee on Commerce, and there was no objection interposed. That amounted to an acquiescence, but it did not rise to the dignity, I respectfully suggest, of a unanimous-consent agreement, nor is it so binding as a unanimous consent. I wish to say that I had heard the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts in the first instance, but he being in the immediate neighborhood of the Senator from Michigan, I did not notice that he had left the Chamber, and when the Senator from Michigan repeated his motion I supposed it was with the acquiescence of the Senator from Massachusetts, or I myself should then have objected.

Mr. LODGE. I had supposed, Mr. President, when I was called from the Chamber that the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey was going to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the acquiescence and approval of the Senator from New Jersey, who introduced it. I had supposed the matter settled, but that was my mistake, of course. It seems to me that it is a wrong reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair put the question, as the Chair usually does on a matter of that kind. He did not actually first submit to the Senate the question whether they would agree to that reference by unanimous consent, but the Chair stated that, without objection, the reference would be made to the Committee on Commerce as requested.

Mr. LODGE. I understand.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the resolution is now so referred, but the Chair thinks it was improperly so referred.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he can move to reconsider that action.

Mr. LODGE. I ask, then, that the action be reconsidered, and that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not desire to deprive the Committee on Foreign Relations of jurisdiction over the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey. In the resolutions which I introduced occurs this sentence:

And whether it is feasible for Congress to take steps looking to an international agreement to secure the protection of sea traffic.

That provision related to the practical aspect of a question over which the Committee on Commerce has undoubted jurisdiction. I do not desire to insist that the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey go to the Committee on Commerce, but I am perfectly willing, if the Senator from New Jersey is agreeable, that the action be reconsidered and that the resolution of the Senator go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am quite agreeable to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No objection is heard, and an order is therefore entered changing the reference of the resolution from the Committee on Commerce to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MOTOR AND OTHER VEHICLES IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 570).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, the number of carriages, motor vehicles, etc., owned and operated by the Gov-ernment and used by the Department of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 254) congratulating the people of China on their assumption of the powers, duties, and responsibilities, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk of said court, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. WEBB, and Mr. NYE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President: S. 2577. An act authorizing the lease of school lands for public-park purposes by the State of Washington for a longer period than five years;

S. J. Res. 77. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Grand Army of the lington will be read.

Republic encampment, to be held at Pullman, Wash., in June,

S. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Messrs. Humborto Mencia and Juan Dawson, of Salvador; and

S. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Mr. Manuel Aguero y Junque, of Cuba.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ludlow, Ill.; the United Presbyterian Church of Whitingsville, Mass.; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Whitingsville, Mass.; and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Westboro, Mass., and Middletown, N. Y., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Curtis Bay, and Oxford, all in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the establishment of a department o' health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Saunemin, Ill., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Allyn K. Capron Camp, No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Illinois, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES. I present telegrams in the nature of memorials, protesting against the passage of the Owen medical bill. I should like to have the signatures noted in the Record, and the telegrams to lie on the table.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and the signatures to be noted in the RECORD, as follows:

From G. A. Haggerty, of Raymond, Wash.; Sylvester Bros., wholesale grocers, of Seattle, Wash.; J. A. Lee, North Street grocery, of Seattle, Wash.; George W. Seal, of Colville, Wash.; G. E. Sanderson, Jay D. Crary, E. C. Miller, S. M. Anderson, W. O. McCaw, Cadill T. Smith, A. W. Barkley, and H. N. Anderson, of Aberdeen, Wash.; F. T. Evans, secretary board of trustees of the Divine Science Church and College, of Seattle, Wash.; John B. Slater, of Colville, Wash.; V. J. Knapp and Mrs. V. J. Knapp, of Anacortes, Wash.; Washington Branch National League for Medical Freedom, of Seattle, Wash.; Gilbert Hunt, of Walla Walla, Wash.; Dr. G. A. R. Steiner, of Seattle, Wash.; Frank S. Smith, of Seattle, Wash.; the Union Timber Co., the Anderson & Middleton Timber Co., of Aberdeen, Wash., and of S. M. Anderson, president of the Bay City Lumber Co., of Aberdeen, Wash.

Mr. JONES. I also present a letter, telegrams, and a resolution adopted by the board of trustees of the Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce with reference to the Borah-Jones homestead bill now in conference. I should like to have the signatures to the telegrams noted.

There being no objection, the signatures to the telegrams were ordered to be noted in the RECORD, as follows:

From O. F. Errickson, chairman, P. O. Peterson, secretary, of the Homesteaders' Club, of Joplin, Mont.; 30 settlers at Lothair, Mont.; business men of Joplin, Mont., and 55 new settlers; 118 voters of Hinkham, Mont.; 50 settlers of Gilford, Mont.; E. A. Potter, F. O. Vandewalker, Ira L. MacLaren, Charles W. Vandewalker, W. C. Smith, of Spokane, Wash.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington desire to have the petitions referred to the conference committee having the matter in charge?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be the reference, without objection

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator if it would not answer his purpose as well to send the telegrams to the Committee on Public Lands. I do not think we are quite permitted to take matters to a conference committee, where the managers on the part of the House and the managers on the part of the Senate will meet, except where material comes to them through the committees which the conferees represent. I should prefer to have it go to the Committee on Public Lands first.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reference will be to the Committee on Public Lands; and without objection, the letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Wash-

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Hon. Wesler L. Jones,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: With a number of friends and acquaintances, I have just signed a telegram to you urging the passage of the pending homestead signed a telegram to you urging the passage of the pending nomestead bill.

I resigned an important position with an eastern college last September and came West, expecting to select a homestead, with the intention of making it my permanent home. I have been appalled, however, at the experiences and hardships of those who are trying to make homes on Government land under existing laws. Where residence is required so continuously, without leave of absence, the health of the women is in many cases seriously impaired, if not permanently undermined. This is more certain to occur wherever the land can not be made immediately productive, and the head of the family must seek employment elsewhere for large portions of the year, leaving the family alone in the wilderness.

The only prospect ahead of men who wish to get a home in this new country is to become a citizen of one of the Canadian Provinces, as thousands are doing. I dislike to leave my native land, however, and am writing to urge you to lend your influence in favor of the new homestead bill, which will allow five months' leave of absence each year and a total residence of only three years.

Were WARREN. I have five very brief telegrams from presi-

Very truly, yours,

Mr. WARREN. I have five very brief telegrams from presidents and secretaries of associations relating to the liability act, and as they are very short I have selected those five and ask that they may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN, HOOSIER LODGE, No. 261, Indianapolis, Ind., April 7, 1912.

Hon. B. F. SHIVELY, Senator.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen under the jurisdiction of this lodge, numbering 510 members, action was taken at a regular meeting held in Moose Hall, Indianapolis, Ind., March 31, instructing me to urgently request that you give your earnest support to the workmen's compensation bill, introduced in the Senate by the Hon. Senator Sutherland and known as Senate bill No. 5382

Senate by the Hon. Senator SCHHERLAND and known as Senate bill No. 5382.

This bill has been given serious consideration by this lodge at a number of readings; it has been discussed at some length, and while the amounts specified in the bill are not as large as we think they should be, we believe it is a step in the right direction. We firmly believe it will be the cause of universal good among our craft, the knowledge and certainty that we get the stipulated amount according to the nature of the injury, without the expensive and sometimes very slow legal remedies, will be a source of general satisfaction if enacted into law.

We earnestly hope you will see fit to support this bill and do your best to place it on the Federal statute books. Thanking you in advance, I beg to remain.

Florence, S. C., respectfully ask you to support S. 5382.

A. H. Holter, Secretary.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of New York favoring the opening of the Panama Canal to all tonnage, irrespective of ownership, which were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday, the 29th of April, immediately after the close of the morning business, I will, with the permission of the Senate, submit some remarks upon Senate bill No. 1, commonly known as the Owen health-department bill.

In this connection, in view of what was said on the floor of the Senate yesterday as to who is opposing this measure, I desire to present two short telegrams, and I ask that they be

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegrams will be read.

The telegrams were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 16, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Works,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The faculty and students of the Pacific College of Osteopathy desire to protest most emphatically against the passage of Senate bill No. I, introduced by Senator Owen, or any similar measure establishing a Federal department or bureau of health, believing that such legislation would seriously menace the future of osteopathy in this country.

CLEMENT A. WHITING, Sc. D. D. O., Chairman of Faculty.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 16, 1912.

Hon. John D. Works, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Believing that the passage of Senate bill No. 1 would result in discrimination against the independent schools of healing in favor of the so-called regular school we, the faculty and students of the California Electric Medical College, do hereby vigorously protest against the passage of above bill or similar legislation seeking the establishing of a national department or bureau of health.

O. C. Welbourn, A. M., M. D., President, J. A. Munk. Dean, Former President, National Electric Medical Association.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES. Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 630), accompanied by a bill (S. 6384), granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

S. 559. Martin Markeson.

S. 799. Rebecca Strouther.

S. 2525. Frederick S. Barrows, jr.

S. 2850. Maggie Boutiette.

S. 3301. William H. Hinkel.

S. 3585. William C. Emison, S. 3601. William A. Hickok,

S. 5216. William Quinlivan.

S. 5655. Mary Meade Sands.

S. 6023. Francis M. Tibbetts. S. 6326. William E. Bailey.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21960) to authorize the Port Arthur Pleasure Pier Co. to construct a bridge across the Sabine-Neches Canal, in front of the town of Port Arthur, reported it without amendment.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR TAYLOR.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 281, submitted by Mr. Lea on the 9th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator ROBERT L. TAYLOR, from the State of Tennessee, vouchers for the same to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT SOUTH SIOUX CITY.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21821) to authorize the city of South Sioux City, in the State of Nebraska, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa, to report it without amendment. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Nebraska to the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSS OF STEAMER "TITANIC."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan subsequently said: I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred Senate resolution 283, directing the Committee on Commerce to investigate the causes leading to the wreck of the White Star liner Titanic, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was to add at the end of the resolution the following:

And the expenses incurred by this investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 283) as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the causes leading to the wreek of the White Star liner Titanic, with its attendant loss of life, so shocking to the civilized world.

Resolved further, That said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take such testimony as may be necessary to determine the responsibility therefor, with a view to such legislation as may be necessary to prevent, as far as possible, any repetition of such a disaster.

Resolved further, That the committee shall inquire particularly into the number of lifeboats. He rafts, and life preservers, and other equipment for the protection of the passengers and crew; the number of persons aboard the Titanic, whether passengers or crew, and whether adequate inspections were made of such vessel, in view of the large number of American passengers traveling over a route commonly regarded as dangerous from feebergs; and whether it is feasible for Congress to take steps looking to an international agreement to secure the protection of sea traffic, including regulation of the size of ships and designation of routes.

Resolved further, That in the report of said committee it shall recommend such legislation as it shall deem expedient; and the expenses incurred by this investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 6385) to regulate the taking or catching of sponges in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and Straits of Florida, the landing, delivering, curing, selling, or disposing of the same, providing means of enforcement of same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Fisheries.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 6386) to refund to William Henry, master of the steamship Vedamore the sum of $300 erroneously paid by him as a fine (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 6387) granting an increase of pension to James H. Meekin (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6388) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Hanes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on

A bill (S. 6389) for the relief of Richard Brady (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWN: A bill (S. 6390) granting a pension to Rachel Ann Bovee;

Navy Department to be known as the Coast Guard Bureau; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

(By request.) A bill (S. 6405) to authorize the condemnation of land along the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia, necessary for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge to the District line; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 6406) for the relief of Edwin P. Andrus and others; to the Committee on Claims.

WIDOWS' PENSIONS.

Mr. JONES. When the general pension legislation was pending before the Senate I offered an amendment to the bill proposing to increase the pension of certain widows of the Civil War. The amendment received considerable support. The only opposition to it was based on the desire that it should not be attached to the bill then under consideration. I wish to offer a bill covering substantially that subject, and I trust the Pension Committee will give it early consideration.

The bill (S. 6400) increasing pensions of widows of the Civil War was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL (H. R. 21477).

Mr. RAYNER submitted an amendment proposing to adjust and settle the loss sustained by the Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. by reason of the purchase and opening of the Chesapeake and Albemarle Canal from Norfolk to the Albemarle Sound, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LIPPITT (for Mr. OLIVER) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for a survey of a proposed waterway extending from the Ohio River at the mouth of the Beaver River, Pa., etc., intended to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CATRON submitted an amendment relative to a survey from Velarde, Mexico, to the sixth standard parallel south, New Mexico meridian, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER submitted an amendment relative to a survey at the mouth of the Bayou St. John, Orleans Parish, La., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRIGGS submitted an amendment relative to the construction of necessary cut-offs in the Rahway River, N. J., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment relative to securing and maintaining a shelter harbor at Scituate, Mass., known as the Glades, and between that locality and the Hazards, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appro-priation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the construction of new roads and the widening of the present roads in the Yellowstone National Park, in order to permit the use of automobiles therein, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to pay the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any money standing to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, in full payment of the award made by the commission appointed under treaty with those Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BACON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which were ordered to be printed and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 285) which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents or any subcommittee thereof be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee during the Sixty-second Congress, and to have the same printed for its use; and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the

SYSTEM OF RURAL COOPERATIVE CREDIT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on the 28th of last month the Committee on Finance reported the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions in other countries. I have two pamphlets, one giving an outline of the European cooperative credit systems relating to Germany (S. Doc. No. 574), and the other being a translation from the French, by Pauline Carter Biddle, on agricultural credit relating to the operations in France (S. Doc. No. 572). The pamphlets are very valuable in the consideration of this subject. I ask that they be printed each as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

THE ALASKAN QUESTION (S. DOC. NO. 573).

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President, at the last session of the American Mining Congress some very interesting papers were read by Mr. George E. Baldwin and others relative to the general development of Alaska. The papers are instructive and interesting, and I ask that they be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask leave to present a paper. On yesterday I stated the fact that I had received various communications from railroad employees in my State in regard to the compensation bill, as it is called, and that all of them, with one exception, were adverse to the passage of the bill, but that there was one organization in the State which had sent to me a communication asking me to favor the passage of the bill. Since then I have received from that organization another communication asking to withdraw their former request, and now making the request that I oppose the bill. It is a very conservative letter, and I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary

will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., April 15, 1912.

Hon. A. O. Bacon,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

Diar Sir: Since our recent correspondence relative to Senate bill No. 5382 and House bill No. 20487, generally known as the Federal accident compensation bills, this division has, upon resolution, reconsidered its former action declaring itself in favor of the legislation.

Upon further consideration we find that the bills in their present shape, should they become a law, would work a hardship upon the victims of accident, and we beg to advise you that upon the bills now pending our action has been reversed. We are opposed to this proposed legislation, and as long as the bills contain the objectionable features now present in them, particularly the inadequate schedule of compensation provided, we respectfully request that you will use your endeavors to defeat it. However, we are favorable to legislation which would fix a fair and equitable rate of compensation between employer and employee in the event of accident to the employee in the discharge of his duty. Our opposition to the bills now pending is based solely upon the defective character of those measures. We believe that these measures can be amended to provide adequate protection to the workman and at the same time accord complete fairness to the employer. This we earnestly hope may be accomplished, and we trust you will work to this end; but the passage of the bills in their present condition would, we are convinced, be more hurtful than for them to fall of passage completely.

G. B. Sondery,

Sceretary and Treasurer. G. B. SONDLEY, Secretary and Treasurer.

Approved.

H. D. WILLIAMS, Chief Conductor.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the joint national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and the Order of Railway Conductors, upon the same subject as the letter which has just been read. I ask that this letter, which is brief and temperate, may be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Congress Hall Hotel,

Washington, D. C., March 20, 1912.

Dear Senator: There is now pending in the Senate S. 5382 and in the House H. R. 20487, known as "A bill to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries resulting in disability or death to employees of common carriers by railroads engaged in interstate and foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

This bill is the result of deliberation by a commission appointed under joint resolution for the purpose of consideration of this subject. The organizations I am representing, namely, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Order of Italiway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Raliroad Trainmen, prepared and were active in aiding the passage of a resolution providing for the appointment of the commission.

The chief executives of the organizations I am representing, as well as myself, have given every phase of this question careful consideration, having attended the hearings, and have officially put ourselves and our organizations on record in favor of the pending bill.

Our members will be greatly benefited by the passage of this measure, and we carnestly desire your support of this legislation.

It is possible that some individual members of our organizations in some localities may be misled by false and misleading statements that have been circulated. These come, we think, from those who are personally interested in bringing damage sults, as it is a well-known fact that from 30 to 50 per cent of the amounts now recovered from railroads in damage sults is paid to claim attorncys.

The report of the commission, of which you have a copy, shows that the railroad employees will receive benefits of $15,000,000 per annum under the proposed legislation, while under the present law they receive only $10,085,000 per annum less the amount that goes to their attorneys. The $15,000,000, as can be seen from the report, will be paid without detriment to the railways.

T

Joint National Legislative Representative of Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, for a considerable time the conference committee of the two Houses have had under consideration the differences between the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 39) proposing an amendment to the Constitution for the election of Senators. I regret to say that the conference committee has been unable to come to any agreement. It is not my purpose to report the disagreement at this time, but to give the Senate notice that on Tuesday next that disagreement will be formally reported to the Senate. I give the notice now because of the widespread interest in the matter, so that Senators may know that the disagreement report will be made at the time I have stated, at which time the committee will also return the papers for such further action as the Senate may see proper to take.

MOTOR AND OTHER VEHICLES IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 571).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed: To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State supplying the information with respect to the Department of State called for by the Senate resolution of March 25, 1912. concerning the number of carriages, vehicles, motor cycles, and automobiles now owned by the Government or maintained at Government expense in the executive departments, and the purpose for which each of these vehicles is used.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 15, 1912.

CONGRATULATIONS TO PEOPLE OF CHINA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 1 to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 254) congratulating the people of China on their assumption of the powers, duties, and responsibilities of self-government, which was to strike out "Concurrent No. —" and insert "H. Con. Res. No. 50."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, it is rather a startling fact that since the year 1860 we have admitted to this country about 23,000,000 aliens, known as immigrants. It is an equally startling fact that in the last 12 years we have admitted about 9,000,000; and when in the year 1907 we received the largest number ever received in any one year during our history, to wit, 1,285,000, the country was aroused, and Congress authorized the appointment of a commission to investigate the whole subject of immigration.

That commission entered upon the discharge of its duties and spent the better part of two years, perhaps longer, in accomplishing its work, and it has made a report to Congress, which is embraced in about 40 volumes, largely statistical. The reports of the commission upon the different subjects studied will be found in volumes 1 and 2, and it is in these volumes that the ordinary reader will be able to find the general results of the commission's work.

In them will be found reports based upon their study of medical examinations abroad, of immigrant aid societies, of alien criminality, of the immigration situation in Canada. They have had prepared a dictionary of races, which every Senator will be very glad to have in his library, as well as a review of immigration legislation; they investigated and made reports upon the white-slave traffic, steerage conditions, physical assimilation, congestion of immigrants in cities, immigrants in agriculture, occupation of parents and children, as well as upon other subjects not here enumerated. They made a thorough investigation of the effect of immigration upon 20 of the leading industries of the United States, selecting those which are the most important in their proportions, like coal, iron, steel, cotton, woolen, mining, and others.

In doing this they sent their agents into 200 of the most important industrial communities in the United States, and they came in contact with about 700,000 individuals who are employed in such industries. They also made 23,000 family studies, and the result of their work, as I have said, will be found in these reports.

The recommendations of the commission are substantially embodied in the bill now under consideration. But before examining the bill in detail I propose to discuss the general features of the immigration problem as they seem to me to affect the social industrial, and political conditions in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator to say that the recommendations of the commission were substantially embodied in this bill. I have heard that one of the recommendations of the commission, and in my opinion the most important recommendation, the recommendation of a literacy test, is not embodied in this bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That was embodied in the bill as I introduced it. The committee recommended to the Senate the elimination of that feature. I am not in favor of its elimina-tion. I think it should remain a part of the measure, and I propose to address myself to that question before I complete my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to call attention to the fact that what I think and what I think the country thinks the most important, significant, and beneficent part of the recommendation of the commission was left out of this bill.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me for a moment?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. In reply to the Senator from Mississippi, I will state that the committee left it out of the bill simply because they thought it was a provision that should be in a separate measure and should not be included with the general administrative provisions. No action was taken in the committee as for or against the merits of the proposition. Personally, I have always favored it, and I favor it now. It was left out simply on the suggestion of certain members of the committee that was better not to put it on the administration bills. We dropped it out and left it to the Senate to decide whether it should be put in or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that dropping it out was like dropping the rôle of Othello out of the play.

Mr. LODGE. I agree.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we are to have it in a separate measure, we ought to know how soon we are to have the separate measure. Otherwise we ought to have it now.

Mr. LODGE, I agree with the Senator from Mississippi.

We ought to strike now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. W Mr. DILLINGHAM. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi, and I hope it will be retained in the bill.

As I was saying when interrupted, I want to review some of the general features of the problem of immigration as they have been disclosed by the commission's investigation, in the hope that a thorough examination of them will lead to the con-clusion which has been expressed by the Senator from Mississippl, that the educational test is, as the commission has found, the most feasible measure with which to meet the difficulties against which we have to contend.

We have to remember that in 1860 this was a Nation of only 31,000,000 people, but that the last census shows a population of ninety-two or ninety-three millions. The census also shows that the increase of population by immigration has been about 24 per cent—not over that—because of the large number of immigrants who return to their native countries, which may be stated in general to be about one-third of all who have been admitted; and also by the large birth rate in the United States. In other words, 76 per cent of the increase of population has been by birth and only 24 per cent by the admission of aliens.

In this connection it may be interesting to refer to the census reports to ascertain the number of those born abroad who have been residents of this country in each of the census years since 1860; and it is a remarkable fact that the proportion of those actually born abroad was larger in that year than it has been since. In 1860 the proportion of that class to the entire population of the country was 15.4 per cent; in 1870, 14.4 per cent; in 1880, 13.3 per cent; in 1890, 14.7 per cent; in 1900, 13.6 per cent; and in 1910, 14.5 per cent.

We must also, in view of the large and increasing numbers who have been coming to swell our population, study the reasons which have induced such immigration. Briefly stated, it is a recognition of the fact that the industrial conditions in this country are so much superior to the industrial conditions in the Old World that the more enterprising elements in the rural communities of Europe have been moved to action and have sought to improve their condition by coming to the United States. I need take no time to demonstrate that fact. Everything connected with the movement of immigration shows it-the difference in the wages here and abroad; the difference in the standards of living; the greater advantages here and the increased opportunities for advancement, both for parents and children, under American institutions.

This movement began prior to the close of the Civil War. The Pacific railroad, connecting the great East and the great West, had been projected, and the homestead act was in operation, and the great Northwest Territory had been opened to settlement. These facts were known abroad and, coupled with the fact that the United States had demonstrated the ability of a free people to maintain free institutions, a general move-ment was inaugurated which has greatly contributed to the development of the industries of the Nation. To understand the scope of such development and to find a reason for the increasing tide of immigrant allens who have come to make their homes with us since the close of the War between the States, we have only to recall the fact that previous to that war, during almost two centuries of our colonial and national life, we had opened up only 2,000,000 farms, while in the 50 succeeding years we opened up 3,500,000 farms, and are now able to boast of an agricultural area as large as Great Britain and substantially the whole of Continental Europe, if we except Russia. What was then an almost unoccupied territory is represented in this body to-day by Senators from 17 sovereign States.

The growth of railroad construction in the United States during the last 50 years is one of the marvelous events in the history of the world. During that period the mileage of such roads increased from 30,000 to 240,000 miles. The capital invested in railroads is now one-seventh of the entire wealth of the Nation, having reached the enormous sum of $18,000,000,000. The labor of construction and the labor of operating the railroads had been a constant invitation to the enterprising alien who was seeking to better his condition.

What is true of agriculture, what is true of transportation, is also true of our manufactures. In 1860 we were at the foot of the list of manufacturing nations. The products of our mills were then only about $2,000,000,000 in value annually. But in 1870 our industries were firmly established and our output equaled that of France. In 1880 our products equaled those Great Britain. In 1890 they equaled the products of Great Britain and France combined. In 1900 they were greater than those of Great Britain, Germany, and France combined. had become the largest manufacturing Nation in the world. 1910 the products of our mills were $7,000,000,000 greater in amount than there were 10 years ago.

With this unexampled growth in manufactures, in agriculture, and in transportation there has been a growth in the interstate commerce of the Nation. We are told by the statistician of the Government that the trade now existing between the States is greater in volume and in value than the entire foreign commerce of all the nations of the world combined.

have said that during this period we have admitted 23,000,000 alien immigrants. Substantially two-thirds of them have remained to become a part of the great American public. All have come intelligently, with a definite purpose to improve their condition. They have come in answer to the enormous demands for labor in the development of American industries, and in the main have well performed their part. To a great extent they have become citizens of the United States, and they and their descendants have been assimilated and become part of the great American public.

It may be well for us at this point to consider the fact that there are two distinct classes of immigrants who have come to the country during this period. The Immigration Commission, in their reports, have designated them the old immigration and the new. The old immigration is that which predominated prior to 1882, in which year the tide flowing from the north and west of Europe, from England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, the Scandinavian countries, Germany, France, and Holland, reached its height.

In the period between 1864 and 1882 we admitted of the old classes something over 6,000,000 immigrants, and 75 per cent of this entire number came from the Netherlands, France, the Scandinavian States, Germany, Great Britain, and Ireland. During that period 55.8 per cent of the whole went to the central division of the States, where agriculture predominated, and where expenditures, which stagger the comprehension, were being made in railroad construction and equipment, while only 31.1 per cent went to the Atlantic division of States, where manufacturing interests were more fully developed. During that period of activity nearly 80,000 miles of railroad were actually constructed, and this fact serves as an illustration of the increase and development along all the lines of production which called for labor and induced this great flow of immigration to our shores.

During the next period, between 1882 and 1910, conditions entirely changed. I have already called attention to the rapid advancement of the industries of the country after the close of the war, but that which followed was still greater. During the latter period capital invested in manufactures increased sevenfold, the wages paid to operatives and the product of our factories both increased fourfold. General prosperity prevailed throughout the country, cities increased rapidly in population and wealth.

Manufacturing, ordinarily, is conducted in the cities; or, if it is begun elsewhere, the manufacturing plants build up cities about them. As a result of the increase in production and trade. the urban population, which in 1890 was only 36.1 per cent of the whole, in 1910 was 46 per cent of the whole; and in the last 10 years the increase in the population in the cities has been 34.9 per cent, while that in the country has been only 11.1 per cent. Demands for labor came from every quarter. Great business undertakings were in evidence everywhere. I can not attempt to enumerate them, but may mention the fact that in the development of street railways a period of 17 years showed an increase of 223 per cent in the mileage of track and of 212 per cent in the number of men employed.

It is a significant fact that the prosperous conditions existing in this country are known abroad. When you remember that one-third of all who come from abroad return to Europe and disclose the difference between the conditions in the United States and those abroad, and that news travels from village to village with remarkable dispatch, you can understand why it is that those who are living in poverty and under hard conditions, but who are ambitious to improve their condition, become interested. Then, too, letters are constantly going from those who have employment in this country to their brothers, their fathers, and their friends, and when a letter is received in a European village it passes throughout the length and breadth of the place, everybody reads it, and the man there who is the pioneer in spirit and in instinct, the man who has courage to assume risks, is the man who hoards his small earnings and seeks the opportunity which conditions in the United States offer.

That immigration is the result of careful thought and preparation is illustrated by an incident connected with the debarkation at Ellis Island of 4,000 immigrants in a single day. I noticed that a large number of them had in their pessession railroad tickets entitling them to transportation from New York to their several points of destination in the United States. It occurred to me that they must have come intelligently and with a definite purpose in view. In reply to an inquiry of Mr. Watchorn, who was then commissioner of the port, he informed me that while he could not give the exact number he was under the impression that 60 per cent of all whose destination was beyond New York had prepared in advance for such transportation from New York to those points in the United States where they expected to find their homes.

The next year he caused a record to be made of the number holding railroad tickets when arriving, and reported to me that 79 per cent of all the immigrants who were admitted and whose destination was beyond the city of New York were so supplied. This clearly indicates that they had been in correspondence with friends in the United States, that every detail of the journey had been arranged and provided for, and it indicated the further fact that when they reached their destination they were morally sure of employment. This assumption is verified by the fact that the official records of 1908 show that 94 per cent of all who were admitted during that year reported that they had come to join friends or relatives, which indicates the same fact, that the coming of all these different classes was the result of forethought and painstaking preparation.

But a still more potent argument to that effect is found in the statistics which are published by the Bureau of Immigration showing the number who enter the United States in each given year. An examination of those figures will show that in every period of industrial depression in this country the number of arrivals from abroad decreases. After the panic of 1857 the number decreased from 251,000 in that year to 153,000 in 1860. After the depression of 1873, when we were receiving 459,000, the number decreased until 1878, when the number admitted was only 138,000. Owing to the depression of 1892, which extended to 1898, the number coming decreased from

Now, reverse the proposition. Take the prosperous periods in this country. In 1878 we were admitting only 138,000. 1882 we were admitting 788,000. Again, take the period extending from 1808 to 1907. We were receiving in the firsttending from 1808 to 1907. We were receiving in the first-named year only 229,000, and in 1907 we were receiving 1,285,000. All these facts go to show that the people who have come to cast their lot with us have come with a knowledge of existing conditions; that they have come intelligently and in the exercise of judgment based on facts.

The effect of business in this country upon the ebb and flow of immigration is clearly illustrated by the panic which came in 1907. As I have just said, we received in that year 1,285,000 immigrants. The panic came in October. By December it was known throughout Europe. In the year following December 1 we admitted only 573,000—less than half the number who came the year before, and of those already here 644,000 returned to Europe. In other words, the excess of departures over the admissions was 71,000 during that year. In 1908 we admitted 924,000, but 714,000 took their departure on account of depressed business conditions, and our net gain that year was only 209,000.

I have cited these facts to do away with what I think is the erroneous idea that the immigrants who have come to this country have been sent here by their governments, or that they have been dumped upon us without purpose and without reason on their part by the steamship companies, although I think the steamship companies are subject to criticism along certain lines.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is it not true that the steamship companies and other organizations have representatives in different parts of Europe organizing and bringing forward immigrants to this country constantly?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is true, and I will speak of that later on. I will say at this time, lest I forget it, that if the Senator will examine the report of the commission he will find that the agents of the steamship companies of Europe have large numbers of agents all through continental Europe, particularly in the rural districts, who are ticket sellers. Correspondence which fell into the hands of the commission has shown that to be the case. I remember that when in Budapest I saw letters in which instructions were given to those purchasing tickets how they were to escape from their country and how to make their way to the point of departure; that is, the point of departure of the steamer which they were to take. There is no question but what they have been very active, and the bill under consideration provides for meeting that evil.

When I spoke as I did regarding the large numbers coming to the United States during prosperous periods I had in mind the opinion which is prevalent in the country that the steamship companies have brought vast numbers that have been placed at their disposal by the governments of Europe and have simply dumped them in New York without knowledge or purpose on the part of the immigrants as to where they were going or what employment they would find. I do not think that such is the fact.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, somewhat apropos, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether in his investigation he or his committee discovered whether large employers of labor, whether in manufacturing or in mining or any other industry, have been directly or indirectly instrumental in bringing foreigners across the sea for service or had held out inducements to them to come here to enter into our domestic industries.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Missouri I will say that there was very little evidence discoverable by the committee indicating any direct action by manufacturers or producers of the character he has mentioned. The very fact that we have a stringent statute against it, the very fact that the Bureau of Immigration are all the time watching for any infringement of that law and are executing the law according to its letter, precludes the possibility of manufacturers or producers employing any direct agency to secure the coming of any large number. But I do say to the Senator from Missouri that there is in my mind no doubt whatever but that a large number who come to this country—I might say a majority who come to this country—come upon information which convinces them that when they reach here they will have employment.

Mr. STONE. From whom?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They get it from their brothers, their friends here. Take, for illustration, any manufacturing community in the United States. A man working there knows whether business is prosperous or not; he knows whether there is an adequate supply of labor and the prices that are paid. If he does not get it from the manufacturer himself, he gets it, we may say, by absorption, living under the conditions that he does. He writes to his friend to come; that wages are thus and so; that there is a demand for labor; and that he is sure of a job. He may go to the employer and say: "I have a brother or a cousin or an uncle who wants work, and if he comes over here I hope you will give him employment." In a brief way, I think, that explains the situation and the reason why so many come.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator would not mind my saying a

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I would be very glad to hear the

Mr. LODGE. I agree entirely with what the Senator has been just saying. I have given a great deal of attention to the contract-labor iaw, and in times past I was on the committee to investigate it. I think that law is very thoroughly enforced, and that open contracts to bring laborers in here may be said not to exist. But in indirect ways, such as the Senator from Vermont has described, large numbers, many thousands, come to this country. They come in a way by which they are practically insured employment beforehand, and get it in the method the Senator from Vermont has pointed out.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, the most recent immigration, that which has been coming since 1882, has been increasingly an immigration from southeastern Europe and is distinctly different in type and character from that of the old immigration which came previous to 1882 principally from northwestern Europe. While many of the later immigrants are unskilled laborers, we have to say for them that they are the best of the class from which they come. It is the peasant class, but, as I said before, those coming are the individuals the risk incident to such a change and the making of homes in the New World. They know the law relating to their admission into this country; they study it carefully, and unless they think they are sure to be admitted they do not ordinarily incur the risk of coming.

Now, I want to speak briefly regarding the quality of this new immigration.

I presume it is not known to everyone that there was no Federal immigration law previous to 1882. The old immigration all came in freely, without let or hindrance; but in 1882 the law was passed upon which we have been building ever since, until we have brought it up to its present degree of perfection. I look upon the present law as a good one, much better and more effective than people in general think it. Since 1882 the policy of the Government has been one of selection. While we have admitted aliens from all European countries, we have insisted that they shall be sound of body, sound in mind, and sound in morals, so far as we have been able to do so. The work of our immigration stations has been to see that this intention was carried into effect.

From 1899 to 1909, a period of 10 years, we admitted something over 8,000,000 aliens. Eighty-two and six-tenths per cent of that number were between 14 and 44 years of age—every one of them at an age to become self-sustaining. Twelve and three-tenths per cent of the whole number were under 14 years of age. Substantially all of these went into our common schools, as I will show before I have concluded my remarks. Only 5 per cent of the whole number admitted were over 45 years of age. Therefore those who came to us during that period of 10 years were not only sound in body and, so far as has been discovered, were sound of mind, and nearly 95 per cent of them were under

The law excludes paupers, persons likely to become a public charge, professional beggars, persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, and persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be, and are certified by the examining surgeons as being, mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such aliens in earning a living.

I do not know how that language can be made stronger. It is the provision of the act of 1907, which we carefully framed, in order to give the immigrant inspectors a broad discretionary power in debarring those who, in the absence of any specific disease, are so lacking in vitality that they are likely to become public charges.

We also reject those who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, anarchists, prostitutes or women or girls coming to the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for other immoral purposes, and persons who attempt to bring in that class.

The question may be asked how we enforce these laws, and do we in fact keep out the physically unfit? The law of 1907 places the burden of that work largely upon the steamship companies, and that provision of the law has worked most admirably. It provides, in substance, that if any steamship, company brings to this country idiots, imbeciles, insane persons, epileptics, those afflicted with tuberculosis or loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, it shall be compelled to carry such persons back to Europe free of charge and pay the Government of the United States a fine of $100 for each person of these classes rejected, provided the condition of those persons so rejected might have been discovered at the port of embarkation by a competent medical examination.

What has been the result of that law? In the 13 months following December 31, 1907, there were rejected at the ports of embarkation in Europe 27,799 intended immigrants as a result of the medical examination held at the expense of the steamship companies. Previous to that time the large numbers of rejections had operated badly upon the German nation. A large proportion of intended immigrants were coming on German lines, and their rejection at Bremen and at the other German ports left them stranded in German cities, to be cared for by the public au-To avoid this embarrassment the German Government established along its entire frontier from the south to the north what they call "control stations." At those control stations surgeons are located, and the expense of their maintenance is borne by the steamship companies. Immigrants coming from Russia or Austria or any of the adjoining countries into German territory to take passage, are examined at such control stations, and unless their physical condition is such that they can pass the American test, they are rejected and sent back to their homes.

the best of the class from which they come. It is the peasant class, but, as I said before, those coming are the individuals who have thrift and courage and enterprise enough to assume ship companies during that period of 13 months 39,681 persons, while we rejected at the American ports all told only 13,064; there were rejected for physical reasons during that period 52,745, but nearly 40,000 of them were rejected by the steamship companies under the operation of that law. Those rejected in 1910 at our ports were only 2 per cent of the arrivals, and those rejected in 1911 were 2.1 per cent.

So, when we have looked at the question from all these standpoints, it seems evident that those who have come to us represent a strong physical type; that 95 per cent of them are under 45 years of age; and that they come here with a pur-These are the encouraging features of this question.

It is interesting to notice how the immigrants have been distributed during the different periods. Prior to 1880, as I have already remarked, 55.8 per cent went to the Central Division of the States and 31.1 per cent to the Atlantic. Between 1880 and 1900 the conditions were reversed. Instead of 55 per cent going to the central division only 29.3 per cent went there, and instead of only 31.1 per cent going to the Atlantic division, 61.9 per cent found their way there.

During the period of 12 years, from 1899 to 1912, we admitted substantially 9,000,000 immigrants; 70,2 per cent of them went to the Atlantic division of States, which are known as the manufacturing States; 24.2 per cent went to the central division of States; but one-half of that 24.2 per cent went to the States of Ohio and Illinois, which are manufacturing States. So it is safe to say, I think, that a vast majority of the 82 per cent of the whole number so coming came to seek employment in manufacturing, mining, or smelting industries of the United States.

the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. BACON. What States does the Senator include in the Atlantic division?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Those usually included in that division in the Government publications. That division takes in New England, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New Jersey, and so along south. I can not enumerate all of them.

Mr. BACON. The object of my asking is—

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am taking the new census division.
Mr. BACON. I am asking for information.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.
Mr. BACON. Does the Senator in that classification include the South Atlantic States?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes. Mr. President, allow me to make a correction. This computation was made upon the basis of those who went to the Atlantic division of States as given by the Census Bureau. I can not enumerate them all.

Mr. BACON. I am not criticizing the Senator in any sense. I am simply asking for information and wanting to suggest something which might be of interest to note, and that is that the classification might be very much more restricted than that which would be embraced in the use of the term "Atlantic States."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. By dividing the South and the North. For the reason that while the large immigration to which the Senator refers is included within the general classification of the "Atlantic States," it is almost entirely confined to the States north of Cape Henry; in other words, there is little or no immigration south of the Chesapeake entrance at Hampton Roads.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the Senator is quite right in his

So that it is a very much more limited area than the classification would indicate.

Mr. DILLLINGHAM. Mr. President, it may be interesting as Mr. DILLINGHAM. well as profitable for the Senate to consider how this immigrant class are employed. The investigations show-and I am very glad to state the fact-that substantially 36 per cent of the present immigration comes from the classes which constitute what we have called the old immigration, those coming from northwestern Europe, who are mostly skilled laborers, and who find their way into the higher grades of manufactures in the United States. But, on the other hand, the improved machinery in our manufactories, the new methods of mining, and the new methods of carrying on other productive industries, are such that a very much larger proportion of common labor can be employed than formerly.

The investigation of the commission covered 37 leading industries in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains, and in that investigation they came in contact with 619,595 individuals. Of that vast army of workmen, 55.9 per cent, almost 60 per cent, was foreign born. In the iron and steel industry 57.7 per cent were foreign born, and in slaughtering, meat packing, in the Senator from North Carolina has called my attention to wool and worsteds, in coal, copper, leather, cotton goods, clothing, and silk goods, all taken together, 65.6 per cent of the employees were foreign born. I will not take the time to go through with the industries and show which nationality predominated or outnumbered the others in each particular one, but will come to some encouraging features in connection with the statement I have just made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Squator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire to ask if the figures given by the Senator relate to any particular section, or do they cover the entire country?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They cover the 37 industries east of the Rocky Mountains which were investigated. The list of those industries can be found in the opening pages of the first volume of the commission's report, if the Senator cares to look at them.

In 37 of the large cities of the United States an investigation was made of the number of children of foreign-born parents in the public schools. The commission came in contact with 1,815,000 pupils, of which 57.8 per cent were children of foreignborn parents. They also investigated parochial schools in 24 cities and came in contact with 221,000 pupils, of which 63.5 per cent were children of foreign-born parents.

A remarkable suggestion is contained in the census report of 1900 from which it appears that in the year 1900 of those who remained in the public schools of the United States for a full six months' period were the following: 73.3 per cent of the children of native-born parents, 80.7 of children of foreign-born parents, and 90 per cent of foreign-born children; in other words, there was a much larger proportion of the children of foreign-born parents and of the foeign-born children themselves who took advantage of the public schools for the full term of six months than there were of the children of native-born parents, a fact which should be recognized and credit be given where it is due.

Mr. President, while there is much to encourage us in our examination of this subject, there is also much that requires thoughtful consideration. We must examine the trend of the latest immigration and discover what that portends. There is no question that the last great influx of immigration, that which has come since 1899, has come because of the increase in the manufactures and basic industries of the United States. that between 1900 and 1910 approximately 50,000 manufacturing establishments went into operation, covering 360 different industries, which gave employment where employment was not given previous to that time. In that connection Senators should remember that during that same period of 12 years 72 per cent of the immigration came from southeastern Europe, and of this—
Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly. Mr. O'GORMAN. Can the Senator from Vermont inform us as to the approximate number of workmen employed in the 50,000 additional manufacturing establishments inaugurated during the period covered by the Senator's statement?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am unable to do so. It could be easily ascertained, but I have not done it. I have stated that in the investigation of the commission we received direct information from about 620,000 employees. That would be a very interesting inquiry, and I am sorry that I neglected to secure that information.

When interrupted I was saying that of the 72 per cent of recent immigration which comes from southeastern Europe, 82 per cent of it has gone to the Atlantic division of States, and about 60 per cent of that number were common or farm laborers in the countries from which they came.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me, I did not quite hear his statement. Do I understand that they were mostly farm laborers before coming to this country?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Common or farm laborers

Mr. STONE. Common or farm laborers; and into what line of industry have they entered here?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They have gone into all lines of industry wherein common laborers could be employed, but more particularly into what we call the basic industries, like iron and steel and the production of coal and copper, the smelting industries, and others of similar character.

Mr. OVERMAN. Last year only about 15 per cent of the million who came here—about that number, speaking in round numbers-went upon the farm.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is easily explained. I am glad that subject. The great problem in this country has been to secure farm labor. Farmers everywhere are demanding Our farmers would give employment at good wages and afford comfortable homes to this class of immigrants if they would consent to go with them. But you must remember when a man comes from southeastern Europe he, as a rule, has no knowledge of the English language; he is in a strange country; in a strange environment; he is among strange people; he can not make himself understood, nor can he understand others. Instinctively he goes to a settlement where he finds his own nationality, where he can indulge the habits of his previous life, and it is the most difficult thing possible to induce one of these men to segregate himself from those communities.

When he does accept employment on a farm it is as a rule near some manufacturing center. I have seen this in Vermont. live in a county which produces great quantities of granite, where the eight-hour day prevails in that and other industries When an immigrant goes upon a first-class farm 6 or 10 or 12 miles from the centers of the granite industry he is closely confined to farm work. The days are necessarily long, the milking must be done before breakfast in the morning and after supper at night. Even on Sundays he is not excused from what we in New England call "chores," because dairying is the chief feature of our agriculture, and his attendance mornings and evenings is required. Drawn by the attractions of shorter hours of labor in the near-by industries, by the longing for the companionship of his fellow countrymen, the temptation to change his employment is too strong in most instances to be resisted

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly. Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that reciprocity with Canada would help with respect to the American farm?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have never thought so.
Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question?
Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.
Mr. McCUMBER. Is not one of the prime reasons why the foreigner does not go to the farm the fact that he can earn a great deal more in cities for a less number of hours of labor?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was just about to make that remark. The man on the farm goes on Sunday after his chores to visit a man who is working eight hours a day in the city who has Sunday to himself and earns the wages of a skilled laborer. He becomes dissatisfied leaves the farm, and going in as a common laborer, works himself up until he becomes a skilled laborer with all the advantages appertaining thereto.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say to the Senator that we can hardly expect foreigners to go to the farm when the farmer's children are going to the city in order to secure larger compensation.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Each exercising the same amount of intelligence.

Mr. McCUMBER. We will never have a different situation until farm life can compete in these respects with city life.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I quite agree with the Senator. Mr. OVERMAN. Has not the effect of this great number of immigrants coming into the South Atlantic States been to drive out from our industries American labor, the foreign labor taking

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will give the statistics.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is not that true?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will allow me, I was just about to remark that the investigation of the conditions of these 37 leading industries of the United States, east of the Rocky Mountains, showed that of the whole number of employees only 20 per cent were native-born Americans of American parents, 60 per cent or nearly 60 per cent were foreign born, and about 15 per cent were of the second generation, the sons of foreign-born parents. I think perhaps that answers the Senator's question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have seen it stated that 76 per cent of the laborers in the steel plants were foreign born.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think that is true, but I do think it is true that the foreign born and the sons of foreign born—the first generation—may reach about that figure. upon examination that of the 86,089 employees in that industry from whom information was secured by the commission 57.7 per cent were foreign born and 13.4 per cent were sons of foreign-

Mr. OVERMAN. It has also been stated before the Senate that 85 per cent of the employees in the woolen mills at Lawrence were foreign born.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The statistics for Lawrence are given in this report. From these it appears that in 1910 the per cent of foreign born in the population of that city 21 years of age or over was 62.6.

Mr. BACON. Right in connection with what I previously asked the Senator, in ascertaining the percentage, it seems to me very important to differentiate between conditions in difsections of what are classified as the Atlantic States. In getting the percentage of foreign-born workers, laborers, in the manufacturing establishments, I presume all the manufacturing establishments of the Atlantic States are taken into account, and the fact that I am about to mention will greatly increase their percentage in a certain section, because there is no percentage in the other section.

Take, for instance, the cotton-manufacturing industry of the South, which is a very large industry. About as much cotton is manufactured in the South now as is manufactured in the Northern States. It is true that it is not of so great a value. because the manufactures are not of goods of as fine quality, but I believe the statistics will show that about half the cotton manufactures in the United States is produced in the Southern States, and mostly in three States-North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. I presume it is a fact that not 1 per cent or one-tenth of 1 per cent of the operatives in those factories are foreign born. They are made up exclusively of native-born operatives. Therefore, in taking the percentage of foreign born who are employed in the manufacturing enterprises of the Atlantic States the figures are scarcely accurate when you embrace the entire Atlantic States in the estimate, because there are different conditions in different parts. The result must be that in the Northern States, where all the foreign-born operatives are found, the percentage is very much higher than is in the Atlantic States at large, when you take the Southern Atlantic States into the computation, as they have none of it

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The investigation made by the commission could not, of course, be as broad as the investigation made by the Bureau of the Census. As I said in opening, the commission made their studies in the centers of large industries, and it was intended to secure and present a picture of the immigration problem as found in those centers. We could not, of course, take up every manufacturing establishment in the country, nor by particular sections. So we selected 37 of the most important industries east of the Rocky Mountains, and then sent to the most important centers of each particular industry, and there made our investigations to secure a general picture of the effect of immigration upon manufactures in the United States under typical conditions.

An examination of the reports of the Bureau of the Census would, of course, furnish the information that the Senator from Georgia suggests as to the production of manufactures in the several States, and it would be a most interesting study.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Vermont understands that I am not endeavoring to institute any comparison.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. But I was just suggesting, as the Senator was presenting a picture showing the foreign-born labor in the manufacturing industries of the United States, that it is scarcely a proper presentation of it to include a large part of the country where no foreign labor is engaged.

Will my friend, the Senator from Vermont, Mr. STONE.

permit me?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.

Mr. STONE. I want to be sure I understand what he has said. I think I do, but I want to be sure. Of the total number of employees in the various industries of the country— Mr. DILLINGHAM. In those investigated by the commission, the 37, the centers.

Mr. STONE. They are the principal industries?
Mr. DILLINGHAM. They are the principal industries.
Mr. STONE. Only 20 per cent of the operatives are native born and 80 per cent are foreign born?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; only 60 per cent. To be accurate, 59.9 per cent were foreign born. I said about 60. The other 15.2 per cent are the sons of foreign-born parents-children of the first generation.

Mr. STONE. But born in this country?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But born in this country.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator-and I am doing this purely for information-whether his investigations show a continuing and progressive decrease, so far as numbers go, in the employment of American-born citizens, and a progressive and a continuous increase in the number of foreignborn people employed in these industries?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In reply to the Senator from Missouri, I can say that the commission were unable to trace the industries for any series of years back of the year when they made their examination. They took the conditions as they found them in that particular year and ascertained the number of each class employed at that time. Of course, the figures of the last census were not available to the commission, but at this time one could easily trace the growth of manufactures during the last 10 years.

We have been able to trace the increase of immigration to this country during the last 10 years from official sources. is undoubtedly true that the manufacturing establishments of this country have employed an increasingly large number of We have no data upon which to answer the quesimmigrants. tion whether they are employing more native Americans than they were five years ago.

I was interested to know the fact for its own Mr. STONE. value, and then for a further reason. I am not going to make this observation with any thought of introducing a controversy or a discussion between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] and myself or anybody else, for it would not be proper in the speech of the Senator from Vermont, even if he were so kind as to permit it; and he is always kind enough to permit almost anything, whether he ought to or not. But the Senator from North Dakota made an observation a moment ago to the effect that the higher wage, the higher earning capacity in the centers of industry in manufacturing articles of that kind was inducing the young men of the farm to leave the farm and engage in other lines of employment, and it occurred to me that if foreign-born people immigrating to this country were coming in and crowding the industries and taking possession of such employment, that there was not much room for the native-born, farm-born young men to go to the centers of industries. However, I merely put that in in passing, and not to excite any controversy about it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. When interrupted I was speaking about the number employed in the 39 industries investigated of nativeborn Americans and foreign born and their sons. I had given the percentages of each. I wish now to add that substantially one-half of this body of foreign-born employees come from the south and east of Europe. Anyone interested in the statistics upon that subject will find them in volume 1, page 102, of the report. From an examination it will be found that the number of each nationality employed in the manufactures are indicated in the following order: First, the Poles, and they constitute substantially one-tenth of the whole number; the Slovaks, South Italians, North Italians, Magyars, the Lithuanians, and the Croatians. Those are the classes that are most frequently employed.

Moreover, they are recent comers. Cards received from 291,000 of this class indicated that 40 per cent of them have been in this country less than five years, and of those from southeastern Europe as a whole, 50 per cent of them have been here less than five years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President— Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator. Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator in this connection if he has the figures to give to the Senate showing the percentage of those immigrants who come in here and stay only three or four years and then return?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will come to that a little later, if the Senator pleases. I think I have the figures among my papers.

They are not before me at the moment.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has passed it, but I want to ask another question. He gave a little while ago the percentage of the foreigners employed in the industries which he said the commission investigated. He also gave the percentage of the children foreign born. I want to ask the Senator if he can give us the percentage of recent immigrants employed as unskilled laborers as distinguished from the percentage of foreigners who are employed as skilled and unskilled?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is impossible to do so, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina. The division line between them is very indistinct, and the commission were unable to determine that question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that in most of these industries, especially in the steel industry, the textile industry, and in the coal mines, nearly all of the unskilled labor is now foreign born?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think that is a fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has not the percentage? Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know whether I understood the question of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator if he can give us the percentage of foreigners who are employed in the industries investigated by the commission, especially in the textile industry and the iron and steel industry and the mining industry, and in railroad and structural work.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have already stated that of all those reached by the commission who were employed in the iron and steel industries 57.7 per cent were foreign born and 13.4 per cent were the sons of foreign-born fathers. It also appears that of those engaged in bituminous coal mining reached by the commission 61.9 per cent were foreign born and 9.5 per cent were sons of foreign-born fathers. In the woolen and worsted industries 61.9 per cent were foreign born and 13.7 per cent were sons or daughters of foreign-born fathers. In the cotton industry the foreign born were 68.7 per cent of the whole, and the children of foreign-born fathers were 9.4 per cent. I am unable to state what percentage of those employed in railroad construction were foreign born.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that something near 85 per cent of unskilled labor in these industries is foreign born.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am unable to state that. That would be mere guesswork on my part, and I would not undertake to express an opinion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say to the Senator that an investigation made in the Finance Committee with reference to the steel industry indicated that over 80 per cent of the unskilled labor in those industries, especially in the iron industry, was foreign born.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bristow in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.
Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I have attended nearly every meeting, and I think I attended every one of the hearings of the Finance Committee while the metal schedule was under consideration, and I remember no such testimony having been given as that there was 80 per cent of unskilled labor foreign born in the steel manufacture of this country. I can not remember who gave that testimony.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I will have no trouble in furnishing the testimony to the Senator. I made a statement somewhat similar to that in a speech I made some days ago. I think it is a fact that not 80 per cent of all the labor, but 80 per cent of the unskilled labor in the coal mines and in the steel and iron industry and in railroad construction and in general construction work and in the textile industries, in the New England and Northern States especially, is foreign born.

Mr. DHLINGHAM. I am very sorry that I am unable to furnish the Senator the information he desires.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me I will state that in an investigation of the Steel Trust it was shown that 80 per cent of the unskilled laborers there were foreign born, or 76 per cent of all the laborers employed in the steel industry in

Mr. SMOOT. That included all the children who were born of foreigners, and many of them had become naturalized citizens and were at the time when the testimony was given naturalized citizens. It is true that they were called foreign born, just as if a laborer is a German they call him foreign born, and if he is a Frenchman he is called foreign born.

Mr. OVERMAN. Nevertheless they were foreign born.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the children were not foreign born; they were born in this country.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was testified before the committee by the managers of those institutions.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the report of the Immigration Commission shows that something over 40 per cent of the immigrants coming to this country now do not remain, but they return. I think the census shows that that estimate of the commission was far below the facts, and instead of 40 per cent of the immigrants who are coming now returning after a stay here of a few years, it is probably 50 per cent. The bulk of those immigrants come from southern and eastern Europe. They do not stay here long enough to raise families. They do not bring their wives and their children with them. They come here for the purpose of exploiting our markets. They are employed in these industries until they accumulate a little something, and then they go back to their homes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I had intended to speak upon this subject before completing my remarks, and will do so; but before doing it I want to resume the thread of my remarks by saying that the household studies that were made by the commission would indicate that a majority of the foreign born who are engaged in the general industries are common laborers, because of the amount of wages they are receiving. The commission received returns from 26,616 heads of families, and the average earnings of each was $475; and that being the average, the better, the skilled laborers, received a much higher compensation.

On the other hand, the average yearly earnings of the Lithuanians, Magyars, Mexicans, Poles, Portuguese, Roumanians, Russians, Servians, Slovaks, Syrians, Turks, and South Italians was only $396.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DHLLINGHAM. Certainly. Mr. O'GORMAN. Can the Senator state what occupations were pursued by these nationalities whose annual earnings average about $300?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. We were making at that time an investigation of the 37 industries, which I have already mentioned. In connection with that work we made what were called household studies to know how much the family earned, and from those studies, as I have just stated, we received returns from something like 26,000, I think, and the average earnings of the family were, as I stated, $475, but the average earnings of those coming from some of the southeastern countries were much less than that, or, as I already stated, $396. That was the point I was making

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do I understand that the aliens to whom the Senator has just alluded are engaged in manufacturing industries?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They are.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And their earnings average about $300 a

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, no; the average earnings were $475. The earnings of the classes which I enumerated were $392.

Those from southeastern Europe? Mr. DILLINGHAM. From southeastern Europe.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Were those the earnings of the head of the family or of the entire family?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Of the head of the family.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what industries they were engaged in?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The report shows 39 of the principal industries, covering everything from locomotive building down to making collars and cuffs.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the report show what part of each year they were employed?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am coming to that.

Mr. STONE. Does it show the per cent of the lower-wage

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; that is not possible.

Another significant feature of that class of immigrants, which have been admitted during the last 10 or 12 years, and which ought to be considered in connection with the legislation which is now before us, lies in the fact that they are so largely single Out of nine and one-half million who came between 1899 and 1910, 69.5 per cent were males, and of those coming from southern Italy, Russia, Bulgaria, and Servia 85.5 per cent were

This feature is emphasized by the further fact that of males who were 20 years old and over, coming from Austria-Hungary, Russia, Montenegro, Lithuania, Syria, Servia, Slavonia, and Roumania, 53 per cent were unmarried. Coming back to all the wage carners examined in the industries, it was found that only 55 per cent of them were married, but three-fourths of those who were married had left their wives in Europe. I think it is safe to say, therefore, that from 70 to 85 per cent of all the males from southeastern Europe who are employed in the United States to-day are either single men or are living singly in the United States.

Their purpose in coming here is clearly stated by the commission on page 499 of volume 1 of the reports, and to this I wish to call attention. The commission says:

The life interest and activity of the average wage earner from southern and eastern Europe has seemed to revolve principally about three points: (1) To earn the largest possible amount of immediate earnings under existing conditions of work; (2) to live upon the basis of minimum cheapness; and (3) to save as much as possible. The ordinary comforts of life as insisted upon by the average American have been subordinated to the desire to reduce the cost of living to its lowest level.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is there any report as to how much money those people send back to Europe?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will come to that in a moment, if the Senator please. I intended to speak of that next.

In 1907 there was remitted from the immigrant class in the United States to Europe $141,000,000, indicating how carefully these men have carried out the purposes which the commission say they have in mind. Of this amount, $55,000,000 went to Austria-Hungary, $52,000,000 went to Italy, and $15,000,000 went to Russia. The balance was divided between other countries in smaller amounts.

These men are not charity seekers; they are not lawbreakers; they are industrious, economical, and thrifty; they come here and their first object is to secure an American rate of wages and to live just as cheaply as possible. They hoard their earnings and send them abroad, and eventually most of them go back themselves

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me, let me ask him if that is not a very low estimate. How does the Senator ascertain those facts? I have seen it stated that the post-office reports show that an average of over $90,000,000 is sent through the post office. The returning immigrants last year amounted to some 300,000. Is there any way to ascertain how much money they carried back in their pockets?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is impossible to tell.

Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore $141,000,000 is not a true estimate of the amount of money they take back or send back from this country of their wages saved?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is a moderate estimate, based first upon what are known as immigrant banks; and Senators who want to know about immigrant banks will find a full account of them in the commissioner's report.

Mr. OVERMAN. My point is that there is a great deal you could not possibly arrive at, because as many as 200,000 and 300,000 go back every year. The estimate is, as I have seen it, I think, in your report, that each immigrant carries back in his pocket as much as $100.

Mr. DHLLINGHAM. I do not remember what the amount is stated to be, but what I was about to say is that this estimate was based upon the reports of immigrant banks, so called, and upon the bankers through whom they do business or through whom the remittances abroad are made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I read a paragraph from Dr. Jenks's book upon this subject:

The importance of immigrant banks as agencies in the transmission abroad of immigrant money is indicated by the fact that approximately one-half of the estimated amount of $275,000,000 sent abroad by aliens in 1907 passed through the hands of immigrant bankers.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Now, about the manner in which these people live a word should be said. The commission say in their report:

The recent immigrant males, being usually single, or, if married, having left their wives abroad, have been able to adopt in large measure a group instead of a family living arrangement, and thereby to reduce their cost of living to a point far below that of the American or older immigrant in the same industry or the same level of occupations. The method of living usually followed is that commonly known as the "boarding-boss system." Under this arrangement a married immigrant or his wife or a single man constitutes the head of the household, which, in addition to the family of the head, will usually be made up of 2 to 20 boarders or lodgers. Each lodger pays the boarding boss a fixed sum, ordinarily from $2 to $3 per month, for lodging, cooking, and washing, the food being usually bought by the boarding boss and its cost shared equally by the individual members of the group. Another common arrangement is for each member of the household to purchase his own food and have it cooked separately. Under this general method of living, however, which prevails among the greater portion of the immigrant bouseholds, the entire outlay for necessary living expenses of each adult member ranges from $9 to $15 each month. The additional expenditures of the recent immigrant wage earners have been small. Every effort has been made to save as much as possible.

Right in this connection another thing that should be con-

Right in this connection another thing that should be considered by the Senate is the fact that in the communities where they more largely congregate they do not come in touch with American life; they live in colonies, where they speak only their own language. Very few of them have family connections. They do not even have the advantage which comes from having children in the public schools through whom to come in touch with community interests. The result is that they lead an isolated life, and come less in touch with American life than any other class of American immigrants whom we have ever received.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, this is a very interesting statement the Senator is making. He says that large numbers of foreigners come here with one supreme idea, as he expresses it. Their interest in life is to get the largest wage and live at the least possible expense. That is very well; that is what most men ought to do, I presume; but is that done with a view of mere accumulation, of frugality, or is it done with a view of getting a certain sum of money deemed sufficient for their purposes and going back to their native land to live? The other question is, Does the Senator know about what proportion by way of percentage of those who come and live and toil and save in this way go back to their native land and do not return?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, while I have not accurate statistics at my command at this time, I will say that the number of the class I am discussing, from southeastern Europe, who return is much larger than the general proportion of returns among immigrants as a whole. Those returning, as a whole, are about one-third of those admitted, but among some of the nationalities from southeastern Europe as many as 50 per cent of them return

Mr. STONE. And remain?
Mr. DILLINGHAM. And remain at home, I think. Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether the statement is true or not and whether the Senator investigated it, but I have seen it stated that a certain Government in Europe had a contract with steamship companies to bring so many people to this country with the idea of returning. Was there such a contract as that in existence?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That matter was fully investigated by the commission. It troubled the Senate Committee on Immigration very much at the time the report was circulated, and it was investigated by this commission with this result: There was an effort made on the part of the Government of Austria-Hungary to establish a steamship line between Trieste and the United States, a fortnightly line. They gave a subsidy to the steamship company assuming the undertaking, and one feature of the contract was that if the amount received from steerage passengers fell below a certain sum the Government was to make good that sum as a part of the subsidy. But, on the other hand, the commission found that the Government was very much opposed to emigration of Hungarian subjects and that the was not entered into with the purpose to encourage emigration from that country.

I may say, and I say it in justice to the Government of Hungary, that they are just as anxious to develop the industrial possibilities of that country as Germany has been to develop hers, and they are inclined to discourage the emigration of Hungarians to this country. They prefer to have them remain at home and engage in the development of their own country.

That is a fact which is thoroughly fixed in my mind. I have it upon authority which I can not doubt; nor have I any doubt to-day that an agreement can be made under the authority of the act of 1907 between the Governments of the United States and Hungary by which the immigration from that country will be very much limited. Other European nations are try will be very much hinted. Other European nations are entertaining similar views. Italy, for instance, formerly en-couraged emigration and was glad to have America receive a large number of south Italians, but I found upon visiting Italy in 1907 that conditions had changed because of the large number who had emigrated to the United States. The exodus from southern Italy had increased the price of farm labor from 25 cents a day to 40 cents and, in some instances, to 50 cents a day. So that even Italy has ceased to encourage her people to emigrate to the United States. Italy has been very much enriched by the money that has come from the United States both through her immigrant class and through tourists who visit Italy from America.

I had not intended in this connection to speak of that element in immigration known as the criminal class, but I might just as well say now what I have in mind about that class. I do not think the educational test I am now advocating will help us a particle to keep out the criminal classes because the criminal classes can read and write. They come from the cities rather than from the country districts and from all parts of Europe, and almost invariably are more or less educated.

But there is a way of reaching that difficulty. I think it can be done through an international agreement, by the appointment of a commission under the provisions of the immigration act of 1907, or through our diplomatic corps. The matter has been under consideration by our Government, and from what I know of the situation I can not doubt that that can be done.

It can be done for this reason. Almost every country in Europe keeps a civil record of the life of every subject. If a man has ever been convicted of crime, that record shows the facts, and a simple agreement that no passport shall be issued to a person without attaching a certificate indicating that he has never been prosecuted for crime would solve the problem. If we do not solve the problem by international agreements, we can lay an additional obligation on the steamship companies for that purpose, as we have done for other purposes. We can say to them, "You shall not bring to the United States any person who failed to secure from the proper authorities a certificate that he never has committed a crime.'

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The criminal class can not be said to be confined alone to those who actually or technically commit a crime before they come here. There is another class which, in my opinion, must be covered very largely by the illiterate class. It is that class of people who may be manipulated and controlled and influenced by the criminal class who are literate; in other words, the class of people who are most easily used in the case of a disposition to commit crime in this country. Does not the Senator think that the literacy test would be beneficial?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Ch, yes; indeed, I am advocating the literacy test.

Mr. BORAH.

Mr. BORAH. I know the Senator is.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. But I was speaking of the particular class which we look upon as the criminal element in immigra-tion. I had those in mind when I made that remark. I was not speaking of any special class from any particular section, because they come from all parts of Europe. We have an agreement with Italy by which passports are required of all persons coming from that country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator suggests that we can secure this by an agreement through the office of a commission. I should like to ask the Senator what obstacle there is in making it a part of our laws admitting immigrants? Why can we not place in a statute that requirement which the Senator thinks would be beneficial?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It could be done. There is no question about that. I think it could be done better through an arrangement between the Governments, because, for instance, if we had an agreement that we would only admit those who had received passports from their Government, then we could secure an agreement with that Government as to conditions under which those passports would be issued, and they would require proof of all necessary facts before responding to applications.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator provide in his bill that we admit only those who do have a passport from their Govern-

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no objection whatever to such a provision.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not making any suggestion, because I have not given the matter the study the Senator has.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no objection to that; but I do not think the mere giving of a passport would be of any particular advantage to us, knowing how passports are issued.

If, however, we had an agreement with the Government that passports should not be issued to the classes enumerated, and then go on and make our terms on which they should be issued, I think a passport would become very efficient in helping us to exclude undesirable immigrants.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the question whether we can secure such an agreement is an open question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think I have reason to know that we

Mr. McCUMBER. And the question whether or not we could enact it into a law might be a different proposition. I myself can see no reason why we should not provide by law not only that a passport should be issued, but the conditions and recitations upon that passport as to the conduct of each individual.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What I had intended to be understood to say was that I think, first, it can best be reached through agreements, and if it can not be reached in that way, then I think that we can adopt a provision of law which will accomplish what we desire.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator have that suggestion in his bill? Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at present.

Now, Mr. President, coming back to the suggestion I was making in regard to the condition of the recent immigration from southeastern Europe, the commission find that the market is overcrowded with common labor at the seats of many of our basic industries, and they base that conclusion very largely upon a comparison of the weekly wage of the laborer and his yearly receipts. By such comparisons it appears that in the iron and steel industry the weekly wage of those investigated was $14.35, while the average amount received for the whole year was only $346, indicating that they were employed less than half the time. So going through the different industries—that is an extreme case—we found that in the bituminous coal-mining industry and in the silk-manufacturing industry, and in the woolen and worsted industries those with whom we came in contact seemed to have employment less than two-thirds of the time.

In the leather, clothing, and oil-refining industries they were employed over three-fourths of the time, while in the cotton industries they were employed more than four-fifths of the time. The same was true of those employed in sugar refining and in the boot and shoe industry, while in the slaughtering industry employment seems to have been given nine-tenths of the time, and in furniture, glove manufacturing, collars, cuffs, and so forth, they were employed most of the time.

This information is not accurate, but it is based upon the yearly receipts as compared with the weekly wage. We found in many of the localities where the basis industries are carried on that men were in fact employed only three or four days out of the week. This was true to such an extent that the recommendation of the commission to which I have alluded was adopted. If the Senate please, I want to call attention to the recommendation of the commission as a result of these conditions. They say:

tions. They say:

8. The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in the industries of the country as a whole—a condition which demands legislation restricting the further admission of such unskilled labor.

It is desirable in making the restriction that—

(a) A sufficient number be debarred to produce a marked effect upon the present supply of unskilled labor.

(b) As far as possible, the aliens excluded should be those who come to this country with no intention to become American citizens, or even to maintain a permanent residence here, but merely to save enough by the adoption, if necessary, of low standards of living, to return permanently to their home country. Such persons are usually men unaccompanied by wives or children.

(c) As far as possible the aliens excluded should also be those who, by reason of their personal qualities or habits, would least readily be assimilated or would make the least desirable citizens.

Then the commission go on to name a number of ways in

Then the commision go on to name a number of ways in which it could be done, but they say in closing:

All these methods would be effective in one way or another in securing restrictions in a greater or less degree. A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

Mr. LODGE. All but one favor that test.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. All but one. Mr. Bennet disagreed with

The commission as a whole recommends restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations, furnishes in its report reasons for such restriction, and points out methods by which Congress can attain the desired result if its judgment coincides with that of the

I have called attention especially to these various features of this class of immigration in order that the Senate may see how the educational test may bear upon the problem to be solved. If you examine the evidence relating to the old immigration, to which I have so many times referred, you will find that only 270 per cent of the whole were illiterate, while of the new immigration, taken as a whole, 35.6 per cent are illiterate. average of the whole would be about 26 per cent.

Mr. STONE. What is the dividing line between the old and the new immigration?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Well, I presume the Senator was out when I referred to that.

I am sorry to say that I was. Mr. STONE.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The immigration we received more largely down to 1882 came from northern Europe-England. Ireland, Scotland, the Scandinavian countries, Germany, and other sections of northwestern Europe. We call that the old immigration. That which we term the new immigration has come since 1882; it has been increasingly large from south-eastern Europe. In the last 10 or 12 years more than 70 per cent of those admitted have come from those countries. While the average rate of illiteracy among all immigrants is about 26 per cent of the whole, the rate among these of the new immigration is 35% per cent. In some nationalities the percentage of illiteracy is much higher than the average. Among the Portuguese, Turks, Mexicans, South Italians, Lithuanians, Syrians, Ruthenians, East Indians, Bulgarians, Montenegrins, Servians, Dalmatians, Bosnians who have recently been admitted 52.4 per cent of them can neither read nor write; but those that come to the-

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.
Mr. OVERMAN. In this great investigation that has been made by the Senator from Vermont and his commission, was there any evidence of this country being made the dumping ground for insone persons sent over by other countries to this country to get rid of them?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not a fact that in the State of New York, say, one-half of the insane people in asylums are foreign

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the figures which the Senator from North Carolina has in

But the fact about insanity is that it exists in highest ratio in the most highly civilized nations. We are not standing in fear of insanity from southeastern Europe. The larger number of cases come from the very nations from whom we would like to secure our immigration.

Mr. STONE. Unless anarchy is insanity.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Unless anarchy is insanity. The report of the commission deals with this subject, and the statistics bearing upon it are illuminating. They give the number of insane per thousand inhabitants in different nations, as well as the proportion of them which are confined in insane hospitals. The Senator will find the insane immigrants mostly come from the most highly civilized nations of Europe.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose the Senator from Vermont has read the remarkable statement I had printed in the RECORD, coming from the governor of New York. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read a letter from the president of the New York State Board of Charities.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have seen that letter, and we have placed in this bill a provision requiring a special examination for insanity.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am glad that has been done. Mr. DILLINGHAM. We have been in full communication with the bureau of lunacy in New York and with all the State officers, and we have provided in this bill for a special scientific, technical examination of aliens coming to our ports.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am glad the Senator has put that provision in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, we have tried in every way to strengthen the provisions for the examination of immigrant allens so as to reach cases of insanity. That has been one of the administrative features of the bill to which special attention has been given.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And the committee have given hearings on the subject.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator from Vermont has said, we have been in communication with the New York authorities Mr. LODGE. and we have been doing everything in that direction that we could. It is very difficult sometimes to get the records or to detect insanity.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am very glad the committee has considered the matter. I have noticed that provision in the bill and I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. LODGE. We very strongly appreciate the necessity of reaching this matter, and as the Senator knows, there has been a restriction on the admission of insane aliens for a long time, though I think the law has been inadequate.

Mr. OVERMAN. That brings me to this point: We have had restrictions along that line, and we propose now to make them more drastic; but having had those restrictions heretofore, has the law been honestly administered and have there not been great frauds in admitting insane people to this country in the past?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there have been any frauds in the admission of that class.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there have not been frauds, how did they get in here?

Mr. LODGE. Because the law was not sufficiently rigid.

That was one reason. Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think there is another reason for

Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ideho?

Mr. DHLINGHAM. In just a moment. Mr. OVERMAN. I want to hear what the Senator from Vermont has to say.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think there is another reason for that. The medical examination has undoubtedly been more directed to the physical condition than to the mental condition of the immigrants. The examinations have been conducted by a very competent board of surgeons, I have no doubt, but the proposition at the present time is to have added to that force men who are skilled in mental diseases and who will be more able to detect them. Then, too, there is another fact that should be borne in mind, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, and that is that insanity does not always develop at an early age and it is not always discernible to the ordinary observer or even to the expert.

Immigrants that come from the most highly civilized countries of Europe have in large proportion a tendency toward it, and many of them become insane soon after arriving here. They are under new conditions, under different environments, they are moved upon as they have not been moved upon at home, and therefore it may be that very many of them become insane after reaching the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator that the law has not been administered from the fact that we have not had alienists to examine the immigrants.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. And by reason of that fact many insane persons have succeeded in passing the surgeons. I am very glad that this drastic provision has been incorporated in the bill, and I hope it will prove effective.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say practically what the Senator from Vermont has already said. It seems to me that in all probability the difficulty with reference to this matter is the fact that insanity is about the most illusive affliction that one can have and the most difficult to prove. I take it that it would be very difficult to enact any law which would provide a certain test of this disease. I presume that that is one reason why it has been impossible to protect the situation, rather than that of fraud, because it is difficult to prove and difficult to know, especially in these times, when a man is insane.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is no question about the force of the Senator's suggestion. I had intended, Mr. President, to run through the bill which is before us, and call attention to some of the peculiar features of it, but I have spoken already too long.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator ought to go through the bill. The Senator has spoken for a long time, and I think we had better go on with this subject to-morrow and let him finish his speech then, for it is a most interesting question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have very little more to say. to-day to present the general features of the question as they seem to me to bear upon the problems which we have to solve in this country, and I have been leading up to-day to the educational test as the most important one feature of the bill through which we can restrict the number coming to America of those whom we look upon as being the least desirable type

This bill is based in a large part on the immigration act of 1907, which has proved to be a most effective measure in its application. This bill contains many new provisions, the greater part of which were recommended to Congress by the Immigration Commission. Other provisions are based on recommendations which appear in the last annual report of the Commissioner

General of Immigration.

The bill proposes the repeal of all existing Chinese-exclusion laws, except that section of the law of 1882 which refers to the naturalization of Chinese and the substitution of a provision excluding from the United States the following:

Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, whether subjects of Chine or subjects or citizens of any other country foreign to the United States; persons who are not eligible to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise excluded by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The two provisions next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations:—

This is the existing law, but it should be applied to the new provision-

Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, capitalists, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fall to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes, shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 20 of this act.

Briefly stated, the United States naturalization law extends the privilege of citizenship to "aliens being free white persons, and to aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent," while the Chinese-exclusion act of May 6, 1882, specifically states "that no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship." As stated, the repeal of the latter provision is not proposed. It is well understood that foreign-born persons of the Mongolian race, including the Chinese, Japanese, and Koreans, are not eligible to citizenship under our law, and it is probable that at least the greater part of the people of India and other countries of Asia are likewise excluded from the privilege. At present the Japanese would be little, if at all, affected by the proposed legislation, as under a not permitted by the Japanese Government to come to the United States, the Government of Japan withholding passports from them.

Granting that the long-established naturalization policy of the United States Government ought to be perpetuated, the exclusion from the country of any considerable body of persons who must remain aliens obviously is undesirable. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to accomplish the exclusion of such persons. Under the present laws Chinese of the professional classes are permitted to enter the United States, but are subjected to certain regulations and restrictions which do not apply in the case of persons of any other race or nationality. Under the proposed law the Chinese are placed on an equality with every other people in this regard. Moreover, at present Chinese of the excluded classes are singled out for different and more severe treatment than are the excluded classes of other races, and while the Commissioner General of Immigration recommends a consolidation of the Chinese and immigration laws, he would retain all the harsh features of the former and differentiate in several important particulars between the Chinese and aliens of other races seeking admission to the United States. The law proposed by this bill would regulate the immigration of all aliens according to the same standard on the theory that if severer restrictions seem necessary in the case of any particular race they should be impartially applied to all races. In the preparation of this bill some desirable features of the Chinese laws which do not appear in the immigration act have been made applicable to all aliens and where the laws differ only in detail these differences have been eliminated. As a matter of fact, there is only one important detail of the Chinese-exclusion laws which is not incorporated in the bill in some form. That detail is the provision contained in section 6 of the exclusion law of 1884, which requires that every Chinese person entitled to admission to the United States-shall obtain the permission of and be identified as so entitled by the Chinese Government, or of such other foreign government of which at the time such Chinese person shall be a subject, in each case to be evidenced by a certificate issued by such government.

I may say here that I am perfectly willing that that provision shall remain in the law if it is desired-

Mr. LODGE. I think that is retained in the present amendment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It should be said, however, that the certificate has been of very little value. It is not received as evidence of the right of the immigrant to enter this country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I understood the Senator from Vermont correctly. Speaking specifically, what changes have been made or will be made by the Senator's bill with reference to Chinese immigration? Mr. DILLINGHAM. Substantially none. Previous to this Mr. DILLINGHAM. Substantially none. Previous to this we have had the general immigration law, and we have had the Chinese-exclusion law, and they have been administered by different divisions of the Bureau of Immigration. The department is anxious to consolidate them. By this bill we bring them under one administration. We have raised the requirements connected with the admission of European immigrants to place them upon a level with the regulations governing Chinese immigration in all respects, except the requirement of certificates by those coming from China. That is of no practical value, and I do not care whether it is in the bill or whether it is omitted. Let me illustrate. We now give a certificate to the Chinese immigrant, when he is admitted to this country, showing that he has been properly admitted. Under this bill we give a certificate to every admitted immigrant, so that he can have the evidence that he has been legally admitted. In addition to that, we send a duplicate copy of such certificate to the Bureau of Naturalization. When that immigrant comes to be naturalized, he shows his certificate; he is identified by the corresponding certificate; and then it is known that no fraud has been committed. It is a help to the immigrant rather than an imposition.

The proposed law, it is believed, will accomplish all that is accomplished under the present laws, so far as the exclusion of Chinese laborers is concerned; and it is also believed that it will lead to a satisfactory and permanent settlement of the Asiatic immigration question generally on grounds that are entirely justifiable.

The literacy test as a means of reducing the present large immigration of unskilled laborers, the great majority of whom enter the industrial field, was recommended by the Immigration Commission. The commission reported that its investigations showed an oversupply of unskilled labor in the basic industries to an extent which indicated an oversupply of such labor in the voluntary understanding with Japan laborers of that race are | industries of the country as a whole, and recommended that a sufficient number of immigrants be debarred to produce a marked effect on the unskilled labor supply.

As far as possible

The commission says-

the aliens excluded should be those who come to this country with no intention to become American citizens or even to maintain a permanent residence here, but merely to save enough by the adoption, if necessary, of low standards of living to return permanently to their home country. Such persons are usually men unaccompanied by wives or children.

The commission recommended the literacy test as the most feasible means of accomplishing this end, and while the test as a means of improving the quality of immigration may be considered of doubtful value by some, as a practical means of reducing immigration of the class referred to it undoubtedly would be Certainly it would affect most the races whose immigration is for the most part a movement of unskilled laborers, who come without families, live under conditions which make them unfair competitors of those who have been born to or have adopted an American standard of living, send the greater part of their earnings to Europe, and eventually return there, only to be replaced in the American industrial field by other immigrants of the same type. Undoubtedly the literacy test would reduce this particular class of immigration by nearly, if not quite, one-half.

Moreover, the test is entirely practicable and essentially human, for in itself it would leave no doubt as to the inadmissibility of the potential immigrant, whereas many who are of other debarred classes find it necessary to cross the ocean in order to learn that they can not be admitted. It may also be said in favor of the literacy test that its enforcement can practically be placed upon the steamship companies, and this, as well as the enforcement of the provision excluding persons not eligible to naturalization, is assured by a provision of the bill, under which such companies are fined $100 for each alien of the specified classes illegally brought to a United States port.

The proposed change in the character and manner of appointment of boards of special inquiry is based on a recommendation of the Immigration Commission. These boards are important factors in the administration of the law, and it is very desirable that they be composed of men of especial ability and training for the work. Up to this time they have been appointed from the boards of immigrant inspectors. They have had to pass in a judicial capacity upon most important questions arising in disputed cases. The commission do not think that they have been equal to the responsibility imposed upon them by the law. Under the provisions of this bill the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to make appointments from a class who will be equal to the obligation laid upon them, and in that way greater justice will be done.

Under the present law it is permissible to import skilled laborers, provided labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country. Under the present law, however, the admissibility of such persons can not be determined in advance of their arrival at United States ports. The bill proposes to amend the law in this regard and to permit the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to pass upon the question of their admissibility prior to the contract.

As an illustration of the necessity for this legislation a firm in Connecticut purchased machinery abroad for the manufac-ture of fine laces. When the machinery was set up there was not a person in America who could operate it. They were entitled to import skilled labor, under the provisions of the present law, for the purpose of operating such machines, but they were unable to have the question of their right to do so determined until the persons actually reached Ellis Island and the case had been passed upon by the officials there and by them passed on to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. To obviate the diffi-culty there has been inserted a provision in this bill authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to hear and determine the application in advance. If it is determined that skilled labor is really required and can not be secured in this country, it is so decided, and the decision is communicated to the inspector of the port, and when the persons arrive they have no difficulty in securing admission.

Mr. STONE. Of course, it is not the opinion of the Senator, or he would not have inserted in the bill—but I will ask him if it is not possible that a provision of that kind would open a door to the admission of contract labor?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, no; I do not think so at all. The application is made directly to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the immigration laws are administered by that department with great rigor against contract labor. I do not think so at all.

There can be little question that a large part of the present immigration of unskilled laborers is induced to come to this country by more or less direct promises of employment—a present the matter in a better way than I can—I think there matter to which I have already referred-but these cases are exceedingly difficult of detection, and the bill proposes to make the law in this regard of greater practical value. also that a considerable part of this class of immigrants are solicited to come by agents and subagents of steamship companies working in various parts of Europe. Such solicitation is forbidden by the United States immigration law, but it appears that the enforcement of the law as it now stands is impracticable. The bill proposes a radical change in legislation in this regard by making possible the imposition of an administrative fine for violations of this provision, and if that is not effective, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is empowered to deny to persistently offending steamship companies the privilege of landing passengers at United States ports. It is believed that with these provisions a better observance of this important requirement of the law can be secured.

In authorizing the deportation of aliens who commit crimes involving moral turpitude within five years after their entry into the United States, and also the deportation of aliens who become public charges, from any cause, within three years after landing, the bill again follows recommendations of the Immigration Commission. An allen who has been convicted of or who admits having committed a crime prior to his admission to the United States is deportable under the present law, but he may follow a career of crime from the very day of his admission without danger of deportation. The limit within which the commission of a crime may be a cause for deportation is fixed at five years, the purpose being to avoid returning to a foreign country a person whose environment or circumstances in the United States have made him a criminal. This danger is obviated within the period specified by the proviso that an alien convicted of a crime shall not be deported if the court imposing sentence recommends otherwise.

The present immigration law provides for the deportation within three years after landing of aliens who become public charges from causes existing prior to such landing. This bill provides for the deportation of aliens who become public charges from any cause within three years after landing, in the discre-tion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and it also provides for the removal at the expense of the United States of aliens who fall into distress or want and who desire to return to their native country. The purpose of this provision is the removal from the country of unfortunate persons whose immigration has resulted in failure.

Under our present system of control the Government's concern in the welfare of immigrants practically ceases when they leave the immigration station or board a train for the interior. Because of this, many immigrants fall into the hands of spoilers before they finally reach their friends. In several of the larger cities, which are distributing points for large numbers of immigrants, local societies have been formed for the purpose of grants, local societies have been formed for the purpose of adding and protecting such immigrants, and some of these societies are doing a splendid work in this field. The present immigration law provides that means shall be adopted to protect aliens migrating to the United States from fraud and loss. This protection is now given at ports of arrival, but the same protection might well be exended to the immigrant during his journey to distributing points in the interior and after his arrival there until he proceeds to his final destination.

With this purpose in view there is incorporated in this bill a provision authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to establish immigrant stations at such interior points as may be necessary, and also to detail officers to accompany immigrants from ports of landing to such stations. Moreover it is provided that such interior station be utilized to aid in the beneficial distribution of admitted alleus, which is authorized by the law of 1907 and retained in the bill.

Mr. President, I think I have gone over this question as fully as I care to do to-day. The study of this question has been a very great pleasure to me, and I think I see very clearly that the recommendation of the commission that immigration be restricted along the lines I have indicated is a wise one, and I most surely hope that the clause relating to the reading and writing test may be retained in the bill and that the bill may become a law. Mr. STONE.

Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.
Mr. STONE. I very much hope that the educational test will not be restored to the bill. I am opposed to it, and before the consideration of the bill is concluded, unless some other Senator are a number who hold the same view who can do it-I shall ask to be heard in opposition to that proposition, although as I understand it is now in the bill, merely having been recommended to be stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the Senator understands that it was recommended to be stricken from the bill by the committee. It has to be agreed to or disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. STONE. But it is pending.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment that is pending is an amendment to strike it out of the bill.

Mr. STONE. The committee adopted the amendment. Mr. LODGE. The committee adopted an amendment to strike it out.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont-

Mr. LODGE. I am in charge of the bill. Mr. STONE. Then I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts what his disposition is with reference to the consideration of the measure?

Mr. LODGE. The bill has been some time before the Senate, and was postponed on account of the Senator from North Carolina, who desired to speak upon it, in addition to the Senator from Vermont. I am very anxious to get it out of the way. The tariff bills are coming in, and I want to get it out of the way of those bills at the earliest possible moment. Of course I am not trying to cut off any Senator.

Mr. STONE. I am not asking for any delay.

Mr. STONE. I am not asking for any delay. Mr. LODGE. My intention is to press the bill to-morrow. do not know of any Senator who desires to speak, and I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill at as early a day as possible.

Mr. STONE. That is entirely satisfactory to me.
Mr. OVERMAN. All of the committee amendments have been dealt with and adopted except one?

Mr. SIMMONS. One committee amendment has not been adopted, and that is the one with respect to the educational test. Mr. LODGE. That is what I have just stated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is there any reason why we can not dispose of it this afternoon?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] has stated just this moment that he desires to be heard against it. Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why would it not be well to take up this bill section by section for amendment?

Mr. LODGE. That has been done. The bill has been read for amendment and the committee amendments have all been agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee amendments?

Mr. LODGE. All of the committee amendments except the one I have mentioned.

Mr. OVERMAN. I speak of any amendments. Mr. LODGE. After the disposition of the pending amendment the bill will be open to amendment by anybody.

Mr. OVERMAN. All the committee amendments but one have been adopted?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.
Mr. OVERMAN. When the bill comes up again, would it not be wise to take it up section by section?

The bill was read for Mr. LODGE. That has been done. amendment, the committee amendments to be considered first. The committee amendments are not yet concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. After the disposition of the committee amendments any amendment a Senator wants to offer will be in order?

Mr. LODGE. As soon as we dispose of the committee amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senate committee amendment as to the illiteracy test come up before other amendments are in order?

Mr. LODGE. It will, it being the last committee amendment. Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore, the Senator having the bill in charge will insist upon that being taken up before other amendments are considered?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. That is under the usual rule of the Senate concerning committee amendments. Individual amendments may be offered subsequently.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the bill will not be read again for amendment?

Mr. LODGE. It has been read.

Under the five-minute rule? Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. LODGE. We have no five-minute rule in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean under the general rule. Mr. LODGE. It has been acted upon like an appropriation bill is acted upon. The committee amendments have all been ment.)

disposed of but one, and as soon as that is disposed of the whole bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to change a word in a committee amendment that was agreed to yesterday. It was an error, not in the printing, but an eror in the typewritten copy sent up.

In line 12, page 8, the word "excluded" should be stricken out and the words "provided for" inserted, so as to read, "unless otherwise provided for."

The Secretary. On page 8 of the committee amendment, last print, lines 12 and 13, strike out "excluded" and insert provided for."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. There is one other. On page 9 I ask unanimous consent to insert, in line 12, after the word "speak," the words "or write."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 10, line 15, after the word "President," change "may" to "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. Clark of Wyoming, Mr. Nelson, and Mr. Culberson conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF BENJAMIN B. COX, AND OTHERS.

Mr. KERN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4552) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin B. Cox, and others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill has been read, and I will not object to its consideration, but I will object to any other bill being taken from the calendar for consideration at this time.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the personal or legal representatives of the following estates, which paid taxes in the Indiana internal-revenue districts, which paid taxes in the Indiana internal-revenue districts, namely, estates of Benjamin B, Cox, Gerhard Ittenback, and Mary A. Kistner, such sums of money as have been in any manner collected from those estates as internal-revenue taxes paid on legacies and distributive shares of personal property to the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 18, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, April 17, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven we bless Thy holy name for the widespread sympathy going out from thousands of hearts to those who are suffering the untold agony of suspense, hoping, it may be, against hope. Comfort them we beseech Thee in the blessed truth that Thou art the God of the living and the dead. That nothing can separate Thy children from infinite and eternal love, and help us to learn well the lesson so dearly bought that the nations may combine in measures which may avert such terrible disasters, and everlasting praise we will give to Thee in the name of Him who taught us faith and hope in Thee our Father.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Adamson was granted leave of absence, for six days, on account of illness in his family.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS ARISING FROM INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday and the unfinished business is the bill H. R. 14667. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14667) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depreda-tions," approved March 3, 1891.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last Wednesday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was recognized for one hour

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds I desire to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill close in one hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the other half by myself. I am desirous of closing up this bill. We have had two days already and there is a great pressure of business in this House, and I hope we can arrive at an agreement to close this debate in one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all general debate on this bill be closed in one hour, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman that I do not know whether we will want as much as an hour, but we might want a little more. Why not let debate run along for a few minutes, anyhow, and see? I think we can get through with the bill in a short time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. With the understanding that it will not require more than an hour I am perfectly willing to let it run along for awhile. I can see your colleague is not present, who has been recognized.

Mr. MANN. My colleague is not here; he is out of the city, so he does not desire the time. Let debate run on for a little while, and I think we can get through with general debate in a short time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think we desire to close the debate on this side, and if the gentleman will occupy 30 minutes the persons favoring the bill will close.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his request?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand, what the gentleman says amounts to an objection at the present time. I desire, then, to submit some remarks in my own right.

Mr. Chairman, I think there has been a total misapprehension of the purpose of this bill. The fact is that it only reinstates the Indian depredation act of 1891 and permits persons who brought suit under that act, and whose cases were dismissed because the plaintiffs could not prove their citizenship, to have their cases reinstated and tried upon their merits. I desire the close attention of this committee for a few moments. During my service here I have talked but very little, and I want to be heard on this bill, because the matter is one of deep want to be heard on this bin, because the matter is one of deep interest to myself, as this is my bill and I have had a bill similar to this pending in this House for 12 years. Twelve years ago the gentleman from Arizona, M. A. Smith, now a Senator at the other end of this Capitol, joined with me in making a favorable report upon a bill similar to this one, that I had introduced in that Congress. There have been since that time several favorable reports made by the Indian Committee on similar bills. One was made four years ago by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], and in this Congress the present favorable report on this bill has been made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

This measure is not what I would like, because it does not afford adequate relief to the people who have been damaged by the loss and destruction of their property in the West by Indians. The amity clause should be stricken from the law, and never should have been written in it, so that when the settlers' property was destroyed by hostile Indians the owners of the property should have been remunerated by the Government instead of having been refused remuneration.

I do not believe that this Government ever should have recognized that an Indian tribe living within the boundaries of the United States should be treated as a foreign nation, but whenever they committed these depredations the Government should have been responsible for them. In the first instance, the In-dians' property should have been responsible as a tribe; in the second instance, the Government itself should have been responsible. And that has been the law ever since it was written there by Congress in 1796. The fathers of this country, some of the men who wrote our Constitution, the men who enacted our first laws, are responsible for these depredation acts, because they first declared that both inhabitants and citizens should be indemnified for the loss of their property by depredating bands of Indians.

Millions of dollars have been paid out to the settlers in the West to indemnify them for such losses, and it is too late now to raise the question brought up by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] alleging that the Government is not responsible to these claimants. Take, for instance, the State of Texas, where I was born and reared, and you will find that Indians have destroyed millions of dollars' worth of property there, much of which has never been paid for by the United States or by the guilty Indians. This is therefore a matter of great importance to the people I repre-Texas did not go into the Union as any other State did. She had a separate and distinct history. She was an independent republic. When she yielded up her own nationality by an annexation treaty and became a part of this great Government, it was part and parcel of that agreement that her frontier should be protected against the depredations of savage Indians. All I ask of this Congress is to redeem that promise. There were five Indians in the territory of Texas to one white man at that time. Many of them were continuously hostile and on the warpath. We had undertaken and succeeded in our revolution with Mexico and had acquired our independence and established the Republic of Texas. We had in doing so exhausted all of our resources, and in order to get the protecting arm of the United States, its Army, and resources to protect our frontier we surrendered our independence and nationality and came under the dominion of the Stars and Stripes. Instead of protecting our inhabitants as well as our citizens, and thus carrying out that agreement, you took advantage of a technicality and said that we must be citizens of the United States before we could be protected. The Court of Claims, under the act of 1891, held—on a technicality, it is true—that because we merged ourselves into the United States by annexation an inhabitant of Texas did not, ipso facto, become a citizen of the United Sates, but every man in Texas must have been a citizen of the Republic of Texas, not an inhabitant of the Republic of Texas, before he could become a citizen of the United States. The fact is there were many foreign soldiers who fought in the Texas revolution and had taken the oath of allegiance to the Republic of Texas, and who believed that this made them citizens of the Republic of Texas because they were inhabitants of Texas. When their property was destroyed by wild Indians they very naturally believed that they were citizens of the United States; hence they or their heirs brought these suits under this act of 1891 to recover for the loss of property the Indians had stolen or destroyed. The suits were dismissed because of the mere fact that Texas by uniting herself with the United States did not make her citizens citizens of the United

Let me give you a concrete case showing the injustice of the refusal to pass this act. A striking instance of the injustice of the law as it now exists is shown in volume 33 of the Court of Claims Report, page 444, the case of Trabing v. The United States. It is one of the cases we rely upon, and there are many others of that kind.

In that case it appears that the claimant's father came to the United States when the claimant was only 11 years old, lived in Baltimore and Washington-this very city-and in Montgomery and Howard Counties, Md., and is believed to have voted for Abraham Lincoln for President. No record of his naturalization could be found. The claimant during the war took the oath of allegiance to the United States and served in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army and did guard duty in the forts around Washington.

After the war he went out as an employee of the Quartermaster's Department to Fort McPherson, Nebr., took up his residence there, and remained in that State continuously for a number of years, until he finally settled in Wyoming. It appears that he served as deputy assessor in North Platte, Nebr., in 1867, and no question was ever raised as to his citizenship until 1892, when under this act of 1891 it was decided that nobody but citizens could recover damages for property destroyed by Indian depredations.

No record of his father's naturalization could be found. Here was a man whose father had been dead for many years, who had to prove in a highly critical court that his father had been naturalized, and he could not do so.

This man applied for a decree of naturalization, and the papers were then issued to him about 1890, before this law passed in 1891. The Court of Claims decided that it could not find as a fact that he was a citizen prior to his loss by Indian depredations in 1868, and consequently judgment was entered against him.

It is against such manifest injustice as this that we are now inveighing, and such injustice as this that this bill has been brought before you to correct.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] have stated that it will take $4,000,000 to pay these claims. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is fair enough to admit the truth, that it will take only $500,000; but, Mr. Chairman, even that is far beyond the truth. These claims are 40 years old. These men who suffered the losses are very old men if living; if dead, their heirs must prove their citizenship, and it is impossible for men who have suffered damages so many years before to produce the evidence and obtain judgment in such cases.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would rether not. The continuous control of the contro

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would rather not. The gentleman had an hour and a half the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SISSON. Since the gentleman declines, I will not insist. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that, while I consumed perhaps an hour the other day, a greater portion of the time, as the gentleman will find if he will look up the RECORD, was consumed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I thank the gentleman for his kindness, and will reciprocate.

Mr. SISSON. But the gentleman is now repaying me with anything but kindness. I have always contended that, according to the gentleman's showing here, about a million and a half dollars would be claimed, but the gentleman contended that only half a million dollars would be recovered. I nowhere stated that this bill would cost $4,000,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am glad to see that the gentleman is fairer in his statement now than he has been heretofore in his arguments.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] and also the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] made the contention that this law was repealed in 1858, and when it was reenacted in 1891 it did not relate back, and that at the time these depredations were committed, between 1860 and 1876, there was no law making the United States responsible for these acts.

Unfortunately for the gentleman's contention, Mr. Thompson, the Assistant Attorney General, who has had charge of these depredation cases for years, stated before our committee two years ago that these same cases related back to 1835-to the act that I will read you. That act made the United States Government plainly and clearly responsible.

This is the act of 1835, and Mr. Thompson says that if any Indian chall

Indian shall-take or destroy the property of any person lawfully within such country, or shall pass from the Indian country into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent may make application to the proper superintendent, agent, or subagent who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction of the President, make application to the nation or tribe to which said Indian or Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall neglect or refuse to make satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding 12 months, it shall be the duty of such superintendent, agent, or subagent to make return of his doings to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper, in the opinion of the President, to obtain satisfaction for the injury; and, in the meantime—

Here, fellow Members, I want to call your attention to the most significant words in this law:

And, in the meantime, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guarantee to the party so injured an eventual indemnification.

Have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson], who are fighting this bill, overlooked this very important act of 1835? If they have, I refer them to it here, and also to the fact that the Court of Claims held that the act of 1891 related back to and revived this act of 1835.

I refer them to the statement of Attorney General Thompson that the act of 1891 relates back to this very act.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. While the act of 1891 might allow claims under the act of 1835, is it not true that it only allowed claims that accrued prior to the repeal of that act in 1859? The act of 1859 repealed the act of 1835. How many claims are there now that accrued prior to 1859? Are the bulk of these claims as old as between 1835 and 1859 or did the bulk of them accrue afterwards?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will give the gentleman the statement of Mr. Thompson. It is very clear and is better than any statement I could make, because he has been engaged in this work for many years and is now representing the Government in these very claims.

Mr. MANN. I believe that, but he does not make any explicit statement on that subject except to say that a number of these claims accrued prior to the repeal of the act of 1859.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is what he said to our committee, and I read it now from the report:

It might be interesting to the committee to know, if they do not already know it, that in 1850 the United States passed an act providing that from that time on they should not be liable for Indian depredations.

That is the act the gentleman refers to.

And from 1850 down until the act of March 3, 1891, was passed are was no liability on the part of the Government for any Indian

And I will state to the gentleman that it was during that time that a great many of these Indian depredations occurred-

Because it was specifically provided that they should not be liable. Then, when the act of March 3, 1891, was passed, it gave to the Court of Claims jurisdiction—to hear and determine and adjudicate these claims.

Here is the point now-

These claims could not have been valid claims against the United States until Congress revived them by the act of 1891. That is what he says.

Then when the satys.

Then when the act of March 3, 1891, was passed it gave to the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate these claims, and the court has decided that that act was jurisdictional, but that by it the United States, in providing that judgments might be rendered against the United States, assumed liability for all depredations that had been committed before that time, subject to the exceptions contained in that law, and the Court of Claims held that the act of March 3, 1891, related back to the trade and intercourse act of 1834, and that is the act upon which the liability of the United States and the Indians for these claims is based.

The act of 1891 relates back to and is connected by this court and the Attorney General himself with the act of 1834, and this covers all the time that any of this property was destroyed or stolen.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.
Mr. BOWMAN. Is that the opinion of the Attorney General?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the evidence of the Attorney General explaining the decision of the court. Now, let us see what he said in another place. We had him before us, and I asked him a question relative to this matter, and here is his statement:

Mr. Stephens. The only new feature in this bill, then, that would be original legislation is with reference to the amity question?

Mr. Thompson. Amity and citizenship.

Mr. Stephens. I understood you to say that the citizenship question was old law.

Mr. Thompson. You are right about that—I want to correct that answer. Amity would be new legislation. All of the laws provided, before the act of March 3, 1891, that the inhabitant might recover without reference to citizenship, and the only place where the word "citizen" alone is found in the law is in the act of 1885 I spoke of, where the Secretary of the Interior was given the right to inquire into and investigate and allow claims of citizens of the United States for property taken by Indians in tribal relations, so that the new legislation in this bill is the amity and not citizenship.

There is the statement of the Attorney General in reference to this case, and it is perfectly clear. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not propose to take much more of your time.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It has been charged by the opponents of this bill that if this passes the lawyers will eat up in fees the most of what is coming to the claimants. I do not see any provision in the bill limiting the amount of fees that the lawyers or agents shall receive. Would the gentleman oppose an amendment to that effect?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me state to the gentleman that the fees will be the same as the original fees in the act of 1891.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. What are the amounts of those fees?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will read section 9 of that act:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will read section 9 of that act:

Sec. 9. That all sales, transfers, or assignments of any such claims heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys, are hereby declared void, and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of such judgments shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators or transferce under administrative proceedings, except so much thereof as shall be allowed the claimant's attorneys by the court for prosecuting said claim, which may be paid direct to such attorneys, and the allowances to the claimant's attorneys shall be regulated and fixed by the court at the time of rendering judgment in each case and entered of record as part of the findings thereof; but in no case shall the allowances exceed 15 per cent of the judgment recovered, except in case of claims of less amount than $500, or where unusual services have been rendered or expenses incurred by the claimant's attorney, in which case not to exceed 20 per cent of such judgment shall be allowed by the court.

This section of law shows that the statement of gentlement

This section of law shows that the statement of gentlemen opposing this bill to the effect that this money will go into the pockets of the claim agents who have been bounding this committee and Congress is unfounded. This bill is guarded as closely and strictly as any bill that ever passed this House.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What is the amount of the claims covered by this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I suppose they will amount to between two and four million dollars, but the recovery can not possibly be more than $500,000, according to the estimate made by the Attorney General.

Mr. SAMUEL, W. SMITH. How many claimants are there? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know the number. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The amount asked for in this bill is not covered already in the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It had nothing whatever to do with it. These claims here are of citizens who have been damaged by loss of property, and we are now seeking to recompense them for the loss, just as the act of 1834 and 1891 said they should be recompensed, and as the Government has always done by other citizens.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me see if I understand the purpose of the bill. As I understand it, the only change that this bill proposes to make in existing law is to amend it so as to include claims of those who were not citizens of the United States, and which claims have been rejected before the Court of Claims upon that ground.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the only change proposed?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The only change, and this is done because the claimants could not prove their citizenship; and let me read to the gentleman what the Attorney General says about that. His statement shows that the men bringing these suits believed they were citizens when they brought them; otherwise they would not have brought them:

Mr. Thompson. All the previous laws provide that a citizen or an inhabitant may recover, but I have never known a case where a non-resident alien, as you suggest, attempted to prove a claim against the United States. There may be some pending, but I have never had my attention called to them, and I do not think there are any.

Mr. Stephens. That question has been adjudicated, has it not, as to the term "nonresident," as to what that meant under the law prior to 1891?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think so.
Mr. STEPHENS. But that was the law prior to 1891, was it not?
Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. There has been no reason for the Court of Claims to adjudicate that question, because an inhabitant could not

Claims to adjudicate that question, because an inhabitant could not recover.

Mr. Stephens. At the time these depredations occurred that was the law; and the word "inhabitant" was the law at the time?

Mr. Thompson. Yes, sir.

Mr. Stephens. Because all of these depredations occurred before 1891, did they not?

Mr. Thompson. Yes.

Mr. Stephens. And usually back from 30 to 40 years ago?

Mr. Thompson. Yes; the great majority. In fact, I would not know what per cent, but a very large per cent of these cases are for claims where the depredation occurred between 1860 and 1875. From 1860 until 1870 is the larger part, but I should think 75 or 80 per cent of these claims were for property taken between 1860 and 1875.

Mr. Stephens, And during that time the inhabitants were entitled to recover?

to recover?
Mr. Thompson. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Recover against whom? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Recover against the United States, in accordance with the act of 1834, that I read; and when I read it the gentleman from Illinois unfortunately was not present.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with this whole matter, I think, and by the act of 1891 the Treasury of the United States was first made responsible. Prior to that time the parties were to be reimbursed from amounts due to the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not been present, else he would have noted that the act of 1891 related back to the act of 1834, reestablished that act, and these cases were adjudicated against the United States under that act.

Mr. CANNON. But under all acts the Treasury of the United States was never responsible for one dollar. These people were to be paid from the funds of the Indians. I speak These advisedly, after having examined the law closely as well as all the statements of the Attorney General.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will do me the honor to listen a moment, he will see that he is entirely mistaken. I asked Mr. Thompson a question, which brought this answer from him:

Mr. Thompson. Yes, sir; that is, whether he was entitled to recover at all. As I stated a while ago, after 1859 the United States was not liable for any Indian depredations at all.

That is where the gentleman has been misled, but listen further:

There was an act passed providing that they should not be liable from that time on for any depredations, so that when these depredations were committed, from 1860 down until 1891, there was no law on the statute books which made the United States responsible at all.

That shows the gentleman was correct.

But when the act of March 3, 1891, was passed the Government provided that the Court of Claims might render judgment against the United States for these claims for Indian depredations, and under that the court held that the law related back to the trade and intercourse act of 1834.

Mr. CANNON. It is perfectly plain that it is just exactly as I stated, that the Treasury of the United States was never liable under the act of 1891.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Unfortunately for the gentleman and his great reputation, which he surely deserves, it is not in accordance with the act of June 30, 1834, which I now hold in my hand.

Mr. CANNON. Which was repealed in 1850. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; but reinstated by the act of 1891. That is what the gentleman can not get through his head, and also what other gentlemen opposing this bill can not get through their heads. Here is what the act of 1834 says:

In the meantime, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guarantees to the party so injured an eventual indemnification.

And yet you say they never agreed to indemnify.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if they were reinstated by the act of 1891, then there is no necessity for this legislation.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The act of 1891 brought into force and effect and renewed the act of 1834.

Mr. CANNON. Then why do you need this legislation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because the act of 1834 applied to inhabitants and we want this act likewise extended to inhabitants.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the act of 1891 had never been passed, you would require legislation, would you not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The act of 1891 expired in three years, it was limited to three years' time-

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But all suits not brought within that time were barred and these are suits that were then filed and dismissed, as I have stated. I will explain to the gentleman that they were brought within three years and the claims only went out of court because they could not show that they were citizens of the United States for the many reasons as I have explained.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; then you do need legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We need legislation to do justice to these people that have been thrown out of court on a technicality, and who lost their property, and who, under the act of 1834, were entitled to recover.

Mr. CANNON. But, under the act of 1859 they were not entitled to recover, and the gentleman, in other words, desires to fasten upon the Treasury of the United States a lot of State claims that Congress did not see proper to provide for in 1891 and gives a lame excuse. Now, if the majority of this House, being expressly the guardian of the Treasury and against stale claims and for economy and justice and uplift and right-eousness, desire to vote this legislation, why they have the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman's statements are correct if they were based upon any facts of law or upon any decisions of the courts; but they are not. I have endeavored to show him that the act of 1834 said that all these losses of inhabitants, as well as citizens, should be indemnified, whether they were citizens or inhabitants.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will.
Mr. BOWMAN. All of these claims have been paid excepting those that were barred on account of their not being citizens.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On account of their not being citizens or not proving they were citizens; they were inhabitants, but not citizens,

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to say the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests this in regard to the claims that went out of court, and that is when the suits were brought, in practically all the cases, I think I can say, the plaintiffs supposed they were citizens, but for some technical reason when they got into court they were unable to prove they were citizens.

prove they were citizens.

Mr. BOWMAN. I favor the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have said all I desire, and now I renew my request—

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. What court decided these inhabitants were not citizens?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Court of Claims, of this city. Mr. STEENERSON. Why was it not taken to the Supreme Court?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know whether a case was taken there or not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was one case taken to the Supreme Court.

Mr. RAKER. The matter was referred to by me on Thursday in the case of Johnson against The United States, which was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and affirmed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I recall the case of the governor of Nebraska.

Mr. RAKER. That is the case of the governor of Nebraska. Mr. STEENERSON. He was born in a foreign country and lived in the Territory of Nebraska when that State was admitted into the Union, and the Supreme Court held that the admission of the State into the Union naturalized him by act of Congress, because the people were admitted as a State on an equal footing with the other States of the Union. Now it seems to me that there is a complete analogy between admitting that State into the Union and the admission of Texas, and that there is no more reason why an inhabitant of Texas at the time it became a State should not be a citizen than the inhabitants of another State or another Territory that claimed naturalization by the admission of the State into the Union. I do not see any difference.

Mr. RAKER. I have that view and the bill ought to pass to give them relief.

Mr. STEENERSON. I certainly can see no reason whatever why the bill should not pass if the citizens were entitled to the indemnity the inhabitants were, and it is simply a pure and naked technicality that ruled them out. That is the way I understand it

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] as to closing the

Mr. MANN. How much more time does the gentleman desire on his side? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Thirty minutes more?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from South Dakota, I believe, desires some time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As far as time is concerned,

I do not care for very much of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will 10 minutes be sufficient? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It will be sufficient for me.

I believe I could get along with 5.

Ir. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] a few moments ago asked for 30 minutes, and he consumed 45

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman must remember that I was answering questions.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the time he consumed. Mr. Chairman, how much time was consumed by the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty minutes. Mr. MANN. That would make an hour and 10 minutes on the gentleman's side, and we will take an hour on this sidean hour for those opposed to the bill and 30 minutes for those in favor of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand it, he proposes to use an hour and give 30 minutes to those who are for the bill.

Mr. MANN. An hour for those opposed to the bill and 30 minutes for those in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if that does not include the time to be occupied by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. MANN. From now; but I do not make the request. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has been recognized.

Mr. SISSON. I am willing to yield for that purpose if we get an hour on this side and 30 minutes on the other.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I make that request.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How is the time to be controlled, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. It is immaterial who controls the time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is immaterial to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Ste-PHENS] asks unanimous consent that general debate close in 1 hour and 30 minutes, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself | the principle.

and 1 hour by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] did not state my position on this bill correctly have no objection to these depredation claims being paid if they are paid by the parties who committed the depredations or by the tribe to which they belonged. But I am not in favor of the Federal Treasury responding to the torts of Indians or responding to the torts of anybody else.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] has not left the proper impression on this House in reference to the law of 1891, because while prior to that time the United States Government guaranteed this indemnity, the Government always compelled the tribal government to make restitution to the Federal Treasury, and up to 1891 that had always been the rule, except after 1859, when these matters were then settled through the Department of the Interior without the intervention of Congress and without necessarily the intervention of the courts. But in 1859 the United States Government served notice on everybody within the United States, including everybody in the West, that in the future it would not be liable and would not even be responsible for depredations committed by the Indians. And from that time down to 1891 these gentlemen may search in vain for any other difference. They may search in vain for any other authority, and that is all they will find. And I am opposed to this bill because it requires the Federal Treasury to respond in damages for the torts committed by some one else. There is no more reason why the Federal Treasury should respond in tort for the protection of the property for the people out West than there is any reason for the Federal Treasury to respond in damages to the torts committed by the people in the Confederate States during the Civil War. There can be no principle either in law or in equity that can make the sovereign responsible for the tort committed either by her citizens or by aliens within her borders or by people who are quasi citizens, as the Indians were within the borders of the United States. Until 1891 there was not a moment in the history of the Government of the United States when the Government did more than collect the money out of the tribal funds of the Indians. And if these gentlemen are now willing that the United States Government may cause the Indian to respond to these depredations, I have no sort of objection to it, but I do object to the Federal Treasury responding in damages, as stated in this bill.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does think that the damages prior to 1891 were an unjust obligation against the Government?

Mr. SISSON. I do, indeed, sir. Mr. GARNER. Was an unjust judgment against the Government?

Mr. SISSON. I do, indeed.

Mr. GARNER. They ought to have gone to the Indian tribes in each instance to recover the money?

Mr. SISSON. Exactly. I do not believe that two wrongs make a right. I do not believe that, because the act of 1891 repealed the act of 1859 and added to the act of 1835 a right against the Government, which the citizens or inhabitants did not have at that time, we should now renew that provision. I believe that so much of that act as gave them that right was wrong and ought never to have been engrafted on the statute books.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. SISSON. I do. Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that under the act of 1891 and under the law as proposed to be amended by this bill the Indian tribes are still subject and liable to the payment of any damages that may be recovered?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. But if a corporation injures me and I wait until the corporation goes into liquidation or goes out of existence it ought not to give me any right of recovery of damages then against the Government. If those people failed to prosecute their claims against the Indian tribes while the tribes were still in existence, they ought not now to be allowed to come in and take advantage of the laches and ask the United States Government and the American people to respond in damages, because the Government can not get back the money from the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. I just called the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Indian tribes are still liable, in view of the statement he has made.

Mr. SISSON. It does not change the rule. It does not change

Mr. MILLER. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. SISSON. If that be true, the Court of Claims that ordered the payment of this money ought never to have done so until it could get the money back from the Indian tribes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SISSON. . Yes. Mr. MANN. Was not the law from 1859 and from 1891 until now that any of these depredations should be a liability against the Indian tribes?

Mr. SISSON. Exactly.
Mr. MANN. That did not go in the act of 1891?
Mr. SISSON. Of course not.
Mr. MANN. That was the law all the time.

Mr. MILLER. That has always been the law and is now. Mr. MANN. Then, if the Indian funds can be used in payment of these depredations, why do they come and ask the Government of the United States to pay them?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and that is the reason why this law should not pass. There is no reason why this law should be passed and the Federal Government required to pay damages. There is no one in this House who could make a stronger personal appeal to me than the gentleman from Texas. I have great respect for the gentleman from Texas, but I differ with him on this matter, because I differ with him on a question of principle, and I am not endeavoring to put the gentleman from Texas in a false light. I believe he is doing what he thinks is right, but when he accuses me of being unfair he ought to know that while sometimes I may be overenthusiastic, I have made an effort all my life to try to be at least fair; and if there is one thing in my whole character of which I try to be proud, it is that I try to have some old-fashioned domestic honesty. [Applause.]

What I feel about this I feel intensely, and if I did not speak here what I feel in this matter I would be untrue as a Representative to the constituents I represent, so that I do not believe that the gentleman from Texas ought to have stated believe that the gentleman from Texas ought to have stated that I have acted unfairly and that I undertook to make an unfair statement. On the contrary, I have always said that if he can give me the necessary information I would be open to conviction as to the propriety of his position.

But he can not do it now. He can only guess at it. He may come near the same township or range of it, but I do not know how he can come closer than that to it. He can not give us the names of the claimants or the amount of the damages. the names of the claimants or the amount of the damages claimed in each case. He can not do that. He says in so many words that it will amount to about $500,000, and perhaps more. If that be the fact, he could get, by writing a letter to the Interior Department or to the Court of Claims, the name of each litigant and the amount sued for and the evidence in each case, and show Congress exactly what it would cost. But he has declined to do that, and it would be a mere speculation at best as to whether it will be $500,000 or more. The gentleman from Texas can not make any more definite statement than he has made already, notwithstanding the fact that he has had a whole week since this bill was up for consideration before and since he was catechised about it and asked about it. He has had a whole week since then.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SISSON. Ves

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understood the gentleman from Texas to state a few minutes ago that it would amount to $4,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. Here is what the gentleman from Texas says: That the amount of claims sued for would be $4,000,000, but that, although the suits would be for $4,000,000, he has assur-ance from the Attorney General that the recoveries would be limited to about $500,000.

Now, it is upon that broad statement—the difference between $500,000 and $4,000,000—that he asks this Congress to pass this act. He does not know whether it will be $500,000. He can not tell whether it will be $1,000,000; he can not tell but that it might be $4,000,000, because the court would not be bound by the opinion of the Attorney General.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. MILLER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. SISSON. I will yield if I can get the time.
Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman such time as is neces-

Mr. MILLER. If we were at the beginning of all legislation on this subject and if the past were a clean sheet of paper, with nothing written upon it, and it was necessary to pass legislation giving the right of recovery to people in the United States for Indian depredations, would the gentleman be in favor of excluding inhabitants and limiting the right of recovery to citizens?

Mr. SISSON. I would not if an Indian committed a wrong and the money would come out of the pockets of the Indians and if the claimant was rightfully in the place where the depre-dation occurred.

Mr. MILLER. Then I do not understand how the gentleman can be opposed to this removal of a condition which he says he would not favor as an original proposition.

Mr. SISSON. Because I would not favor paying this money out of the Federal Treasury at any time, and I am unwilling that it should be paid out now.

Mr. MHLLER. Then it is a matter of the broad proposition of passing any such legislation at all and not this one feature of it of which the gentleman spoke.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy a few minutes on this matter, and I should like to call the attention of the committee to a very brief résumé of the situation.

Originally the Government passed a law providing that if Indians came out of the Indian country into the Territories or States and committed depredations the Government would be responsible for the damages, and would endeavor to collect the damages from the Indians but would pay the damages whether they were collected or not.

In 1835 Congress extended that law, and provided that if the depredations were committed in the Indian country against persons lawfully there the Government would pay the damages, again attempting to collect them from the Indians.

In 1859 Congress repealed the law that provided for any indemnification out of the Federal Treasury, still leaving the law so that if depredations were committed against persons lawfully where they were the Government would attempt to collect the damages from the Indian tribes. That was the act of 1859. Between the act of 1850 and the act of 1891 there was no liability assumed by the General Government to pay damages out of the General Treasury for any Indian depredations whatever, the Government still assuming the effort to collect the damages from the Indian tribes.

In 1885, or thereabouts, the persons who had claims for depredations obtained the passage through Congress of a provision of law requiring the Secretary of the Interior to make a report in reference to damages by reason of Indian depredations, and if I recall rightly it was stated at the time that law was passed that the total amount of these claims would be a very few million dollars.

Just what those amounts were, as reported, I do not recall, but in 1891 Congress passed a law providing that these claims, when belonging to citizens of the United States, might be presented to the Court of Claims within three years thereafter, and assuming that they should be paid out of the Federal Treasury if they could not be collected from the Indian tribes, the General Treasury being responsible. Such was the law and such is the law now

What has resulted from the legislation already enacted? With the primary liability against the Indian tribes, which has existed for more than a century, with the liability added in 1891 in favor of citizens of the United States to be paid out of the Federal Treasury, from what have the claims been paid up to date?

Originally assumed to be but a small amount we have already paid claims to the amount of $4,946,999.38, and of these nearly $5,000,000 of claims which have been allowed under the act of 1891, with the primary liability against the Indian tribes, $50,085.45 have been paid out of the funds of the Indian tribes. Nearly $5,000,000 has been paid out of the Federal Treasury under the act of 1891, being more than the gentlemen who originally advocated the legislation said the entire claims would amount to, and there are $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 of claims still pending and unpaid.

There are $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 of claims still pending. There was no liability on the part of the Government to either citizens or inhabitants from 1859 to date. Misled by the statements which were originally made, Congress has provided for and paid nearly $5,000,000 of these claims to citizens. No one knows, and I challenge any member of the Committee on Indian Affairs to say, what amount of claims are now pending in behalf of inhabitants as against citizens. Does anyone answer? How many claims are pending and what do they amount to now in behalf of inhabitants which would be carried by this bill? Can the gentleman from Texas tell, can the gentleman from South Dakota tell, how much are they?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think anyone can tell, because there are so many claims, and they have been filed at different times.

Mr. MANN. The claims are on file. Anyone can tell who will examine the records in the office of the Court of Claims, and no one in favor of the bill has dared to do it. No one knows how much the claims will amount to. The attorney for the Government has stated that, in his opinion, the claims which would be allowed would not amount to more than $500,000, but he states that he does not know, and no one knows. The original claims were not estimated to amount to more than $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, and yet we have already paid $5,000,000, and there are $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 still remaining. Who can say what this will cost?

We never promised to pay a dollar to these people except out of the funds of the Indian tribes. Let the gentlemen produce their claims in a proper manner and have them paid out of the funds of the Indian tribes. A moment ago the gentleman from Texas stated that the Indian tribes were amply able to pay these claims. Then let them be paid out of the funds of the tribes who committed the depredations. There is no reason why the General Government should be involved in the further pay ment of these claims. If this bill be passed, the next bill will be to strike out the amity provision and pay $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 more of claims.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will. Mr. KENDALL. Was not that in the bill in the Sixty-first Congress and in the bill in this Congress when first introduced?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I think it was not in this bill.
Mr. KENDALL. It was in the old bill.
Mr. MANN. It only requires the striking out of four words in this bill to add $10,000,000 to the liability.
Mr. KENDALL. One other question. Is it not true that all claims that this bill is intended to relieve accrued at a time when the law limited the recovery to citizens entirely?

Mr. MANN. The law did not provide for the recovery by citizens or anybody else during the time that the most of these claims accrued. Those that are older than 1859 arose at a time when the law did provide for the payment. How many claims are older than 1859 no one knows.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. COOPER. I see that the third proviso reads as follows: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims.

Now, it ought to be an easy matter to determine by computation the aggregate of these claims. What is the difficulty about it? The gentleman from Texas said that he could

Mr. MANN. I do not know of any difficulty. The gentleman prefers to say that the total amount of claims, when paid, will not amount to more than $500,000, but they have not dared to tell the House how much the claims amount to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have stated several times that it amounted to about $4,000,000, and I base it upon the statement of Mr. Thompson.

Mr. MANN. Where is the statement of Mr. Thompson on the subject?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I read it to the gentleman a few moments ago.

Mr. MANN. I have and I could not find it. I have read the statement of Mr. Thompson,

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow a further interruption. This whole subject is new to me, and I presume it is to the majority of the House. See if I understand the proposition. The Indians committed depredations. and destroyed the property alike of citizens and aliens. zens had access to the Court of Claims, and their claims were presented and adjudicated. The aliens likewise presented their claims to the Court of Claims, but were not allowed because of the fact that they were aliens. Now, then, this third proviso, as I understand it-and that is the whole point in the bill-permits these people who lost property by depredations to present claims and have them adjudicated, as was the case with those who were citizens, and the proviso limits it strictly to claims upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims. It ought not to be very difficult to determine the number of those claims and approximately an accurate amount that will be recovered.

Mr. MANN. I think myself it ought not to be difficult. The gentleman will remember this in reference to these alien claims: Under the law it was made illegal for these aliens to go into the Indian territory without a special passport from visions of the law. They took their own risk, and they had no license. Having violated the law, which forbade them to go into the country, they then turned around and asked Congress to reimburse them; but the original law did provide for the payment of damages to inhabitants. When we passed the act of 1891 we limited recovery to citizens. Many of the aliens filed claims, and those claims were rejected because they were not citizens.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of the gentleman is that many of these aliens or other people went into this Indian territory in violation of law and there had their property destroyed. The first proviso of the bill reads:

That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian territory.

Does not that meet the suggestion just made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. It does not. I called to the attention of the House the other day the fact that if the law provided that the provisions of the bill should not extend to any person who himself was unlawfully in the Indian territory it might be of some value, but that is not the case. The man would be unlawfully within the territory. The property would not be unlawfully within the territory.

Mr. COOPER. This says "whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian territory."

Mr. MANN. The individual would be unlawfully within the territory, but the property was not unlawfully within the terri-

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. If an amendment were adopted covering that defect, if it is a defect, in the bill, would the gentleman then vote for the bill?

Mr. MANN. I would not, but I propose to offer an amendment to cover that defect, if it shall be passed. Mr. GARNER. And I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. But my objections to the bill are broader than We were under no obligation to these people. If there were Indian depredations committed against them, they had a method under the law of filing their claims at the time with the War Department and having those claims paid out of the property of the Indians. If they did not pursue that remedy that was their fault and no fault of the General Treasury.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did I understand the gentleman to say that not more than 1 per cent of the primary liability has ever been collected from the Indians?

Mr. MANN. Yes; from the Indians, Mr. LONGWORTH. Fifty thousand dollars, in round numbers, out of $5,000,000, in round numbers?

Mr. MANN. Yes; in round numbers. Mr. LONGWORTH. Whose fault is that?

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is the fault of Congress. In the first place, we paid the claims out of the General Treasury, and then some of our friends interested in these matters inserted a provision that, having been paid out of the General Treasury, the Treasury was not to be reimbursed out of the Indian funds, unless the Secretary of the Interior thinks it can be done without in any way injuring the support, maintenance, or civilization of the Indians. That is a recent law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have now the figures which the gentleman asked me for a few moments ago.

This is the statement made.

Mr. MANN. From what page of the report is the gentleman

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Page 16 of the report, near the top, the first question:

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, it is your judgment that if this bill were to become a law the total amount that would probably be recovered would be somewhere about $4,000,000?

Mr. THOMPSON, Yes; it would be about $4,000,000, including citizenship cases. The last estimate we made was $3,750,000, two years ago. As I have before explained to the committee, that depends a little upon the number of cases that would go off by reason of other defenses, but taking eight and a half million dollars as a basis of claims that would go to judgment and that are subject to the defense of amity, and taking 40 per cent of them, which has been the percentage that has been allowed, it would make $3,400,000; and then in addition to that a half million dollars on account of the removal of the bar of want of citizenship would make it, in round numbers, about $4,000,000.

That is just as I stated-of which $500,000 would be recovered.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but we have no statement whatever as to what the exact amount is, although it is easily obtainable. The estimate of the department that the claims the War Department. They went there contrary to the pro- amount to $4,000,000, which the gentleman has stated, would only result, according to the statement of the Attorney General, in judgments amounting to about half a million dollars, but no one knows the amount of either the claims or the amount of the judgments, when the first could easily be ascertained by the committee on examination.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-eight minutes.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to get the attention of the gentleman from Illinois. Does the gentleman propose to close in one speech?

Mr. MANN. No. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then will the gentleman please use some of his time?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman propose to close in one speech?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.
Mr. MANN. Then go ahead.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman has a great deal more time than I have,

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman has 30 minutes and I

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire].

Mr. McGuire].

Mr. McGuire of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, these claims have taken a great deal of the time of the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee has gone very carefully into the merits and this bill is the result of several years of investigation, and careful investigation, by that committee. The House will observe the nature and character of the arguments, which I am not disposed to criticize, that have been offered against this bill. For instance, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] dwelt upon the amount which might be recovered, the judgments which might be obtained against the Government of the United States. Observe, regardless of the merits, regardless of the obligation or its character, regardless of the question of whether the United States owes these people, among the most needy in all the country, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] would have us hang this bill upon the one question as to the amount that might be recovered by these people. Gentlemen, I have never been in favor of repudiating a national or an individual obligation. I have had obligations large enough for me to have liked to repudiate them; but, unfortunately possibly for me and for-tunately for the other fellow, I have never reached that point. It seems to me that the one question for us, as the Representatives of the people and as guardians of the Treasury of the United States, the one question for us to determine is, Is this an honest obligation upon the part of the Government of the United States to these people, these frontier settlers in those days? And let me tell you, if the law of 1834 did not provide for the payment of these obligations, if the law of 1891 did not provide for the payment of these obligations, then it is the duty of the Government of the United States now to pass such a law as will provide for the payment of the honest obligations of the Government, and it does not seem to me that the question as to the amount should figure to any very great extent while we are considering these obligations. Why, gentlemen—

Mr. BOWMAN. Or the citizenship.
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma (continuing). The Government of 100,000,000 of people, in my judgment the ablest Government among the civilized nations to take care of its people who went to the front, who were the pioneers of Texas, of Oklahoma, of Colorado, of New Mexico, and Nebraska; the people who had faith in the Government and who believed ultimately that every dollar's worth of property that they lost by reason of these warlike people would be returned, should pay its just obligations. Here are claims that have been pending for years, a positive disgrace to the representatives of the Government. I would guard the Treasury as carefully as any person. I would not want to see one dollar leave the Treasury of the United States that did not go to pay an honest obligation, but if we owe these claims they should be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been discussed to such an extent that it would be rather difficult for me to enter into any extended discussion of it without going over the ground that has been gone over and over and I think that some gentlemen in the House are too serious in their objection to this bill. This proposition has been before Congress and before the Committee on Indian Affairs ever since I have been a Member. It has been repeatedly favorably reported and was reported in the fast Congress by the Committee | amendment as I believe ought to be adopted.

on Indian Affairs, of which I then had the honor of being the The committee found that there were a large number of claims pending, aggregating several million dollars; that if the law was changed so that the amity requirement should be eliminated a large recovery could be had against the United We found that the claim attorneys or the so-called States. claim agents were concerned mostly with regard to amending the law in that particular. We concluded that this part of the proposed change in the law that permitted an inhabitant to have the right to recover the same as a citizen was wise, and it would take away largely the arguments that were being used to get a change of the law as to amity. As I have already indicated in questions that I have asked, we find that in practically all of the cases that would be reinstated if this bill becomes a law the plaintiff brought suit believing he was a citizen of the United States. Many of them had served in the Civil War and had an honorable discharge. Some had served in public office; some had been members of grand juries where the question of citizenship was inquired into, and they were considered to be citizens; and we believed, and we still believe, that that class of people ought to have the same right to recover as those who could show technically that they are citizens.

I want to say further that we were convinced that there could not possibly be recovered judgments to exceed $500,000 by the passage of this bill. And it is my opinion that is the maximum amount that can be recovered. We had before the committee the Assistant Attorney General from the Department of Justice, who has had charge of the defense in the Court of Claims in this class of claims, and he stated to the committee, as you will see by examining the report which has been filed upon this bill, that the amount would not exceed $500,000, and it has been estimated that it might not exceed $300,000. I agree with all the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Mann, has said and all the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Cannon, has said—that if this bill was to be amended so that amity was not required it ought not to pass, and I would be opposed to it.

I stated in the last Congress what I understand the chairman of the committee in this Congress has stated, and probably will state again, that if this bill passes the House in the form in which it is reported and it is amended in another body, so far as he can control it there will be no opportunity for the House to concur in that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota two minutes more. In this connection I desire to state that I concur in what the gentleman from South Dakota says as to the amendment, if the Senate should put it on.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, it will be said that the chairman of the committee can not control what has happened so far as this bill is concerned. I think every Member here is sufficiently familiar with the practice in regard to bills that may be amended after they leave here and when they are returned, so that where the chairman of the committee states that he will see that no motion is made to concur and the bill will not pass in the form in which it may have been amended, there is no possibility of its becoming a law. I think there need be no misapprehension that this bill will be amended as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and his colleague [Mr. Cannon]. I say that this is an honest proposition. I do not think it makes a particle of difference what the amount may be that is involved. I think it is a fact that it will not exceed $500,000, but that does not change my position touching the question. These people brought their cases within the time provided by the law of 1891; they believed they were citizens of the United States, and simply because they were unable from some technical clause to prove their citizenship, their suits failed; and I say it is only right, honest, and proper that they should be given a status so that they may recover.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 18 minutes

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that the amity clause should be stricken from this bill; that it should never have been written into the law. But I realize how utterly impossible it is at this time, and how utterly impossible it is likely to be at any time, to get the House to strike out the amity provision in the Indian depredation law. And, therefore, I do not desire to in any way stand in the way of the passage of this legislation by urging such an This bill, at least, should pass. And I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to a fact which I think is well known to him, if the gentleman from Illinois will give me his attention.

Mr. MANN. I always give attention to the gentleman. Mr. MONDELL. It is well known to him, but perhaps tem-porarily overlooked. I refer to this fact that we have always had among our population a large number of foreign-born people. We have to-day, and always have had in the past, men coming to our country from foreign shores and settling in different parts of the country and in time declaring their intention to become citizens and later become citizens. When we had a frontier inviting adventurous spirits, many men came to our shores who went directly to the West-Frenchmen from Canada, Germans, Scandinavians, and other men of various nationalities. They went to the western plains and mountains, into the Indian country, so called. It was utterly impossible for them, in many instances, to make a declaration of their citizenship. I have been personally acquainted with many such men, who have performed for years and years all the duties of citizenship, who voted, served on juries, were elected to office, served in the Army, and who have been among our very best citizens, and who forgot in the passing of the years that they had overlooked the slight preliminary of declaring their intention to become citizens of the United States, but who considered and believed themselves to be citizens. And it is this class of men who will be relieved by this legislation, men who were in the main just as good American citizens as we have ever had under the flag, men who performed all the duties of citizenship, men who, as I have said, held office and served in our Army.

I have in mind one such case, John, or "Portuguese," Phillips, as he was called, who came to Wyoming a great many years ago. He was one of the finest pioneers we ever had in our State, a man of wonderful physical bravery, and a man of wonderful energy, and a good citizen in every helped in the formation of our Territory. He voted and He served as a justice of the peace on the frontier, and had a very wide reputation in that capacity in that he did always realize the limitations of his jurisdiction. He finally passed away, and his heirs presented a claim, an exceedingly meritorious one, but when that claim came to be considered it was discovered that Phillips was not a citizen of the United States. It is true that upon one occasion this man rode 150 miles in the dead of winter, at night, through the Indian country

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MONDELL. May I have one minute more? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. He rode 150 miles in the dead of winter at night, hiding during the day, through the Indian country, to carry to the settlements the news of the beleaguerment of Fort Phil Kearney by the Sioux under Red Cloud, and but for that ride the entire garrison of that post would have been wiped out by the hostile Sioux then beleaguering the garrison. But he was not a citizen, and when his case came to be passed upon it could not be paid. That claim was afterwards paid by a special act of Congress, passed in recognition of his remarkable

He is but an example of the kind of men whom this bill would relieve-the finest type of frontiersmen in the West; men who were too busy to go to the courts and go through the preliminaries of making a declaration of citizenship, but who, almost every one of them, were citizens in the highest and best and truest sense of the word, and who spent their entire life in the West. This bill would relieve some of those people. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois

use some of his time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. I say so rather regretfully, because I have the highest respect for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs. But, looking upon the proposition as I do, I can not conscientiously give it my support.

The gentleman from Oklahoma. [Mr. McGuire] has assumed that those who are opposed to the passage of this bill are endeavoring to have the Government repudiate an honest obli-He has assumed that the claims of these parties who are seeking to recover, and who will be entitled to recover if this bill is passed, constitute an Lonest obligation against the Government. So far as I have heard, he is the only gentleman who has maintained that proposition.

This, Mr. Chairman, as I view it, is not an obligation on the part of the Government. The Government is under no obliga-tion to pay these claims. As a matter of fact, prior to the year 1834 the Government had never adopted the policy of paying out of its Treasury damages for depredations committed by Indian tribes. Prior to that time such damages were recovered out of the funds belonging to the Indians. It is true that in 1834 Congress did pass an act which provided that the Federal Treasury should be responsible for depredations of Indians, provided the annuity going to the Indians was not sufficient to pay the claims. But that act was repealed expressly in 1859, and Congress declared in that year that the Treasury would not thereafter be responsible for any depredations committed by Indians, and that is the law to-day. Therefore I say there is no obligation on the part of the Government, in the sense to which the gentleman from Oklahoma referred, to pay these

Now, what are we asked to do? We are asked to pass a bill which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] said last week involved between two and three million dollars in claims.

As I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] few minutes ago, he stated that it would involve possibly $4,000,000 in claims. Now, it is true that the Assistant Attorney General has estimated, and gentlemen on the floor have stated, these claims when adjudicated will probably not amount to more than $500,000. But that is a matter of conjecture. have no statement before Congress showing to whom these claims belong. We do not know whether they consist of two or three or whether they consist of many. We do not know anything about the amount of the attorneys' fees involved, whether the greater part of these claims would go to the attorneys or whether the money would go to the claimants themselves. I say, in view of these facts, that Congress ought not to put itself on record in favor of paying these claims out of the Federal Treasury, especially since the gentleman from Minnesota and other gentlemen say that the tribes to which these Indians belong have funds out of which these claims can be paid to-day, and there is a law on the statute books which permits recovery out of those funds.

This proposition has been pending before Congress or its committees for many years. Two years ago, when I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it was before the committee, and was favorably reported from that committee and placed upon the calendar, but it did not come up in I was opposed to it at that time for the same reason the House. that I am opposed to it now. I do not believe it is right to vote the people's money out of the Treasury to pay these claims of aliens for property destroyed in the seventies, 10 or 15 years after the passage of the act of 1859, which put these claimants on notice that this Government would not be responsible for their property if it should be taken or destroyed by the Indians.

If Congress passes this bill and undertakes to give these inhabitants who brought their suits in 1891, or within three years thereafter, the right to go into the Court of Claims and recover, I predict that the next proposition will be to strike out of the act of 1891 the word "amity," thereby involving an additional expense to this Government of probably $11,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. We provide in this bill that inhabitants may recover claims, limiting it only to those who filed claims under the act of 1891. If we do that can anybody then oppose a bill to let in inhabitants who did not file their claims?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly not, in a spirit of fairness and justice. This bill, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, applies only to those who filed their claims in 1891 or during the existence of that act, which was three years. Now, if we pass this bill giving relief to these parties who came into court and undertook to set up their claims in spite of the fact that they were not included in the statute, as a matter of common justice and fairness we can not deny the same right to those inhabitants who failed to go into court under that act, because they realized that the act did not apply to them. that sense, this bill as it is drawn is an unjust discrimination against the alien who knew the law and abided by it, and in favor of the alien who sought to recover in spite of it. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior is opposed to this bill. It was sent to him during a previous Congress and he had this to say about it. After speaking of other provisions in the bill he said, in a letter addressed to the Committee on Indian Affairs, dated December 30, 1909:

There does not appear to be any good reason why the claims of the ersons who were not citizens of the United States should be paid by the Government.

I do not see why this Government should be responsible to the claimants under this bill, or to any other person, for torts committed by individuals in this country. We are setting a bad precedent if we undertake to enact any such legislation. I yield back the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MURRAY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1963S. An act to authorize the San Antonio, Rockport and Mexican Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Morris and Cummings Channel; and

H. R. 20117. An act to authorize the Nebraska-Iowa Interstate Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bellevue, Nebr.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 16306) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2270. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Richfield, Utah;

S. 5333. An act to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes; and

S. 5355. An act to acquire a site and for the erection thereon of a public building at Beaver Dam, Wis.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois use some of his time?

Mr. MANN. How many more speeches are to be made on the other side?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have two.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman had better use some of his

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller]. He does not seem to be in the Chamber at this time.

Mr. MANN. Then will the gentleman have but one speech?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One more.

Mr. MANN. With that understanding, Mr. Chairman, yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald]. Before the gentleman from New York takes the floor I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting a letter received from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to this subject.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FINLEY). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The following is the letter referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 16, 1912.

Hon. James R. Mann, House of Representatives.

Sin: By direction of the Secretary and in reply to your verbal request for information relative to payments from the Treasury, or from Indian tribal or trust funds, on account of judgments of the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, under the provisions of section 6 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 853), I have the honor to advise you that payments have been made as follows:

Indian depredation judgments paid out of the general fund of the Treasury from the passage of the act of March 3, 1891, to December 31, 1911, no part of which has been reimbursed; the total thereof remaining as a charge against the Indian tribes committing the depredations, as adjudged by the Court of Claims

Claims
Indian depredation judgments paid out of Indian funds or moneys from March 3, 1891, to December 31, 1911, upon certification of the Secretary of the Interior, made in accordance with section 6, act of March 3, 1891, and acts making appropriations for payment of such judgments:

From interest due on tribal trust funds. $46, 185, 45

From Indian moneys, proceeds of labor (Crow Indians). 525, 00

From appropriation for "payment of Indians of Klamath Agency". 3, 375, 00

4, 946, 999, 38 Total of all judgments paid __ The act of March 3, 1891, section 6, prescribes the mode of payment of Indian depredation judgments, and appropriations for such judgments are made subject to its provisions, the Secretary of the Interior certifying in each case that the tribe chargeable with the amount of the judgment has no funds or appropriations for their benefit from which payment can be made, having regard for the educational needs of the tribe.

The tribal trust funds, the interest of which to the extent of $46,-185.45 has been applied to the payment of judgments, are funds derived mainly from sales of Indian lands.

The trust fund "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Crow Indians," out of which a judgment for $25 was paid, was derived from miscellaneous sources.

The appropriation for "payment to Indians of Klamath River," of which $3,375 was applied to the payment of a judgment, was made by the Indian appropriation act of June 21, 1966 (34 Stat., 367), in consideration of lands ceded by the Indians.

No judgments have been paid from any annuity or other appropriation or from any fund arising from sales of land, or otherwise than as herein stated.

Respectfully,

A. Piatt Andrew,

Assistant Secretary.

A. PIATT ANDREW, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 20 min-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] has just emphasized one feature of this measure to which attention had not been called. Under the act of 1891 the Court of Claims was given jurisdiction of claims of citizens of the United States, and a limit of three years was fixed as the time within which such claims might be filed.

This bill is advocated on the ground that a number of those claiming to be citizens of the United States in the adjudication of claims filed under that act, for some technical reason have been held not to be citizens. It is now proposed to reinstate and to give a right to prosecute the claims of all persons who have taken advantage of the act of 1891 and filed their claims claiming to be citizens and who have been held by the courts not to be citizens.

No one could defend the action of Congress in refusing to futher extend the right to present such claims to persons not citizens of the United States if this act be passed. Those who pretended or claimed to be citizens, and who filed claims within the three-year period, are now asking to have taken away the defense that the Government was able to set up because they were not citizens. The inhabitants of the United States not citizens who had these claims and did not present them should be given an equal opportunity to present such claims as those who, not citizens, took advantage of the act under which they had no claims.

I was pleased to hear the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], reaffirmed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], that if this bill were so amended in the Senate as to eliminate the amity provision from the law they would not support such amendment. I recollect that in the Fifty-eighth Congress the gentleman from South Dakota reported a bill which proposed to eliminate the defense of amity as well as citizenship, and the gentleman from Texas was one of the committee who joined in making the report. Minority views were filed at the time, in March, 1905, and a report signed by the present Vice President, Mr. Sherman of New York; by Mr. Curtis of Kansas, new Senator, well known as one of the best-informed men on Indian legislation that Concess has been been forced by the contract of the cont gress has known for many years; by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Lacy, at that time chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands as well as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; by Mr. Knapp of New York, and myself.

Since that time numerous bills have been introduced for the purpose of removing the defenses of citizenship and of amity in these Indian depredation cases.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield, with reference to that report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the bill against which that adverse report was made contained the amity clause, and did not those who signed the adverse report make their objection to the bill mainly on the amity clause and not on the citizenship clause?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mainly on the amity clause; but also, as the report will show, upon the citizenship clause. Mainly upon the amity clause, because of the fact that the claims that would be sustained against the Government with that defense eliminated were shown to be in the neighborhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000. Therefore they very greatly overshadowed those that would be sustained if the citizenship defense were removed.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman a moment ago to say that if the original act of 1891 was good law, then it ought to have included all inhabitants.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not mention anything about the act of 1891 being good law, or bad law, or anything about it.

Mr. GARNER. I will ask the gentleman this question, then:

If he approves the act of 1891 as applied to a citizen, does he see any objection to giving an inhabitant the right to recover under that same act?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not have voted for the act of 1891 had I been in Congress at that time. That perhaps expresses my opinion of it. There was no claim in law, and none in equity, either. The so-called pioneer frontiersmen were men who pushed out into the Indian country and provoked retaliation by the acts they committed against the Indians. Those are the facts. And now they come here-aliens-responsible for the strife and trouble and bloodshed in our western country, claiming some rights for reimbursement from the Government of the United States for very doubtful losses incurred as the result of Indian depredations. These losses occurred 30 or 40 years back and in sections of the country sparsely settled, where information was difficult to obtain, and the Government is as greatly handicapped in properly defending such cases as any party to a litigation has ever been in the history of civilized These men come now and plead for an opportunity to present claims as if they were the injured parties.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman will except from his indictment the citizens of Texas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not.

Mr. GARNER. The Indians never had any property in the State of Texas. They had no rights there, and the people residing in the State of Texas received their injuries at the hands of tribes that had broken out of reservations controlled by the Government

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be. I would not be at all surprised, although I do not assert it as a fact, if those depredations of Indians in Texas were due somewhat to the excursions made by the inhabitants of Texas into the Indian country, by which excursions the Indians suffered much more than the white men did from the Indians deploying into Texas. It does not require that a person shall live very near to the Indian country to have some knowledge of the capacity, resource-fulness, and enterprise of those hardy pioneers in the early days, who sought the State of Texas and made it their home.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], because he comes from the Panhandle district, and probably it was the predecessors of his present constituents who made many of the excursions into the Indian territory that was the cause of most of the destruction and injury from Indians in their excursions into Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that the State of Oklahoma was originally a part of the Indian Terri-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is the gentleman aware that the State of Texas has furnished for the last 50 years practically all of the beef for the United States, and that we had to drive every animal across Oklahoma in order to get it to Kansas City, and thence to the northern market?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and I know that Texas fattened its cattle until a recent period upon the grasslands of the Indians in Oklahoma at a very unremunerative return to the

[Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Where did the Indian get any grassland in Texas upon which to graze Texas cattle?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I am talking about Oklahoma.

Mr. GARNER. But I understood we were talking about Texas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we are not. The gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the committee [Mr. Stephens], knows and I do not know whether the gentleman from Texas on my right [Mr. GARNER] does-that the cattle of Texas driven through Oklahoma fattened on the grasslands of the Osage Indians and were shipped from Elgin, on the line between Texas and Oklahoma, to Kansas City, and were fattened on the grasslands of the Indians and at a very unremunerative price to the Indians. I am familiar with that matter.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to object to the gentleman locating Elgin on the border between Texas and Oklahoma.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oklahoma and Kansas, I intended to I am not sure whether it is located north or south of the say. line.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is north of the line, in Kansas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows where it is. When I was in the Indian country it was quite an important cattle-shipping point,

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman has referred to a report made by me in 1904.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it was in 1905.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the report is dated 1904.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, in the Fifty-eighth Congress. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In which the committee reported a bill eliminating the amity requirements; and he particularly called attention to the fact that he and other distinguished gentlemen filed a minority report. I would like to ask the gentleman if in that minority report they did not, as a matter of fact, find that the claims that would be affected by changing the law as to citizenship would not exceed $500,000, and if they did not also say, in substance, that they had no objections to amending the law so far as citizenship was concerned?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, sir; not exactly. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Pretty nearly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will state what the report stated, so that there will be no misunderstanding. The gentlemen who joined in that minority report said that they had practically no objection to amending the provision as to citizenship so as to include those who had served in and had received honorable discharges from the military and naval services of the United States or who had filed a declaration of intention to become citizens. But that does not include, by a very large percentage, all of those who would be affected by the proposed bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It practically substantiates what I have said, that there has been no opposition to speak of to this change in the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, well; not to speak of. There never was much discussion of it. There never was much chance to consider the bill, because the majority of the House would not consider it, and while the minority at that time assumed, for the purpose of argument, that $500,000 would probably be the extent of the claims that might be successful if the defense of citizenship were removed, it called attention to the fact that those were the figures advanced by the proponents of the bill, and it called attention, further, to the statement of the Hon. John G. Thompson-Judge Thompson, then Assistant Attorney General-who said:

The nearest we have been able to get at the matter of the requirement of citizens has been that it probably would result in judgment to the amount of half a million dollars, at least, and it probably would not exceed a million dollars in judgments. That is the very nearest we have been able to approximate it.

Judge Thompson at that time fixed the minimum recovery, as the result of removing the defense of citizenship, at $500,000, and, as nearly as he could approximate it, it would run up to a million dollars. I had referred to the report, however, to call the attention of the House to the attitude of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] and the attitude of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens]. They were assuring the House that if this bill passed and were amended in the Senate they would not consent to an agreement on the bill with such amendments. The House, perhaps, might have been under the impression that the bill with such amendments would go to conference, and that with the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from South Dakota as conferees it would be impossible ever to vote upon such a proposition. But the amendment that would be made, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANNI has previously stated, would be to strike out, in line 11, page 1, the words "in amity with and," and when the bill would come back from the Senate with the amendment any Member of the House, upon request, could have the Senate amendment laid before the House and insist upon a vote being taken upon concurring in that amendment. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] very frankly announces that he believes the amity defense should be stricken out; many others undoubtedly have the same views. Mr. Chairman, what is the fact about this bill? In 1859 Congress repealed a law under which any claims would arise as a result of depredations of Indians in the United States. The policy of the country up to that time had been, by an arangement in legislation, to prevent, if possible, the white settlers from provoking the Indians or pressing forward and stirring them to strife and despoiling the Indians of lands which they were occupying.

The policy apparently had not been satisfactory and the country was put upon its notice that the United States would not longer be responsible for the depredations committed by Indians hostile or in amity whether they were in tribal relations or not with the United States. So the matter drifted and Congress was pestered and plagued during all following time to pass some legislation so as to open up the doors of the Treasury to those seeking to obtain reimbursement for alleged depredations from Indians in amity. In 1885 an act was passed which directed the Secretary of the Interior to report upon the claims of citizens of the United States arising from such depredations, and in 1891 the persistent efforts continuing, an act was passed conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to consider the claims of citizens and a limitation of three years within which they might be filed was fixed in the law. In the act of 1891 it was provided that the claims should have preference which had been reported upon by the Secretary of the Interior and unless they were reopened by either party they should go to judgment for the amount recommended by the Secretary of the Interior as due the claimants; if they were opened upon application of either party the burden of proof was placed upon the party upon whose application the claims were opened, so that the United States was put at a very great disadvantage in this litigation. The only activities from which there is no protection, against which agitation does not cease, no matter what the attitude of Congress, is in the attempts to obtain money from the Treasury of the United States. If this bill be passed this House may be assured that the attempts will be more persistent to enact legislation to remove the amity defense, and as it is pointed out in the record claims have been filed and would be opened aggregating the enormous sum of $43,000,000. We have spent enough controlling the Indians and protecting those people without reimbursing them for doubtful claims. This bill is not particularly desired. No one is anxious to obtain the legislation here proposed. What is desired is legislation to remove the defense of amity. This bill is but the first step to the opening of the floodgates of ancient doubtful claims which should never be considered by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record as a part of my remarks the minority views submitted in the Fifty-eighth Congress to which I have called attention. They contain a carefully prepared presentation of the views of those who oppose this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to above is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, submit the following as our reasons why the bill H. R. 54 should not

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, submit the following as our reasons why the bill H. R. 54 should not pass:

The act of March 3, 1891, provided that the Court of Claims should have jurisdiction over—

"All claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any band, tribe, or nation in amity with the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for."

The first amendment proposed is to change the act of 1891 so as to extend relief under said act to all inhabitants of the United States, whether they were citizens or not, or whether they had done any act showing their intentions to become citizens or not. We believe it would be unwise to go as far as is proposed by said amendment. There have been 19,841 cases filed under the act of March 3, 1891; judgments have been rendered in 5,072 of them, and the amount recovered was $4,174,646.70; the average judgment is about $800.

The committee gave full hearings on this bill and yet it is impossible to tell just how many persons would be affected by this amendment; but it is estimated by those who favor a change in the law that there will be at least 150 out of the 3,000 cases in which judgment has already been rendered for the defendant which would be reinstated by the change, and it is reasonable to suppose that there are at least that number (150), in the 5,700 cases still pending, in which the question of citizenship will be raised if the law is changed.

Taking these figures as true it would cost the Government about $500,000; but Hon. John G. Thompson, Assistant Attorney General, said:

"The nearest we have been able to get at the matter of the require-

Taking these figures as true it would cost the Government about $500,000; but Hon. John G. Thompson, Assistant Attorney General, said:

"The nearest we have been able to get at the matter of the requirement of citizens has been that it would probably result in judgments to the amount of a half a million dollars, at least, and it probably would not exceed a million dollars in judgments. That is the very nearest we have been able to approximate it."

While we do not oppose a change in the law on the question of citizenships so as to include the men who served in the Army or who had declared their intention to become citizens, yet we do not believe all restrictions in this regard should be removed.

The object of the second amendment is to wipe out the amity clause in the act of March 3, 1891. This would make the Government liable even though the Indians were on the warpath when the depredations were committed.

We submit that the amity clause has been in every act since 1796, and is the settled law of the country. To change it would be to open up many cases, and we believe it would cost the Government at least $9.000.000 or $10,000.000.

The advocates of this change admit that it would restore 2,000 cases which have already been passed upon by the court. If that is so, there must be at least 2,000 cases still pending which, if this change is made, would be decided against the Government.

The advocates of this amendment say it will add to the liability of the United States about $4,500,000.

Mr. Thompson, Assistant Attorney General, says that the change in the amity provision would affect about 3,500 cases, and if the provision of amity is stricken out that it would cost the Government not less than $5,000,000, and that it would take about five years to finally adjudicate all the claims. We feel that both the Assistant Attorney General and Mr. Robeson underestimate the sum this change would cost the Government. We believe if the amity is no longer a defense, and those cases which have been decided in favor of the defendant on account of the amity clause are restored to the docket, that the general average of the judgments would be increased, and we believe that the enactment of this legislation will cost the Government not less than $$,000,000.

We see no good reason for changing the policy which has been followed for more than 100 years. To change the law now and limit it to the 10,000 cases filed under the act of March 3, 1891, would be unfair to the many claimants whose cases were disposed of under former acts. We are opposed to this legislation, because we believe it will cost the Government from $$,000,000 to $0,000,000, because it changes the well-settled policy of this Government that it ought not to be and will not be responsible, for the depredations committed by Indians while on the warpath.

We recommend that the bill do not pass.

J. S. SHERMAN, CHARLES CURTIS, JOHN F. LACEY, CHAS, L. KNAPP, JOHN J. FITZGERALD,

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN DEPREDATIONS ACT.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following supplemental views of the minority to accompany H. R. 54:

The majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs has reported favorably upon the bill (H. R. 54) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891 (1 Supp. Rev. Stat., 2d ed., 913). The minority members of the committee submit this supplemental report in dissent from the reasoning in the report heretofore filed by the majority and from the recommendation therein made, for the reasons which are set forth below.

The bill provides for the amendment of the statute in several respects, all of the amendments increasing the liability of the United States. The requirement that the claimant must have been a citizen of the United States at the time of the loss or destruction of his property is stricken out. It is provided that where a claimant has brought suit against Indians who are shown to have been innocent of any wrongdoing he may, without limitation as to time, amend his petition so as to bring in a tribe or tribes not theretofore made parties to the suit, and that any petition filed under the provisions of the jurisdictional statute may be amended so as to include all parties in interest. The most important feature of the bill, however, and the one which would most largely increase the liability of the United States, is the repeal of the requirement that the Indians charged with the commission of the depredation must have belonged to a tribe in amity with the United States, and it is to that provision alone that this report relates.

The act of March 3, 1891, is purely jurisdictional, except that it would most tagely increase the indinity of the United States, is the repeal of the requirement that the Indians charged with the commission of the depredation must have belonged to a tribe in unity with the control of the Child of the Chil application to their tribe for satisfaction; and, failing this, the United States guaranteed to the party injured eventual indemnification—

"Provided always, That if such injured party, his representative, attorney, or agent shall in any way violate any of the provisions of this act by seeking or attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge by crossing over the line on any Indian lands, he shall forfelt all claim upon the United States for such indemnification."

This limiting clause has been carried through all subsequent legislation on the subject, and it clearly indicates the reason for assuming liability. It is also worthy of note that all these statutes provide that nothing therein contained should prevent the legal arrest or punishment of any Indian having so offended.

Now, when a state of warfare exists between the United States and any tribe of Indians, this reason ceases to apply to relations with that tribe, while it still applies to all other tribes except the one at war. There being no reason, therefore, for assuming an obligation to pay for the acts of hostile Indians, Congress expressly excepted them from the class of acts for which payment would be guaranteed; and the statute reads:

the acts of nostile Indians, Congress expressly excepted them from the class of acts for which payment would be guaranteed; and the statute reads:

"If any Indian or Indians belonging to any tribe in amity wifth the United States * * shall take, steal, or destroy, etc."

Proof that Congress did not intend the statute to apply to the acts of hostile tribes is found also in the mode of operation when a claim was presented. The agent, or superintendent, or other person thereto authorized, was directed to make application to the nation or tribe to which the offending Indian or Indians belonged for satisfaction—a procedure which would obviously be furthe, if not impossible, when the nation or tribe of Indians was at war with the United States.

As in the case of the provision prohibiting the seeking of private satisfaction, this stipulation requiring amily has been carried into every subsequent statute promising indemnity. (Acts of May 19, 1796, 4 Stat. L., 472; March 30, 1834, 4 Stat. L., 731.)

Whatever liability exists on the part of the United States was created by these statutes; and even the promise which they contained was repealed by the act of February 28, 1859 (11) Stat. L., 401), and only reenacted in part by the act of March 3, 1891, by the section of that act which provides for the payment of judgments in certain contingencies out of the Treasury of the United States. Neither in the statutes which promised indemnity, nor in the jurisdictional act which provided a forum for the trial of the cases, did the United States assume any liability express or implied, growing out of statutory enactment, and since the rule is universal that a nation will not pay its citizens for damages caused by the public enemy, we see not in amity with the United States.

Since there is no liability, express or implied, growing out of statutory enactment, and since the rule is universal that a nation will not pay its citizens for damages caused by the public enemy, we see not manufact that the reformance of paying the great num growing out of the Creek war in Georgia and Alabama); a very much larger number in the years from 1850 to 1860; and the great majority of all the cases flied, before 1871, when it was for the first time declared by Congress that we would no longer make treaties with the Indian tribes.

The question whether war in an international sense could exist between the United States and the Indian tribes prior to 1871, or at any time, is not pertinent to this discussion. The relations between the United States and the Indian tribes were peculiar. It was early declared by the Supreme Court that—"In the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of our Government we have admitted by the most solemn sanction the existence of the Indians as a separate and a distinct people and as being vested with rights which constitute them a State or separate community." (Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet., 515, 583.)

They have been described by the same authority as "dependent position when they preserve their tribal relations; not as States, not as nations, not as possessed of the full attributes of sovereignty, but as a separate people, with the power of regulating their internal and social relations; and thus far not brought under the laws of the Union or of the States within whose limits they reside." (Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet., and United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S., 375.)

This view of the relations between the United States and the Indian tribes was reaffirmed in the Choctaw Nation v. The United States (110 U. S., 1), where it was again held that they were capable, under the forward of the United States, and the service of the Constitution of entering into treaty relations with the Government of the United States; and these cases were all cited with approval in the Supreme Court in the recent case of Stevens v. The Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 476-486).

The Indian tribes were subject to the soverelgnty of the United States but they were subject to the soverelgnty with equal force in such conflicts. The people of the Phili war between great nations, by a truce or armistice pending negotiations, by a surrender of the warriors in the field as prisoners of war, and by the making of a solemn treaty of peace afterwards ratified by the Senate of the United States.

In at least one instance the United States was the defeated party—the war with the Sloux in 1867-98; for by the treaty of peace which terminated that war (15 Stat. L., 635, 640, art. 16) the United States agrees that the territory in dispute shall remain and be considered as unceded Indian territory, and that no white person shall be permitted to reside upon the same or to pass through it without the consent of the Indians first had and obtained; and further agrees to abandon within 00 days the military posts previously established in the territory and to close the military road leading to them—thus fully conceding the demands of the Indians which caused the war. There was a war with the Creek Indians in 1856 and 1837; with the Sloux in Minnesota in 1862 to 1864; with the Navaho of New Mexico in 1860 and again in 1863; with all the great tribes of the platins in 1864 and 1865; with the Sloux and Cheyenne in 1866 and 1867; with the Comanche in 1868 and 1869. During these wars the destruction of life and property was, of course, great; but it was due to the acts of armed bodies of Indians fighting against the United States—to the acts of the public enemy. It could not be avoided, and the Government is not responsible for it.

There is another side to this question, which has been little regarded. The act of March 3, 1891, provides for judgments in the first histance against the Indian tribes, the United States being held merely as guarantor; and it is provided that the judgments is the first histance against the Indian fribes, the United States being held merely as guarantor; and it is provided that the judgments shall be paid out of the Indian funds in the custody of the United States. If there be no funds available, the judgment is to remain a charge against the tribe, to be gress. . "The last proviso to paragraph 4, Revised Statutes, section 1059, ress.

"The last proviso to paragraph 4, Revised Statutes, section 1059, provides:

"That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction of or the appropriation or damage to property by the Army or Navy engaged in the suppression of the rebellion."

"By the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. L., 485, sec. 3), this court is also inhibited from taking jurisdiction of claims 'growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion,' and that inhibition applies to loyal as well as disloyal citizens who may have suffered such loss. The same inhibition is contained in the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 505, sec. 1), wherein it is provided:

"That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late Civil War and commonly known as war claims,"

"So, aside from the lack of obligation to pay war claims arising from international law and the laws of war, the United States have, by express statute, set their face against the payment of such claims against the United States.

"The Government, therefore, having by express statutes denied to its loyal citizens payment for the loss or destruction of property occurring in the War of the Rebellion, can not be held liable, as guarantor or otherwise, in the absence of some express provision of law, to pay losses occurring in Indian wars; and certainly the United States would not apply a different rule to a 'domestic dependent nation,' with whom they were in treaty relations, without the consent of such tribe or nation."

The instances given in the report of the majority of the committee (with one exception) refer to cases where the hostilities were waged by they were in treaty relations, without the consent of such tribe or nation."

The instances given in the report of the majority of the committee (with one exception) refer to cases where the hostilities were waged by a "band" of Indians, small in number, and constituting only a part of some tribe which was at peace; the argument drawn from the illustrations given has, therefore, application only to that part of the statute and is not applicable at all to the contention in which they are introduced—the contention that there should be a total repeal of the clause requiring amity.

The instances cited embrace a comparatively small number of claims, and they are in part offset by the converse holding of the Court of Claims, that where a band is at peace the fact that the majority of the tribe is at war will not invalidate claims for depredations by individuals belonging to the peaceable minority. For example, while we were engaged in the war with the Sloux Indians during which Custer fell, when all the available force of the United States was required for their subjugation, a portion of the same tribe remained on the reservation in the vicinity of white settlements and committed many depredations, for which the claimants have recovered under that interpretation of the law of which complaint is now made.

It is argued also that the court determines with difficulty the beginning and end of an Indian war, since there is not, usually, if ever, a formal declaration of war; but the court has not complained and it appears that the decisions have been sufficiently uniform and remarkably free from error.

There is matter in the report of the majority of the committee which we could wish eliminated. That report refers to the Indian tibes and ably free from error.

There is matter in the report of the majority of the committee which we could wish climinated. That report refers to the Indian tribes and nations as "a horde of savage individuals * * having no organic character as a nation or State and having only such rude semblance of government as suffices to secure unity of action when on the warpath, and it is said that "such is not war in any proper sense of the term, but merely brigandage; the motive is not love of country or solicitude for any public interest, but only thirst for plunder and lust for Llood.

* * There is only the animus furandi which inspires the bandit and the buccaneer."

Such a general characterization of the American Indian is not in accord with historic truth. It ignores the great nations of Indians like the Sloux, the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Seminoles, many of whom have progressed in civilization and order to an extent which is truly remarkable when we consider their limitations and disadvantages. It ignores the gentler and more peaceful tribes, not a few in number, whose boast it is that they have never shed the white man's blood. It ignores and contradicts the undoubted facts that in Indian wars the Indians have fought a brave, though losing, fight for the preservation of their ancestral homes from the intrusion of the white race—an intrusion which was often in faithless violation of the most selemn treaty piedges by our Government.

ancestral homes from the intrusion of the white race—an intrusion which was often in faithless violation of the most solemn treaty piedges by our Government.

It has been said that in all the history of our relations with the Indian tribes the Indians have never violated a treaty and the United States has never kept one. While this is an extreme statement it must nevertheless be admitted by every impartial student of history that the Indian tribes have only too often been justified in going to war, and if the characterization in the majority report referred to above is true of the Indians as a whole the policy of our Government for 100 years in treating with them and the decisions of our Supreme Court for a longer time than that have been mere foolishness. If it was not intended to refer generally to the Indian tribes, but only to isolated instances of savage outbreaks, it has no place in the argument.

Further dissenting from the views expressed in the majority report, we think that they have underestimated the additibnal expense which the passage of the bill would cause. It is stated on page 6 of the report that Assistant Attorney General Thompson estimated that the bill would increase the liability of the United States by a sum not exceeding $5,000,000; but this was not the statement made by the Assistant Attorney General. In the published report of the hearings before the committee he stated (p. 41):

"I do not believe that the amount * * would be less than $5,000,000."

And again (p. 43):
"I do not think the minimum would be less than $5,000,000 in any event."

"I do not think the minimum would be less than $5,000,000 In any event."

And this estimate, as well as other estimates submitted to the committee, is based upon the average judgment heretofore rendered in cases where amity was not a defense—the cases growing in large part out of the smaller pilferings of individuals or small bedies of Indians. While the estimate made is that this legislation will increase the liability of the United States by not less than $5,000,000, yet we believe that if the want of amity is no longer a defense, and those cases which have been decided in favor of the defendants on account of the amity chause are restored to the docket, the general average of the judgments will be increased, and we believe that the enactment of this legislation will cost the Government not less than $8,000,000. In addition to this, a great deal of time and money have been expended in defending such of the claims as are subject to the defense of amity. At the cost of great labor to the court and the attorneys representing the Government the status of the various tribes has been fixed for practically the whole time covered by the depredation claims. If this bill should become a law that labor and money will have been thrown away.

We see no good reasons for changing the policy which has been followed for more than 100 years; and for the reasons stated we recommend that the bill do not pass.

The CHAIRMAN The gentleman from Texas has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] if he would object to Mr. Miller and Mr. Ferris dividing the time. Mr. Miller was not present a few minutes ago.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not make any objection.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] five minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have anything to say at this time in addition to that which I said the other day in the extended talk I made upon the subject. It is natural for gentlemen who may be ardently opposed to legislation to seek to be loud the issue, magnify the importance of the matter under consideration, and to put the thing in a light as unfavorable as possible. I have no objection to this and I think likely I would take the same course if I were of their number; but, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to divest our minds at this time of some of the vagaries that exist in connection with this subject. In the first place, suggestions have been continuously thrown out about the large sum of money involved, and yet there can not be a man within the sound of my voice at this moment who does not know in his heart that if this amendment is passed it can not involve an expenditure to exceed $500,000. Let us pass with that. Then we had much said with respect to a horde of claimants and the opening up of the Treasury doors of the United States to a class of citizens of the Treasury doors of the United States to a class of citizens who should not seek to get possession of the public money. I admire, Mr. Chairman, the frankness of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] when he said that his objection to this bill was based upon opposition to any legislation giving to any white person a right of recovery for Indian depredations. His objection therefore does not go to the merits of this bill. We are not now called upon to determine the policy of such legislation. The law already exists, having been passed by Congress more than 20 years ago. The proposition before us is so to change that law, so to amend it, that it will be perfected, which such benefits as the contemplated by the law to these giving such benefits as are contemplated by the law to those who are the most meritorious of all. The gentleman from Miswho are the most meritorious of an. The gentieman from Anssissippi [Mr. Sisson] frankly stated that were this entirely new legislation and it were necessary to pass an act granting recovery for Indian depredations, he would favor giving the right to inhabitants and not simply citizens. He should therefore favor this bill, and I call upon him now to vote to make the law exactly as he would have voted to make it when it originally passed, had he been a Member of this House at the

I am inclined to think, as I said the other day, that if we were at the outset of this legislation I might agree with him against the propriety of granting a recovery for Indian depredations in any case, but such a law being in existence I hope he will join with us and make that law as it ought to have been made when first enacted.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a huge bugaboo with which to scare people. It is simply a reasonable change in the law to benefit a most deserving class of citizens. Most, if not all, of those to be benefited by this act thought they were citizens when they brought their suits and had good reason to entertain that belief, I do not know as any word of mine can give added emphasis to the worth of those men in whose interest this amendment is drawn. If any men ever should recover for Indian depredations, these are the men. If any class of citizens should be the object of legislative solicitude, this is the class. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, as one Member of this House, that there can be no more deserving men on earth than those who are to be the recipients of whatever benefit this amendment may give.

I join with you all, and I know the feeling is common, in admiration and veneration for the achievements of the American soldier and the American sailor. Their deeds make glorious all human history. But I want to say to you that the American pioneer, in his boldness of spirit, in the strength of his arm and mind, in the heart that never blanched and the courage that never failed, in the contributions he made to the civilization of the race, stands the most illustrious citizen of all-the world. Armed with the rifle and the ax, he marched from the Alleghenies across the broad valley, over the great Rockies, and down the slope, till the sound of his labors has been lost in the murmurs of the Pacific seas. He has conquered to civilization a region greater in extent and richer in wealth than all the countries ever conquered by all the soldiers of the world. From these stanch empire builders have come the giant statesmen and the military heroes that have made illustrious our country during the past century. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to add anything additional to what I said on the bill last Wednesday. The passage of the bill, so far as I know, means nothing to any citizen of my State. What assistance or support I render to it will be an unselfish support and solely because I think the bill should pass. And I will call attention of the House to two or three reasons why I think it common justice to pass it.

The treaty which annexed the Texas Republic to the United States in 1845 solemnly bound the United States to protect the settlers of the border country against the ravages of the wild tribes of Indians who broke away and got over into that State, I take issue with some of the gentlemen here on the proposition that the Government of the United States is not equitably, and I am not sure but honestly, bound to protect these peoplebound to recompense them for property so taken. The Republic of Texas came in and was annexed upon several conditions, one of which was-and I think it was perhaps one of the most important ones other than to become a citizen of the United States, which of course was the highest one-that they were to be protected against the Indians of the Indian Territory that had been collected from every corner of this Republic. surrendered their own governmental protection and entered into a treaty with our Government for protection in lieu thereof. The fact that certain persons went out and settled the frontier of the West may be treated lightly by gentlemen here. It has been said by the gentleman from New York that these people are entitled to no protection, and he intimated that they were not properly there, but that could hardly be the fact. men who went out and settled Texas and the semiarid West were the bravest, truest, and most courageous patriots that the country had. The weak-kneed fellows remained behind at their father's cornerib, and did not press out into the West and open it up and make it what it is. So, as to what has been said regarding the people who went West, I hurl it back at them and say that it was the most courageous, brave, clear-headed patriots who went West, and it was the weak and feebler ones who clung to their mother's apron strings.

This bill changes the act of 1891 in one respect only-that of citizenship. It is limited so that it does not apply to any tribes that were not in amity with the United States. applies to suits that have been brought, and, as I am informed and as the committee believes, I even think it will not be denied that quite everyone of those men who brought these suits between the years of 1891 and 1894 honestly thought that they were citizens of the United States and based their views on years and years of exercising full citizenship. Many of them held office. Many of them had been jurors.

Now, what is the situation? Here we have the act of 1801, recognizing that the Federal Government ought to do something for these frontiersmen, many of whom lost their all. The act of 1891 sure recognized the fact that this Government ought to keep their solemn treaty stipulations of 1845, when they agreed to protect these people from the ravages of the then wild Indians. These people who brought these suits, prosecuting them from the Court of Claims clear on up to the Supreme Court of the United States, many of them, have recovered. Many of them failed on merit and are disposed of. Others failed by reason of the bald technicality that they were not for one reason or another citizens of the United States under some strict legal construction of citizenship laws. This act merely permits them to have the same consideration others no more deserving have already had. It merely gives these unfortunate litigants a new trial, so that they may get in the Court of Claims the question of technical citizenship notwithstanding and recover their just dues. It has been said here that the people have no rights out there. That is not so. If they were in the Indian country wrongfully, this act excludes them; at least so far as their property is concerned. The bill provides, if wrongfully there with their property, they can not recover. If they had their property in the Indian country wrongfully, this bill prevents a recovery.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FERRIS. I will; but I have just a moment of time.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment to include the person, as well, wrongfully in the Indian country?

Mr. FERRIS. Personally I have no objection to that. Of course, this is not my bill, and I would not feel at liberty to accept such an amendment. This bill is not intended to help men out who acted wrongfully, either as to their persons or as to their property. It is merely to confer a just and equitable right on the men who honestly believed that they were citizens and who were knocked out on a technicality. When the Republic of Texas came into the Union, in 1846-47, it was the belief of those citizens who then lived in the Republic of Texas that they were to be full citizens of the United States, that they would come into the United States as full citizens of the United States. But when the act of 1891 was passed, giving them an opportunity to recover for their lost fortunes that had been by the United States wards carried off, stolen, or destroyed, they were confronted by the proposition that by reason of a bald technicality they could not recover.

I do not know what the House will do. I repeat, I do not know that this legislation will benefit a single citizen of my State. I am inclined to think it will not. But the Federal Government ought not to go off on a side issue, and gentlemen ought not to vote on this bill on the theory that the Senate will put on some amendments that the House will not stand for. The Federal Government, it seems to me, ought to pay its honest debts and obligations, and I believe this is one of them. No one is more proud of their citizenship than I, but an honest obligation entered into with the Republic of Texas ought to be complied with. We were fortunate to have Texas become a State in the sisterhood, and we ought to make good our treaty pledge to them in protecting those border States. I think it proper to see that no claims be loaded onto our Government other than just claims, but surely it will not quicken the patriotic blood of any citizen to have his country fail to recognize just claims. No citizen can destroy himself so soon as to be negligent about his obligations. I can not but wonder if the same principle might not be at least partially applicable to the Federal Government. I again repeat, no one is prouder than I that I am an American citizen. My affection and devotion is not quickened by the unenviable reputation our Government is acquiring for the repudiation, or at least the ignoring, of our obligations, promises, and treaty stipulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of paragraph 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"First. All claims for property of citizens or inhabitants of the United States, except the claims of Indians heretofore or now in tribal relations, taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for, and in all adjudications under said act as now amended the alienage of the claimant shall not be a defense to said claims: Provided, That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian territory: Provided further, That all cases hereto-fore filed under said act of March 3, 1891, and which have been dismissed by the court for want of proof of the citizenship of the claimant, shall be reinstated and readjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims: Provided further, That all acts and parts of acts, in so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed."

Mr. Mann. Mr. Chairman, a perliamentary inpulity.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is the bill subject to amendment by paragraphs or will the entire bill be read in one section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is the judgment of the Chair that the bill should be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. MANN. So that the first paragraph is now subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the first paragraph is now subject to amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a preferential motion, to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] moves to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division, Mr. Chairman. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The committee divided; and there were-ayes 61, noes 38.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] that there is evidently more than a quorum present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I call for tellers, Mr. Chairman. Mr. MANN. I ask the Chair to count.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is a quorum present. The ayes are 61, the noes 38, and counting the Chairman, who did not vote, 100 Members are present.

Mr. GARNER. We ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. Stephens of Texas and Mr. Sisson.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 73, noes 38.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr, Chairman, I move that the committce rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14667) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," proved March 3, 1891, and had instructed him to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 14667, and has instructed him to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the enacting clause was stricken

On motion of Mr. Fitzgerald, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Indian Affairs Committee having occupied two days, the Clerk will call the next committee.

The Committee on the Territories was called.

LEGISLATURE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Territories, I desire to call up the bill (H.R. 13987) to create a legislature in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, which

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill being on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, pending the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Drafer] if we can agree on a limit of time for the debate?

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, we have a number of requests for time on this side, and I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia the advisability of allowing the debate to run for

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Speaker, that the time for debate be controlled on this side by myself and on the Republican side by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Draper], without fixing any limit of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood] asks unanimous consent that in the debate on the bill the time be controlled one half by himself and the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRAPER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Under the rule, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CLINE in the chair.

Mr. CLINE took the chair amid general applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13987) to create a legislature in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous mous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, the bill that is reported is not the bill that the committee now presents.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, yes, it is. I am not sure that I understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. The committee have reported and we now have under consideration House bill 13987. As I understand—and I ask for information—the committee have agreed upon a substitute bill to eliminate a good deal of this bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, yes. Mr. MANN. Is that printed under some other number?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; it is printed as a substitute under this number.

Tr. MANN. I do not know where it is printed as a substitute under this number. Has it been reported?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It has been reported by the committee. There was a bill originally introduced, and the committee, as the gentleman says, made a number of changes in it and reported this bill.

Mr. CARTER. This is the reported bill.
Mr. MANN. I knew this bill, H. R. 13987, is a bill which was reported from that committee by the gentleman from Virginia in lieu of House bill 38; but I am informed that since the reporting of this bill the committee have agreed upon various changes in it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. And that they propose to eliminate a great deal of this bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; the committee have agreed upon one or two amendments which are to be offered as committee amendments. The committee have made no change in this bill except in one or two particulars. The committee have agreed upon some amendments which will be offered hereafter as committee amendments.

Mr. MANN. I was given a bill marked "Committee print" in blank, with the name of the Delegate from Alaska upon it, which varies from this bill materially; and I simply asked if we could know what propositions were to come before the committee

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If you could know what the amendments were?

Mr. MANN. If this other bill shows the amendments which are now to be offered.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not know. I am not familiar with the print which the gentleman has in his hand.

Mr. MANN. It is a bill printed by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not know that it is.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that it is, but I was so told. Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It was a bill introduced in the House by the Delegate from Alaska and printed by the House, not by the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will pardon me, as a matter of fact, is it not the bill H. R. 18777? I understood that was the bill that was to be considered.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; the bill to be considered is H. R. 13987.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia to dispense with the further reading of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the Delegate from Alaska at the extraordinary session of this Congress and was unanimously reported from the Committee on the Territories on the 21st day of last August. not know that all the members of the committee were present when the bill was reported, but I have heard no objection from any member of the committee since it was reported, and I think I am safe in saying that the bill as reported meets the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Territories.

The purpose of the bill is to provide a legislature for the Territory of Alaska, and to give the body thus created limited powers. We purchased Alaska from Russia in 1867 for $7,-200,000. Since that time-45 years-that we have owned this vast Territory, we have spent on it in every way, including the expenditures for post offices and post roads, $28,500,000, making a total expended by this Government for Alaska, including the purchase price and all other expenditures, the sum of $35,-During that period the people of this country have received in money for the products they have brought out of that Territory and in cash collected in taxes the vast sum of $444,000,000, thus showing a net balance in favor of Alaska of over $408,000,000, which has gone into the channels of trade in this country, enriching many of our citizens and adding to the prosperity and wealth of the Pacific Coast States, if it has not at times saved that section from bankruptcy.

Alaska to-day is vastly rich in gold and silver, coal and copper, in fisheries and fur-bearing animals. It possesses agricultural possibilities which will astound any gentleman who investigates that phase of Alaska's wealth for the first time.

The agricultural possibilities of Alaska are confined to its great and splendid valleys, many of which are larger than a number of States in this Union, and which are well adapted to the growth of barley, rye, oats, potatoes, and other products as are grown in such countries as Norway, Sweden, and Finland.

The agricultural possibilities of Alaska are greater to-day than those of these three countries combined, and they without than those of these three countries comone, and they will the enormous mineral wealth of Alaska, without its wealth of fisheries, support a population of 9,000,000 people.

As evidence of the agricultural possibilities of Alaska I will incorporate in my remarks a statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Hon. James Wilson.

ALASKA EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

ALASKA EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The establishment of agricultural experiment stations in Alaska was the result of an appropriation of $5,000 made by Congress for the fiscal year 1898, in which the Department of Agriculture was charged "with the investigation and report to Congress upon the agricultural resources and capabilities of Alaska, with special reference to the desirability and feasibility of the establishment of agricultural experiment stations in said Territory."

An investigation covering the summer of 1897 showed that there were decided indications of agricultural possibilities in that country when judged by the known conditions in northern Europe and the native and introduced vegetation, the presence of gardens, etc., in the regions visited. In 1898 headquarters were established at Sitka and work began to determine the possibilities of agriculture in Alaska. Since then stations have been established on the Island of Kodlak and at Kenal, on the peninsula of that name, at Copper Center in the valley of the Copper River, and at Rampart and Fairbanks, representing the Yukon and Tanana Valleys. The reports of the work at all these points consistent the early bellef that in many parts of Alaska agriculture can be practiced to a considerable extent.

On account of local or other considerations it has been thought advisable to divide the work according to what has appeared to be the most practical lines of investigation. At Sitka, representing southeastern Alaska, where large areas of level land are not available, horticultural work has been given prominence. At Rampart and Fairbanks stations, where the are extensive tracts of land suitable to cultivation, grain growing has been given especial attention, supplementing it with trials of standard vegetable crops. At Kodlak, representing southwestern Alaska, where large areas of jevel land are not available, horticultural work has been given especial attention, supplementing it with trials of standard vegetable crops. At Kodlak, representing southwestern Alaska, kale, mustard, lettuce, carrots, parsnips, parsley, peas, cress, cabbage, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, kohl-rabi, onions, spinach, endive, leeks, beets, potatoes, and rhubarb, and among the herbs, caraway, catanipmint, and thyme. In specially favored localities and in favorable scasons asparagus, beans, celery, cucumbers, squash, and salsify have been grown by taking advantage of warm sheltered spots with exposures toward the sun. Under ordinary conditions corn, melons, tomatoes, eggplant, and pumpkins have proved failures.

In the interior vaileys grain can be successfully grown, and there outs, befrey, and rye have not ripened at the Rampart station (tat. 65 and by the course of the course

The population of Alaska is about 65,000. If it had been properly governed and had had proper laws for its development, that population would have been to-day five times larger. Its land area is about 600,000 square miles, and about one-half of this is absolutely uninhabited at this time, leaving about 400,000 square miles inhabited by 65,000 people. That gives 1 person to every 6 square miles inhabited, or 160 persons to every thousand square miles; or if the whole area is considered, it gives 1 person to every 9 square miles and 109 to the thouand square miles. These figures demonstrate the fact that Alaska has as dense a population as any Territory that we have organized and given the right of local self-government to since the foundation of this Government. It has as large a population as any Territory that has been organized during the past 70 years.

I here give the figures which show the correctness of this statement:

The area and population of Alaska compared with other Territories.

So, looking at our history, I do not think it can be successfully contended that Alaska has too small a population or is too thinly settled to have the right of local self-government conferred upon it. [Applause.]

Railroad, wagon road, and trail, and a splendid system of telegraph have been built in this Territory. Towns have been built in which there are heating plants, lighting plants, churches, schools, hospitals, and newspapers, and all other adjuncts of civilization that go to make for the comfort and convenience of people tending to insure a stable and permanent population. So I think it can scarcely be argued that the population of this Territory is not stable and permanent.

PERMANENCE AND TRADE.

The permanence of population may be shown by trade as well as census enumeration, and the following is from a statement prepared by the customs officers for Alaska and dated February 1. 1910:

Comparative statement showing value of merchandise shipped from the United States to the different divisions of Alaska.

The four sections covered by this trade statement are substantially the same as the four judicial divisions covered in the foregoing census report on population, and the customs statement shows how nearly equally divided and how permanent from year to year the trade with those four divisions is.

The customs reports show the following total trade (not including a large amount of gold carried out without reporting to customs) with Alaska:

It will interest some of my hearers to have given a comparison of the value of our trade with Alaska with some other of our possessions, as well as with China:

Total trade with the United States.

AlaskaPhilippines	$47, 492, 926 23, 188, 155	$46, 495, 773 19, 147, 341	$52, 109, 999 27, 335, 857
Balance in favor of Alaska	24, 304, 771	27,348,432	24,774,142

The total trade of Hawaii slightly exceeds that of Alaska, while that of Porto Rico just equals it.

Total trade of United States.

Porto Rico	47, 653, 814	46, 470, 247	52, 152, 220

The trade of Hawaii and Porto Rico is limited by the necessities of the population which those two islands can support, and it can not greatly increase. Both their trade and their population are near their maximum. On the contrary, the trade and population of Alaska are at their minimum and will increase for centuries to come. When Alaska's coal, its copper, and other minerals shall be opened for development, when railroads shall connect its open harbors with its rich interior and its mines, and when its great agricultural valleys shall be settled by a million farmers, its trade will greatly exceed all of these small and limited noncontiguous Territories with which it low compares.

Compare Alaska's trade with the United States with that which the United States carries on with China through the "open door," about which so much is said.

Balance in favor of Alaska__

The United States maintains a fleet in Chinese waters and an army of consular officers around the open door; it employs the arts of diplomacy and war to protect a trade which is nearly $4,000,000 less per annum than her trade with Alaska. The balance of trade with China is heavily against the United States, and nearly $10,000,000 are thus annually lost to our country. On the contrary, the United States gets the benefit of the entire trade of Alaska, and nothing is lost. Really, the trade of Alaska is worth more than double that of the open door of China. In addition to that, it is a growing trade, in its infancy, and no limit can be set to its future increase. The China trade is small, expensive, and not liable to increase, for China, instead of becoming a market, is becoming a manu-

A comparison of the per capita trade value of Alaska's population with that of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands is an instructive one.

The trade value of Alaska's population is based upon an estimated total population of 65,000 and an estimated total white Upon that estimate each white man, population of 40,000. woman, and child in Alaska is worth, in trade value, $1,302.75; but when all the Indians and Eskimos-men, women, and children-are added it lowers the per capita value to $801.69. A white man in Alaska is worth 4.6 Hawaiians, 27 Porto Ricans, or 394 Filipinos in trade value. Add to that the value which comes from a permanent and growing trade in Alaska and you have a fair view of the comparative value of Alaska's trade to the United States.

Every dollar of that trade from Alaska was worth double that from the foreign countries, because every dollar that came into the United States from Alaska was an American dollar, and every dollar that went to Alaska was an American dollar.

The Alaskan trade reports certainly corroborate the census reports that the population of the Territory is quite evenly distributed and is permanent.

If we look to the census, we see apparently that the population of Alaska did not increase very much during the period from 1900 and 1910, but it is admitted by the Census Bureau that at least 5,000 people were counted in the 1900 census who ought not to have been counted there, and if that fact is taken into consideration we will find that the Americans in Alaska have increased during that period nearly 10,000, and they would, as I have before remarked, have increased very much more rapidly if those who desired to develop the country had been permitted to open up the coal mines and settle upon the rich agricultural The fact that they have not done this has been the fault of this Government. If we look to the census reports we see that the native and Indian population actually decreased in the decade from 1900 to 1910. That would not have happened if this Government had done its duty by those natives and the people of this Territory. In view of the above facts, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it can be successfully argued that the population of that Territory is not permanent and stable. [Applause.]

We have done little for Alaska. Congress is its legislative body, and we have passed few laws for the development of that vast Territory. We have never properly codified the laws that we have passed. Beginning in 1906 and coming on down, the Executive Department of this Government placed a blanket reservation over all the coal lands in Alaska, over all of the timber lands, and the oil lands, thus putting a cloud upon the title to practically every foot of land in that Territory. There are many laws that ought to be enacted by this Congress in relation to Alaska. There are a number of bills upon the calendar, which, if put upon our statute books, would make of this northern possession a great, a populous, and a prosperous part of our country.

Mr. Chairman, first and foremost among those laws in importance to the people of the Territory and to the people of this Nation is the one embodied in this bill, the one for local self-government, the one which permits the people of Alaska to elect a legislature of her own people, to enact her local laws. According to the precedents which we have established in the admission of other Territories and the granting to these Territories of legislative powers, Alaska has every essential that should entitle her to this right. The land is there, the people are there, the development, so far as we have permitted it to go forward, is there. They have some transportation facilities, and as soon as these reservations are removed from Alaska, and the restrictions taken away, they will have ample transportation facilities, built either by private capital or by this Government. They have a magnificent and sturdy civilization. The people of Alaska are unanimously in favor of local selfgovernment. The press of Alaska, that mirror of public sentiment, with one voice asks for the enactment of the pending bill into law. Fairness and justice and common sense and right demand that we should give to these people what they ask in this respect, and I hope and believe that as soon as this de-bate is concluded this bill will be passed without opposition. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For a mere suggestion in the nature of a question. I have not read the report. I am sure it would be interesting to the Members of the House to know the number of cities and their size and the number of newspapers published in Alaska, and data along that line. It may be that it is in the report for aught I know.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is in the report. I do not know about the number of newspapers. I will ask the delegate from Alaska how many newspapers there are published in Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Twenty-two.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the largest city in the Territory?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the largest city in the Territory?
Mr. WICKERSHAM. Fairbanks.
Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the size of it?
Mr. WICKERSHAM. It has a population of about 6,000.
Mr. CAMPBELL. And that is the city in which are found all of the modern conveniences of civilization?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is one of the numerous towns in the Territory that have the modern conveniences of civilization.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And what are the conveniences to be found in Fairbanks?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In Fairbanks we have electric light, steam heat, automobiles, high schools, seven or eight churches, two big hospitals—in fact, we have everything that will be found in ordinary towns in the East.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the Delegate from Alaska if Juneau and Nome and Skagway are not also growing towns with considerable population—5,000 and up?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, yes; and Valdez, and Cordova, and 20 others.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Have they not all over 5,000 and upward of population?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Many of them, but not all of them; no. Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Well, Nome has had as high as 15,000 during the summer.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; at the time of the census of 1900. Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that is where the error of the census of 1900 came from. Those people at Nome did not really live there, but they took them in the

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. That is, they lived there while they were there

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They were there prospecting.
Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. And were not there all the winter.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They did not stay there long, and that is the population that was taken by the Census Bureau. They were counted under the census of 1900. Many of them were in tents on shore and many on boats in the harbor, and the taking of them in the census greatly swelled the total of Alaska for 1900 and renders a comparison of that census with that of 1910 unfair. But for this fact the increase in the population of Alaska during the last decade would have been considerable

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. For a long time they had a permanent population at Juneau.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; and they still have. Juneau is the capital and is a growing town.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. For a long time it had perhaps the most permanent population of any of the cities, until Fairbanks was started.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy any further time at this time. I may avail myself of the opportunity to close this debate, and I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

sent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Deaper] to use some of his time.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to one sentence in section 10 of the bill and ask for the tion to one sentence in section 10 of the bill and ask for the gentleman's construction of it:

But no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil.

Will not the gentleman elaborate upon that a little?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is a provision that is put in all acts of this kind establishing a Territorial form of government. The Federal Government has never surrendered its right to dispose of the soil. It has a constitutional right to do so, and has claimed that right and has never surrendered it, and this is copied from all other acts of this character.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEDEMEYER], a member of the committee.

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill providing for a legislative assembly for the Territory of Alaska.

Without reflecting in any way on the splendid work of the men who have served on the Committees on Territories as well as the District of Columbia Committees, in this and previous Congresses, I feel that there is much truth in the discussion that I read the other day in a Seattle publication, and from which I quote the following:

The Federal Government at Washington City is not good at local government. Congressional government of any locality can not be good government. It may be better than no government. But for American citizenship—and Alaskans are American citizens—local government, local laws for local needs, is the best, and American citizenship has a right to the best government; has a right to make and administer its own laws—to have the benefit of its own best powers of local administration of its own laws, upon its own responsibility.

Alaska has the right of self-government in the spirit of self-conscious freedom, with responsibility for its own mistakes.

Belleving in the doctrine laid down in what I have quoted, I have felt it my duty to say a word in this behalf, without in any wise reflecting upon the splendid work of the committees that have had to do with Alaskan matters in the past, and knowing that the present Committees on the Territories, both in the House and the Senate, from the chairman down to the last members, are anxious to do what shall be for the very best interest of our great Territory to the North.

I have seen something of Alaska—only a small part of it, to be super for Alaska is continued in its presenting.

be sure, for Alaska is continental in its proportions. However, I think that on the trip I took in the fall of 1909 I learned something of the spirit of the Alaskan people, for I visited a number of the leading towns, including the capital, and met many representative Alaskans.

I left Scattle for Skagway on the good ship Humboldt. On the way up the inside passage on the second day out we took on the passengers of the disabled ship Cottage City, and when I got back to my stateroom I found assigned to me as a fellow passenger Peter T. Rowe, the Episcopal missionary bishop of Alaska. I was very fortunate in this regard, because no ter adapted to its remote situation and peculiar local conditions.

man understands Alaska and its problems better than Bishop Rowe, who for 16 years or more has ministered to the people of that remote Territory. There is not time here to speak of of that remote Territory. There is not time here to speak of his good work, as well as that of the representatives of the other denominations. It is only the truth to say, however, that the progress that has been made in Alaska would have been utterly impossible without the unselfish efforts of missionaries of all denominations who have toiled unremittingly and under the hardest possible conditions.

Bishop Rowe appeared before the committees of both Senate and House recently, urging some action on Alaskan matters in which he was specially interested.

On the same boat, Cottage City, Gov. Clark and his wife were started on their way to Juneau, the capital, where the governor was about to enter upon his duties. He also was transferred to the Humboldt and was a fellow passenger during several days of my trip. I saw him land at Juneau at 3 o'clock in the morning, where he was greeted by the retiring governor and leading citizens generally.

I had met many Alaskans at the Seattle Exposition which was going on at that time. I met many of them on the way up on the boat, as well as in the various towns at which we stopped, men representing every phase of Alaskan life. It took me but a short time to discover the desire of the Alaskan people generally for some form of local self-government. I was interested to note the comments of the newspapers as to Gov. Clark, just then entering upon his duties. I saw a number of Alaskan papers on my trip, and all I saw took very strong grounds in favor of local self-government for Alaska. All of them in unmistakable language expressed the hope that Gov. Clark would be in favor of this proposition. Some of them even said very bluntly that if he was not so disposed he could not expect very enthusiastic support on the part of the people of the Territory. I have no copies of these papers at hand, but I am sure that I am reflecting substantially the spirit of their utterances

About the time of my trip to Alaska the President was in Seattle, Wash, at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. On September 29 the following telegram was sent him, signed by all the newspapers in Alaska except two, by the mayors of the incorporated towns, and by heads of certain commercial bodies: FAIRBANKS, ALASKA, September 29, 1909.

President of the United States, Scattle, Wash.:

WILLIAM H. TAFT,

President of the United States, Scattle, Wash.:

A united press and people of Alaska, in aid of constructive legislation for the creation of a government by the people in this Territory, and in aid of the development of its natural resources, respectfully request you to recommend in your next message to Congress and give your support to the creation of an elective Alaskan legislature in substantial conformity with Delegate Wickersham's bill introduced at the recent special session of Congress.

President Taft in his message to the last Congress, as well

President Taft in his message to the last Congress, as well as in a message communicated to this House February 2, 1912. called attention to the inadequacy of the present system of government in Alaska.

Secretary Fisher, in his annual report, said:

Conditions in Alaska call for immediate action by Congress. Its proper administration and development can not be accomplished under existing laws. These laws neither promote development nor protect the public interest.

RELIEF FOR ALASKA.

He recommends as measures of immediate relief:

First. The construction by the Federal Government of a central trunk-line railroad from the tidewater to the Tanana and the Yukon.

Second. The passage of a liberal but carefully guarded leasing law for the development of its mineral resources, and especially of its coal lands.

Third. The reservation of sufficient amount of these coal lands to provide for the future needs of the Navy, and the mining of this coal by the Government for this purpose.

Fourth. More liberal appropriations for aids to navigation, such as lights and buoys.

Fifth. More liberal appropriations for the construction of roads and trails.

Sixth. The adoption of a form of Territorial government bet-

The report sets forth that the Secretary of the Navy states that there should be reserved in Alaska, for the use of the Navy for the next 50 years, sufficient high-grade coal to supply an average of 400,000 tons per year.

FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

Concerning his recommendation for a change in the form of government in Alaska, Secretary Fisher says:

government in Alaska, Secretary Fisher says:

Taken into consideration with the comparatively small and widely scattered population and the inadequate means for transportation and communication, it would seem to demonstrate that a commission form of government would best meet the existing situation. Such a commission would consist of appointed representatives of the Federal Government and locally elected representatives of the Territory itself. To it would be transferred, under appropriate limitations, the authority to make Territorial laws and regulations such as are sadly needed. Among these needs are some of the fundamental requisites of modern civilized society, such as regulation of the public health, sanitation, and quarantine; the registration of marriages, births, and deaths; poor relief; compulsory school attendance; supervision of banking institutions, etc.

While disagreeing with Secretary Fisher as to some details, especially with reference to appointive members of the proposed commission, nevertheless I am glad to quote from his report, which confirms the general proposition that there must be a radical change from present conditions in the government of Alaska.

Incidentally it is interesting to note that the report says that the investigation of coal claims in Alaska is proceeding as rapidly as possible, and Secretary Fisher calls attention to the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office canceling the so-called Cunningham entries on coal land. The total number of locations in Alaska coal claims is given as 1,125, and the number of applications for patent 521.

I do not think there is much room for difference of opinion on the point that something must be done for Alaska. As its government is scattered among so many different departments, it is hard to say which department is controlling the specific matter that may be under consideration. So that, without blaming anyone in particular, it sometimes happens that a man is sent around from one place to another until he despairs of finding to whom he shall appeal.

The Interior Department has charge of the general executive administration, as well as charge of the Indians, public lands, and schools. The judiciary system is under the Attorney General of the United States. The Agricultural Department has charge of the forest and game laws, experiment stations, and meteorological records. The Commerce Department has charge of lighthouses, coast and geodetic survey, fisheries, steamboat inspection, and so forth. The War Department has charge of the roads, trails, and so forth, through the board of road commissioners, consisting of three Army officers, who report to the Secretary of War. The cable and telegraph are also under the War Department.

At this point I desire to insert, if there is no objection, certain historical facts, which Judge Wickersham stated before our committee, showing the development and present status of the government of Alaska:

committee, showing the development and present status of the government of Alaska:

We purchased Alaska from Russia, in 1867, at a cost of $7,200,000. There had been in that country prior to the purchase the Russian-American Co., which had long governed the Territory under a charter from the Czar of Russia. They had also a brief code of laws written by the councilors of the Czar, and that was all the law that there was in that entire country. The officers of the Russian-American Co. were the only sources of power in the country. If an offense was committed, the officers of that company had authority to try the offender; and if it was such a serious matter that they thought it ought to be done, they transported him to Russia for final trial and punishment. All civil matters were settled by the officers of the company in Alaska, and there was practically no appeal from anything they did there.

When we purchased the Territory, in 1867, their laws were laid aside. They have not been appealed to since, and our laws took their place. In 1868 Congress passed a law extending the customs laws to Alaska and the laws relating to navigation and trade. These were the only laws that we had in that country for a good many years. Gen. Rousseau went to Alaska in 1868 in command of United States troops; he lowered the Russian flag at Sitka, raised the American flag there, took possession of the country, and held possession for several years by militury force alone. There was no organized government of any kind from 1807 for many years. The military forces were withdrawm about 1875, and the country was left without law or power of any kind except that represented by the Revenue-Cutter Service. That service, of course, had control under the customs laws and performed such duties only as were necessary to enforce the customs laws. With the exception of that service there was no semblance of power or government of any kind in Alaska from the time the soldiers left, in 1875, until 1884.

In 1884 the conditions had grown so bad that of the committee to the Russian people in that country. We had at Unalaska, Belkofsky, Unga, and Kodiak, and even down as far as sitka, a large number of Russians and their half-breed descendants, who had remained in that country after the United States purchased it. I know a great many of those people, and a better class of men do not exist in any country. They are a quiet people; they belong to the Russian-Greek Catholic Church and are devout church members. They are hard workers, the most of them being fishermen. They are men of families and have homes and everything that makes for the good of a community.

In that connection I want to call your attention to the third article of the treaty of 1867, which I will read:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they years, the enjoyment of all the rights, dustringes, shall be affected to the right of the tribute of the red years of the United States and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country."

That is practically the clause contained in the treaty by which we acquired Louislana, Florida, and the Mexican cessions. The words are almost identical in those three treaties, and the Supreme Court has defined and given them force. When this treaty was proclaimed and approved by Congress, we are justified in saying that Alaska was incorporated into the body of the United States, but they have moved th governor.

That is our situation, and we now come before this committee asking you to pass a law giving Alaska a legislative assembly such as all the other Territories have had.

Of course for many years Alaska had practically no government at all, and it was the conditions that obtained then, as well as the unsatisfactory conditions that followed, which brought forth the following outburst, addressed to the United States by one of Alaska's poets:

Sitting on my greatest glacier, with my feet in Bering Sea,
I am thinking, cold and lonely, of the way you've treated me.
Three and thirty years of silence! Through ten thousand sleeping nights
I've been praying for your coming, for the dawn of civil rights.
When you took me, young and trusting, from the growling Russian Bear, Loud you swore before the Nation I should have the Eagle's care.
Never yet has wing of Eagle cast a shadow on my peaks.
But I've watched the flight of buzzards, and I've felt their busy beaks.

[Applause.]

While not subscribing to all the sentiments of this poem, it is interesting, nevertheless, as showing the feelings of the Alaskans. It is only the truth to say that the very best and most conservative men up there are anxious for some definite voice in their own affairs.

When Mr. Wickersham appeared before the Senate committee, he pointed out that his secretary, then 22 years of age, had lived in Alaska 16 years. The mayor of Juneau has lived there for 27 years. Further, he said:

Unalaska, Kodiak, and Sitka were established long before the State of Oregon was thought of, or before Oregon, Washington, or California were organized. Those were Russian-American posts, and have been international marts of trade for more than a hundred years. They have had Russian schools, the Russian church, and Russian civilization of the best kind in Alaska for more than a century.

It is often said that there is no permanent population in Alaska. In reply I would say that there is a very considerable permanent population; but there will be, however, no such development as Alaska ought to have until her citizens are given the right of local self-government. An American will not lead his life in a region where he has not the usual rights of citizenship, except where the inducements are extraordinary; but even under the conditions that now obtain there is a very considerable permanent population, and that permanent population.

lation will be greatly increased the moment Alaska is given the proper degree of local self-government.

Alaska has great charm. The poet Service has pointed this out better, probably, than any other writer in his great poem, The Spell of the Yukon. I wish every Member of Congress might read it.

He says this in reference to the land we know as Alaska:

Some say God was tired when He made it; Some say it's a fine land to shun; Maybe; but there are some that would trade it For no land on earth—and I'm one.

Note what Service says as to the seasons:

The summer—no sweeter was ever;
The sunshiny woods all athrill;
The grayling aleap in the river,
The bighorn asleep on the hill.
The strong life that never knows harness;
The wilds where the caribou call;
The freshness, the freedom, the farness—
O God! how I'm stuck on it all.

The winter! the brightness that blinds you,
The white land locked tight as a drum;
The cold fear that follows and finds you,
The silence that bludgeons you dumb.
The snows that are older than history,
The woods where the weird shadows slant;
The stillness, the moonlight, the mystery,
I've bade 'em good-by—but I can't.

And again-

There are hardships that nobody reckons;
There are valleys unpeopled and still;
There's a land—oh, it beckons and beckons,
And I want to go back—and I will.

And they do go back and remain there from youth to old age; and there is as much, if not more, love for Alaska on the part of her people as there is for any other State or portion of the Union. In fact, she has a peculiar charm and fascination.

There's gold, and it's haunting and haunting;
It's luring me on as of old;
Yet it isn't the gold that I'm wanting
So much as just finding the gold.
It's the great, big, broad land 'way up yonder,
It's the forests where silence has lease;
It's the beauty that thrills me with wonder;
It's the stillness that fills me with peace.

"Bonds and Stocks," Seattle, heads an enthusiastic article on Alaska with the words, "Alaska—population, 10,000,000." Then it begins as follows:

Why not? Between the sixtleth degree and the Arctic Circle, on the northwest coast of Europe, above the Baltic, is a population of 10,000,000. Why not in Alaska?

This comparison is made with the Baltic region of Europe because the climate there is not unlike that of Alaska. The Japan current has a wonderful effect on Alaska's climate.

In this connection the following article, which appeared in our daily papers, is of interest:

JAPAN CUBRENT CHANGED—UNUSUAL WEATHER CONDITIONS IN ALASKA REGARDED AS RESULT.

CORDOVA, ALASKA, January 27, 1913

Cordova, Alaska, January 27, 1913.

A phenomenal change in the course of the Japan current, which brings it closer to the Alaskan coast, was reported here to-day by Capt. J. C. Hunter, of the steamer Northwestern, and Capt. P. A. Obert, of the steamer Edith, arriving from Scattle. Capt. Hunter said the Northwestern was set 50 miles eastward ahead of the log, running from Cape Flattery to Cape Elias.

Unusual weather conditions, believed to be due to the change in the current, have prevailed here for weeks. The average temperature has been 44° above zero, and there have been heavy rains.

Reports from the Interior show temperatures there 15° warmer than ever before recorded at this time of the year.

Warnings by wireless have been sent to steamships approaching Cordova.

Continuing, the article referred to makes in part the following graphic and thought-provoking statement of facts, figures, and suggestions, which are worth our reading even though we do not agree with them all, and surely not with those suggesting immediate statehood.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if it is true, as reported through the press last winter, that when we were having our zero weather here that the Alaskans up on that coast were wearing straw hats?

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Well, I did not intend to bring this in, but, as the question is asked, I will answer by quoting something I have here. In response to the gentleman's inquiry I will say this: There was an article headed "Alaska as a winter resort," which appeared in one of the Washington papers a month or so ago, and this is what it said:

month of So 3go, and this is what it said:

"Gov. Clark, of Alaska, was not wrong when he made the prediction that our northernmost Territory is liable to become a popular winter resort," remarked M. E. Sullivan, of Juneau, at the Willard. "When I left Alaska several weeks ago the weather was as balmy as the finest spring day in Washington. Straw hats and linen dusters were being worn, despite the fact that other sections of the United States were experiencing the most severe winter of the last 20 years. Whether this condition existing in Alaska at the present time is due to a sudden change in the course of the Japan currents I am unable to say. I notice the Hydrographic Office in Washington denies that any such thing has taken place. They may be all right in their contention, but I do know that we have had some strange weather in Alaska within the last month or so. Whether our Territory is to become a rival of Florida as a winter resort I do not pretend to say, but we certainly have had no use for overcoats up there recently."

Whether this interview is slightly overdrawn or not, this surely is true-

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption there?

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman remembers the testimony only a day or two ago before the Committee on Territories to the effect that the harbors of Valdez and Cordova and Seward were freer from ice than New York or even Washington?
Mr. WEDEMEYER. I suggested that a moment ago; that is true.

Mr. FOWLER. Before the gentleman begins, I presume I misunderstood the gentleman a moment ago when he referred to Alaska. I understood the gentleman to state it was something about 10,000,000.

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Oh, no; I spoke of an article that said, "Alaska, why not 10,000,000," and the argument that is made in the article is that that portion of Europe which has the same climate, or practically the same climate, as Alaska supports 10,000,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand it is 67,000, or something like that.

Mr. WEDEMEYER. It is 65,000. This answers the question. I am now quoting from a Seattle paper as to Alaska and her future:

Mr. WEDEMEYER. It is 65,000. This answers the question. I am now quoting from a Seattle paper as to Alaska and her future:

By the census of 1910 Alaska has 65,000 population, 20,000 north of the Yukon, the balance in the southern district—that is to say, 25,000 of the population in that portion whose coast line begins at the intry-fifth degree of north latitude. In this district it is assumed that there are 200,000 square miles of land.

Sasumed that there are 200,000 square miles of land.

By the census of 1850 Minnesor had the two old quickly double in population, and then double again and again. We have precedents of American history to justify such political action.

By the census of 1850 Minnesor had 6,077 population and 80,000 square miles of territory. It was admitted as a State in 1858. The climate was as little understood and hence as much misunderstood as elimate was as little understood and hence as much misunderstood as 1810 gave the Territory 12,282 population. What a journey it was at that time from the centers of population on the Atlantic to Pittsburgh and thence across the swamps of Ohlo and Indiana to Illinois. From the Atlantic seaboard to Alaska to-day the time is shorter, less expensive, and the trip can be made in luxury.

State in 1850. It was weeks and months of travel distant from the populous East and from the growing Ohlo Valley. Yet all these States have justified the political wisdom that hastened to give full statchood, Oregon has 95,000 square miles, and its population was 13 to each 95 square miles. Yet Oregon has always been capable of self-government. Louislana became a State in 1812, having by the consus of 1810 and one out of seven was an American. The rest spok in allea tought. Louislana made good. Whatever political reasons and yan have impelled the rushing of the Territories named into statehood, there are greater political reasons and yan have impelled the rushing of the Territories named into statehood, there are greater of the American lang will wave. No willest diplom

It is a far cry from Alaska to our Congress; to the presidential executive function; to the Interior Department; to executive discretion in governmental matters so prone to drop into personal discretion or political partisan discretion. From these things Alaska should not be compelled to suffer.

It is as intolerable to business interests and property rights in the segregation of the public domain that Alaskan citizenship, American citizenship, should be continually impaled upon the uncertainty of appeal to the presidential executive or the Interior Department or to the Congress for equal and personal rights—as that the Colonies should be under a like condition in the eighteenth century. And such a condition should be as intolerable to the mass of the American people as it is to the citizenship of Alaska and of the Paclic slope. It is a humiliation to the American electorate that it should be placed in the position of constant petition to official administration.

The sturdy Yankee citizens of Michigan, having by the census of 1830 a population of 51,630 and an electorate of about 6,000 voters inhabitating a territory of 57,000 square miles in 1837, literally forced and cajoled and compelled from the reluctant partisanship of the time Statehood for Michigan. There is a larger justification for the inexorable demand for local political self-government for Alaska.

It is as incongruous to expect Congress to make and executive departments to administer local laws as for a State to make national laws. The product of an incongruity is a misfit. The evil results are met at every turn of political and commercial activity, and added patchwork departmental orders, rules, and regulations are but an increase of confusion. Individual action is paralyzed and capital investment stands aloof.

There is not much danger of foolish or unreasonable legislation at the hands of man who come direct from the provise of

There is not much danger of foolish or unreasonable legislation at the hands of men who come direct from the people of Alaska itself. Besides, the proposed bill that we are now discussing provides:

That all laws passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall be submitted to Congress by the President of the United States, and if disapproved by Congress they shall be null and of no effect,

Mr. FOWLER. Is that in common with the Territorial organization of other Territories of the United States in the past? Mr. WEDEMEYER. What we are asking is absolutely in common with what has been given to other Territories in the

So, of course, Congress would still have control, but the initiative in local matters would be taken by the local legislature, the only body qualified to take such initiative, and the only body of men that can know the situation in detail as it actually

The expense of the legislature would be more than counterbalanced by the advantage to be obtained by the effective local administration of affairs rather than by the long-distance and expensive handling of local matters, concerning which most of us are, and always will be, in great ignorance.

This is no radical bill. The criticism of most Alaskans is that it does not go far enough. Everything is still under the control of Congress, but it provides a local body that will understand local affairs and initiate needed local legislation, which Congress, by the very nature of the case, never can properly initiate. 1

Alaska, I believe, is to see wonderful development in the next few years, provided we give her the legislation that her people desire and deserve.

On my trip to Skagway, I stopped at Prince Rupert, the Pacific terminus of the new road that is being built in Canada, way north of the present Canadian Railway. Prince Rupert is near the southern boundary of Alaska, and yet it is not as far north as Edinburgh, and 350 miles south of St. Petersburg. branch will be built to Dawson, in Canadian territory, near the Alaskan line. At least such a branch is contemplated, and if built will serve, together with other railroads that are being built or projected in Alaska herself, as an entrance to the great agricultural regions in the valleys of Alaska's mighty rivers.

The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from New York, who probably knows more about Alaska than any other man in this House except the Alaskan Delegate, prophesied in a hearing some time ago that the day would come when Alaska would raise more oats, barley, and wheat than any State in the Union. He said:

Alaska can grow the finest wheat in the world. It took the prize at the St. Louis Exposition. It is northwest wheat, and it beats Manitoba No. 1. The great valleys of the Sushitna, the Tanana, the Yukon, the White, and the Kuskokwim have great agricultural possibilities. At present, however, the principal sources of wealth are its wonderful mineral products, but in southeastern and southwestern Alaska the timber is very valuable. Take it all in all, Alaska is rich in natural resources beyond the dreams of avarice.

It has been shown, too, that great herds of cattle will thrive in the not unfriendly climate of a large portion of Alaska.

About $12,000,000 worth of fish are annually caught in the waters of Alaska. When the Alaskan Delegate appeared before the committee he said that Alaska had more gold than California and Colorado put together; more coal than Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania; more copper than Michigan, Montana, and Arizona; and then added, "It has more fish than the balance of the world put together." When some of the members of the committee laughed, the Delegate went on to show that the product of Alaskan fisheries, including seal and aquatic furbearing animals, down to 1910 amounted to over $193,000,000.

I was interested myself in visiting the great cannery at Petersburg, Alaska, and saw the very latest and most wonderful machinery used in that line.

There is a strong feeling that the United States does not get anything like the taxation that she ought to receive from the fisheries of Alaska. It is one of the matters that demands at-The following description is so graphic that I shall repeat it here from the Delegate's testimony:

repeat it here from the Delegate's testimony:

If you were in Bristol Bay, Alaska, in the winter season you would see many great cannery buildings filled with machinery and fishing gear, but cold and lifeless. A single watchman at each plant keeps ward for nine months in the year. If you were to return to that bay in May, a different seene would greet you. Away off to the southwest you would see a fleet of vessels, like a hostile armada, coming northward through the Aleutian Passes. As the cloud of smoke approaches, it separates and different vessels seek the docks to which they belong and immediately begin to unload the season's supplies. First come thousands of men—from San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle—Chinese, Japanese, and nonresident fishermen, under a contract to go to Alaska for the short fishing season of three months and to be paid on their return to their home ports. The wharves groan with the weight of the merchandise and the supplies for the imported fishermen and with the season's fishing outfit. The boarding houses are opened, the stoves lighted, tables prepared, the fires are started in the canneries, boats are pulled out of winter quarters, tackle is prepared, sails hoisted, and in a few hours the bays and the rivers are white with the sails of the fishing fleet. For the next two months all is life and bustle. The business never stops. Fish, fish, fish everywhere. Boats, scows, wharves, and canneries are filled with fish; the machinery grinds, men work with nervous haste, and the finest crop of salmon ever seen in the waters of the world is caught and canned in this bay. Day and night the harvest proceeds, for the bay is sunlit 20 out of the 24 hours, and it is never dark. Crews are changed with military precision—while part sleep the others work—and the movement of fish from the sea into the cans never ceases. In 60 days the season is ended. Every can is filled.

And now the armada embarks its stolen riches. The holds of its vessels are filled with a season's cron—it amounted to more then filled.

And now the armada embarks its stolen riches. The holds of its vessels are filled with a season's crop—it amounted to more than $12,000,000 in value last year—the Chinese, Japanese, and nonresident fishermen are loaded; the fleet sails away through the Aleutian Passes, leaving the cannery buildings and a watchman for another long winter; and Alaska has lost another crop. Out of nearly $130,000,000 worth of fish thus taken from Alaska not a home nor a school nor a church has been built nor a child educated in the Territory.

There is the finest crop of salmon in the world running into Bristol Bay, and the canneries take out of Bristol Bay alone more than $5,000,000 worth of salmon per annum, and it can, within 90 days from the day the first one of them gets there, load everything into the vessels and sail away, and a single watchman is again left for nine months in the year.

vessels and sail aw months in the year.

This income from the fisheries, added to the value of the gold taken out and brought to the United States, and merchandise sent back, makes our total commerce with Alaska amount to about $55,000,000 annually. This is about equal to our commerce with Porto Rico, nearly equal to that with Hawaii, and about twice that with the Philippines. It was pointed out that in 1909, for example, 1 Alaskan was equal in trade value to 5 Hawaiians, 27 Porto Ricans, or 394 Filipinos. Surely the people who furnish this commerce, merely from the selfish and commercial side, deserve some consideration.

In addressing the Senate Committee on Territories, Senator Jones quoted from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, one of the leading papers of the Northwest. I insert here part of one of its editorials:

ALASKA AND CANADA.

While the talk of the possible annexation of Alaska by Canada is too absurd for serious consideration at this time, the fact remains that all who are interested in Alaska are compelled to realize that the Alaskans themselves would be far better off under such an administration as Canada would give them, and that the Territory would develop infinitely faster than it can by any possibility if the policies which have been in force for the last few years continue unbroken.

The trouble with Alaska is twofold. It is dependent upon the National Congress for every particle of its legislation, and Congress has such an Infinite amount of national work to perform that it has no time to spare to consider the local affairs of a remote Territory about which the average Member of Congress knows nothing.

If the situation could be approached with any sort of common sense; if Alaska could be accorded now precisely the same treatment as that accorded other Territories in the past, and that was none too good, Alaska would develop as other Territories developed; it would receive a great influx of population; its resources would be opened, and it would be among the greatest wealth producers of this continent.

Everyone in Alaska knows that if it were under Canadian rule it would have local self-government at once, and that every encouragement would be lent to the development of the country and the utilization of its resources. Everyone who has looked into the situation at all knows further that the wrongs of the thirteen original Colonies, which led to the Revolutionary War, were petty, indeed, beside the wrongs of the people of Alaska, but, save on this coast, no one in the whole country seems to consider that this amounts to anything.

While, as Senator Jones remarks, the language of that editorial is very severe, I think unnecessarily so, still it indicates the sentiment that obtains on this subject.

Another editorial, which is headed "Alaska's Permanent Mines," reads as follows:

ALASKA'S PERMANENT MINES.

From every present indication Alaska is to take a great step forward during the coming season. From several different parts of the Territory there come announcements of the progress made in the development of quartz properties, and the assurance that during the coming summer a large additional number of quartz mills are to be installed.

From Juneau comes the story of the certain construction during the coming summer of a mill costing $600,000 on mining property in the neighborhood of that place. Other mining developments in the same neighborhood, coupled with the working of the Alaska-Treadwell, on Douglas Island, opposite Juneau, mean the employment of not less than 3,000 men permanently in the immediate vicinity of Juneau.

Farther up the coast come similar stories. The various mines in the vicinity of Seward, on which good veins of free milling ore have been uncovered, are showing up remarkably well as development proceeds. There have already been a number of small mills erected in the vicinity of Seward, and, without exception, each one of them has been cleaning up large amounts. Mills are to be installed on other properties, the showing of which justifies the confidence that even with small mills they can become heavy dividend payers and earn the money from their own ore to pay entirely for larger plants as expansion becomes necessary.

own ore to pay entirely for larger plants as expansion becomes necessary.

This is the mining development of Alaska which counts for the future of the Territory. Placers become worked out within a few brief years, but good quartz properties will be running 30 years from now.

If Alaska could have the handicaps upon her development removed, if that great Territory could have precisely the same treatment in all respects that was accorded all other American Territories during their pioneer days, it would develop rapidly into a great State.

The following editorial from the same paper is of interest as contrasting conditions with those in adjoining Canadian terri-contrasting conditions with those in adjoining Cahadian territory:

A member of the Yukon council, while in Skagway the other day, in speaking about the absence of any system of home rule in Alaska, as contrasted with that which is accorded the Canadian Yukon, gave some pertinent illustrations. He pointed out that so long as the Canadian territory was governed exclusively from Ottawa by federal officials conditions were unsatisfactory in every way. The administration given was both expensive and dishonest.

For some years past Yukon territory has had a wholly elective council, which has entire control over all local affairs, and there has never been a time in the history of the Territory, when conditions were as entirely satisfactory as they are now. Alaska, in this respect, stands where the Yukon Territory of Canada did 10 years ago.

In all of the talk about the impossibility of glving Alaska a local government, why is it that no attention is paid to Yukon Territory and the Canadian method of dealing with the same problem? The Yukon Territory is very much smaller than Alaska and it has nothing like as large a number of people. In the whole Territory there is practically but one industry, that of gold mining, while Alaska exports other products annually of but little less value than its gold. The British Yukon has no coast line. It is isolated far in the interior, and it is difficult to reach any portion of it in the wintertime.

Yet the Canadian Yukon has complete self-government and full representation in the Dominion Parliament as well. Can it be argued that the Canadians are more capable of self-government than the people of Alaska? Is a gold-mining population on one side of an imaginary line more nomadic than on the other?

The simple truth is that the Canadian Government has treated its people in the north far better than has the Government of the United States, and with far more actual respect for the principles upon which our Government is founded than has ever been displayed by Congress.

Only recently, in December, 1911, a member of the Canadian Parliament from Yukon Territory was present at a banquet in Seattle. He discussed the matter of Alaskan local self-government with reference to the development of self-government in the United States. He showed that our country was based absolutely on that idea. Then he pointed out that we were denying Alaska the very principle upon which the United States separated from the old mother country. In his discussion he was but reflecting the attitude of the editorials just cited, as well as the attitude of practically all the people in the far West who understand Alaskan conditions thoroughly. The people of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and California generally are in favor of an elective Territorial legislature for Alaska. In Washington and Oregon resolutions to this effect were passed by the legislatures of those States. The commercial bodies of Seattle and other cities are working toward that end. Surely we need not be afraid to trust to the judgment and good sense of those who know Alaska best.

The editorial quoted on Alaskan mining makes it clear that we may look for a permanent mining population in the future, and this will meet the superficial and unfair argument that is often made to the effect that Alaska is going backward, because perchance some mining town has diminished in population. That happens often, everywhere, in mining and lumbering regions. Some spring up and have a boom, when mining and lumbering are at their height, and then diminish in population afterwards; but with a permanent mining population, such as we may look for, as well as approaching agricultural development, many growing Alaskan cities and towns will result.

Then, too, census comparisons are not sure guides as to the growth of Alaska, for the reason that, for example, the last census was taken in December, 1909, at the time when naturally a very large number of Alaskans were out of the Territory, while the previous census included thousands of people at Nome-on the beach and ships-who left very soon after the 1900 census was taken.

Sitka, the old capital, was a thriving town and the site of Alaskan government when Chicago was an Indian village and when the Indians held all the land between the Great Lakes and the Pacific. Sitka was making picks and spades for use in Mexico and California and building ships to provide that part of the world long before Oregon and Washington were known 1 to the business world. It is true that little of old Sitka remains. The old shipyards are lost in the sands, but it is still an interesting city. Baranoff's castle, burned in 1894, has been replaced by the spacious residence of the head of the agricultural experiment station. This, with the electric lights, and so forth, are an indication of a new era in Alaska. Here is a fine industrial school for the natives, founded by Brady. Next to Carlisle, this is perhaps the greatest of Indian schools. The Sheldon Jackson Museum is valuable. Russian schools and churches are here, and, all in all, it is a most interesting place, with its beautiful and picturesque surroundings-interesting not only because of present activities, but because of its tradi-

Alaska has traditions. She has an interesting history. She has seen great development, when every handicap is considered. However, the development of the past is as nothing measured by what the future is sure to bring, if we but accord her the same treatment we have given the other Territories in the years gone by. Alaska is but in the morning of her history; she is only in the forenoon of her best days.

And if her future is to be all it ought to be, then her people must have the right that every other Territory in the Union has had. As the gentleman from New York has said-

The bona fide residents of Alaska who intend to stay there the rest of their lives must have the right to make their own laws, to levy their own taxes, to regulate their own internal affairs, and to spend the money gathered by the tax collector for their own use, for their own schools, for their own charitable institutions, for their own roads, for their own municipal affairs, and for their own peace and happiness. This is not asking too much, in my opinion. It seems to me it is only fair and just and proper and right.

As to her climate, I have already pointed out the remarkable effect of the Japan current and the peculiar conditions that have obtained this winter.

Alaska is not, all, the bleak country that popular imagination has painted her. Much of her territory, thanks to the benefi-cent influence of the Japanese current, is capable of the same agricultural development as northern Europe and portions of our Northern States. Her fisheries, under wise governmental control, will long be a source of wealth, while the riches that lie buried beneath the ground will for many years to come attract the same hardy race of men who are proud now to be known as Alaskan pioneers.

We owe something to the self-reliant pioneer who has blazed his way in "that land that measures each man at his worth."

We owe something to-

The nameless men who nameless rivers travel And in strange valleys greet strange deaths alone; The grim, intrepid ones who would unravel The mysteries that shroud the Arctic Zone.

We owe to them the privilege of self-government-a privilege we should be slow to deny men of our own blood who have overcome every obstacle that man or nature has put in their way. Surely the Alaskan, by sternest training, is fitted, if ever an American citizen has been, for at least the restricted degree of local self-government which this bill provides. Why withhold it from him longer? [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, Alaska is a wonderland. tenths of the people of our country have no idea of the vastness of her boundaries, the extent of her domain, the grandeur of her scenery, the salubrity of her climate, the greatness of her mountains, the length of her rivers, the possibilities of her fisheries and her forests; the grazing advantages in her valleys for sheep and cattle; her splendid agricultural resources; her incalculable mineral wealth; and her splendid homes for the multitude in the land up there that spells opportunity for the earnest worker and the brave pioneer.

Alaska is a marvelous land. She would make 470 States of the size of Rhode Island. She has the greatest gold, and iron, and copper, and lead, and coal, and tin deposits in North Alaska has 599,446 square miles of territory-more America. than 383,645,440 acres of land-and the greatest fishing waters in all the world, teeming with the best food fish on earth.

Alaska is God's country. She is over twice the size of the German Empire; 14 times the size of the State of New York; and has more copper known to-day than Michigan and Arizona combined. She is one-fifth the size of the entire United States; has paid for herself five times over in money actually collected in Alaska and deposited in the Federal Treasury. Alaska was purchased from Russia for $7,200,000, less than 2 cents an acre, and has produced in gold and silver alone more than 29 times what she cost—the cheapest bargain in land in the annals of Alaska has a known coal-bearing area larger than all the rest of the coal-bearing area in the United States. Alaska has the greatest cattle and sheep ranges now in the north, and agricultural possibilities beyond the imagination of the finite mind-a mighty empire is Alaska that welcomes heroic man.

What does Alaska want? Alaska demands home rule—the right of her people to govern themselves-an inherent American right that Congress has never denied to any of our people in any part of our domain in all our past, and which should no longer be denied to the hardy men who have gone to the northland and made their homes in Alaska. The Alaskans want Territorial government. They want the right that every other Territory in the Union had—the right to make their own local laws, to levy their own local taxes, to regulate their own internal affairs, and to spend the money gathered by the tax collector for their own use, for their own schools, for their own charitable institutions, for their own municipal affairs, for their own trails and roads, and for their own peace and happi-This is not asking too much. It is a fundamental right.

Alaska is entitled to local self-government. She has a population at the present time of upward of 60,000 bona fide citizens. It is true they are scattered over a vast territory, but it is also true that they are an honest, brave, intelligent, sober, God-fearing people who are our kin, and who ought to be treated as American citizens.

Alaska is one-fifth the size of the United States. Here is the map of Alaska. Look at it. Study it. If you take this map in actual area and put it on the map of the United States proper, one part of Alaska will be in the Atlantic Ocean opposite Charleston; another part of Alaska will be in the Pacific Ocean opposite San Francisco; another part of Alaska will be in the Gulf of Mexico south of New Orleans; and another part of Alaska will be in Canada north of the Great Lakes. People have no conception of the vastness of this territory, and there has been disseminated throughout this country for several years past more misinformation regarding Alaska and her resources and her people than about any other matter of public moment in the recent history of our country.

Let us examine this map. This part of Alaska is called south-eastern Alaska; this part of Alaska is called southwestern Alaska; and this part of Alaska is called northern Alaska. These divisions marked on this map are the natural divisions of Alaska. Nature made them. Congress can not change them. In a straight line from Cape Chacon, in southeastern Alaska, to Point Barrow, in northwestern Alaska, is about 3,000 miles. a straight line from Cuba to Greenland is less than 3,000 miles, and there is nearly as much difference in the climatic conditions in Alaska on the Pacific coast as there is between Cuba and Greenland on the Atlantic coast. The climate of our Atlantic coast is governed to some extent by the Gulf Stream. climate on the Alaskan coast is governed almost entirely by the wonderful Japan Current, and that inexplicable current is much greater than the Gulf Stream. Southeastern Alaska has a mild climate winter and summer. The mean temperature at Sitka is the same as the mean temperature at Washington, D. C. Southwestern Alaska has a climate similar to the climate of southern Canada. North of the Yukon River to the Arctic Ocean Alaska has a cold climate in winter and a hot climate during the short summer months. Southeastern Alaska is composed largely of beautiful islands. It is a mineral and a fishing country, rich new, and destined to become more so. Some of these islands in southeastern Alaska are heavily timbered with pine, spruce, hemlock, and red and yellow cedar.

The timber resources of these islands in southeastern Alaska are invaluable, and thus far they have never known the sound of the woodman's ax. They are virgin forests. The fishing industries in southeastern Alaska are becoming the greatest in the world. According to the Government report, there are over 30 different kinds of food fishes, and only last summer the United States Fish Commission boat, the Albatross, found the habitat of these fish on the great banks off the coast of Alaska—the home of the salmon and the halibut and the herring and the mackerel. This part of Alaska will furnish for years and years to come enough food fish to supply the wants of the people of the United States. Southeastern Alaska will never people of the United States. Southeastern Alaska will never be an agricultural country, because it is too mountainous. It has no valleys and no rivers, but it has an ideal climate, and it is going to be the sportsman's and the poor man's and the sick man's paradise. It is a saying up there that "When the tide is out the table is set," because no poor man need go hungry in southeastern Alaska unless he wants to do so. He can live on the products of the sea.

Southwestern Alaska, from the international boundary line to the Aleutian Islands, is a wonderful country and quite different from southeastern Alaska. This part of Alaska is rich in min-eral wealth; incomparable in its possibilities for cattle and agriculture, and part of it is well timbered and exceedingly fertile.

There are great valleys in this part of Alaska-the Copper River Valley, the Susitna Valley, the Yetna Valley, the Tanana Valley, and the Valley of the Kuskokwim—all awaiting development. It is estimated that in this section of Alaska there is at least half as much coal as there is in all the rest of the United States, and within its confines are the greatest cattle and sheep ranges under the American flag. Here is the land for the immi-grant. Here is the place for the home seeker. In these valleys are vast stretches of arable lands much greater in area than some of the States of the Union; and this part of Alaska alone. it is said by those who are competent to testify, can support a people larger than the population of Norway and Sweden and Finland and Denmark combined.

Look again on the map. On the hills here in southwestern Alaska are great cattle ranges, and here in abundance grows what is called buffalo grass-grass that stands 5 or 6 feet high, rich in saccharine matter; and the cattle graze out here all the year without protection from the weather. It is a superior country for cattle grazing to anything in our Northern They have no blizzards, and the winters, although cold, have little snow, and the climate is dry and invigorating. Cattle graze there all the year round, and they are fatter and in better condition in the spring than they are in the fall.

What a country for the cattlemen!

Alaska north of the Yukon is a vast country, stretching away from the Yukon River to the Arctic Ocean. This part of Alaska has very little timber. It is a barren land and essentially a mining country. It is rich in mineral resources, in copper, and gold, and tin, and coal, and various other kinds of minerals. This part of Alaska will always be sparsely inhabited by a migratory population, by people who go there to mine, and when the mines are worked out they will come away.

Southwestern Alaska, however, is destined in the next 25 years to have a permanent agricultural and cattle-raising population, and the day will come when this part of Alaska will contain and sustain several millions of people. It has now a permanent population of thousands who have gone there and been there for many years, many of whom were born there and they intend to stay there. Mark what I say, the day will come when southeastern and southwestern Alaska will be States in this Union.

Alaska's production of mineral wealth is growing apace. mineral production for 1911 is estimated at $20,370,000, which $17,150,000 was gold. The gold production of 1910 amounted to $16,128,749. The copper output is estimated at 22,900,000 pounds in 1911, against 4,241,689 pounds in 1910. Alaskan mines and quarries also produced silver, tin, coal, marble, and gypsum to an estimated value of $390,000, an increase of $200,000 over 1910. The total value of Alaska's mineral production since 1880, when mining first began, is, in round numbers, $206,000,000, or more than 29 times the sum paid to Russia for the Territory.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken of Alaskan resources as a reason for her recognition. Her mines of gold, silver, iron, coal, tin, and copper, already known to be great, are considered by many practically inexhaustible. She has the largest stamp by many practically inexhaustible. She has the largest stamp mill in the world at Treadwell and bids fair to become the greatest gold-producing country on earth. The rapid development of the gold and silver mining industry of Alaska during the past few years is shown by the fact that the production has advanced from about $3,000,000 in 1896 to about $17,000,000 in 1910. 'This will increase rather than diminish. At present the value of the precious metals lies chiefly in the gold placers of Nome and the interior regions. In the Nome region some 5,000 square miles are known to carry auriferous gravels, while in the Yukon Basin the area of auriferous gravels is probably several times as large. But it is not all placer mining. Gov. Clark says that quartz mining is the kind in which Alaska will be preeminent in the near future and that even now it is affording the finest illustration in the world of profitable working of lowgrade ores.

In the coast region of southeastern Alaska mining for gold, copper, and silver has been going on for a number of years. The development of this industry has been especially rapid since 1898, and it promises to become one of the most important mining districts of the country. The discovery of vast copper deposits in Alaska was made only a few years ago. Copper mining is now being done in several districts, and many tons of copper ore are being shipped weekly to the smelters. vestigations of the past two years have shown, however, that there are unquestionably vast undeveloped copper deposits in many other districts of Alaska. The coal of Alaska embraces lignites, bituminous, and anthracite. Coal has been found in nearly every part of Alaska, both on the coast and in the interior. The coal is so widely distributed that it must be regarded as one of its most important resources. It is a conservative estimate to place the area occupied by the coal-bearing rocks at 30,000 square miles. Accurate statements can not be made as to the figures of the fish industry for the year 1911, but it can be said that it has been continually growing and is still in its infancy. More than 30 varieties of food fish inhabit the Alaskan waters. The output of salmon now amounts to more than $15,000,000 a year. Alaska can feed the fish-eating people of the world

Considering the resources and the vast possibilities of Alaska—and all of these statements can be proved by records on file in the various departments of the Government—considering. I say, what is absolutely known, and which can not be successfully controverted, I stand here as a Representative of the people on the floor of the American Congress and ask why Alaskans should not have the right to govern themselves? Why they should not have home rule? Why they should not have a Territorial government? I pause for a reply in the negative.

No true American can deny Alaska home rule. No patriotic citizen will object to the Alaskans having a local legislature and the right to make their own local laws. Under the terms of this Territorial bill each of these four divisions indicated on this map will have two representatives in the senate elected by the people, and four representatives in the assembly elected by the people, and the cost of this local self-government will be so infinitesimal in comparison to the great wealth that Alaska is pouring into the American Treasury that we shall hereafter wonder why Alaska was denied for so long local self-government

Mr. Chairman, I have been to Alaska several times. I know something about that vast domain. I know something about the sentiments of the people who live there, and I stand here and declare that the people of Alaska want Territorial government; and, knowing the facts as I do, I unhesitatingly say, and I defy successful refutation, that under all the circumstances Alaska is now, and long has been, entitled to Territorial government, and Congress ought to give it to the Alaskans without any more delay. Alaska is an anomaly in the history of our Territories. I know that the people of Alaska are, in every point of view, abundantly capable of maintaining a local form of government such as has always heretofore been accorded the Territories of the United States, and I deprecate the idea of further burdening the Congress with purely local legislation, as it is the duty of the Delegate to press upon the attention of Congress in the absence of Territorial organization. In my opinion, such legislation can safely be intrusted to the people of Alaska themselves, and, in my judgment, this bill providing for the same should be passed, according to her people the measure of self-government to which they are justly entitled, and which has never heretofore, except in the case of Alaska, been withheld from any considerable body of American citizens engaged in the settlement of a new district.

For years the people in Alaska have been asking for this boon. For years it has been wrongfully denied them. At last it appears to me, if I am any judge of popular opinion, that the Alaskans are going to get Territorial government by a practically unanimous vote in this House; and when this bill passes, as I hope it soon will, the Senate will pass it and the President will sign it. Then half the Alaska problem will be solved, many of her troubles will be reduced to a minimum, and Alaska will grow and prosper more in the next few years than she has in all the sad years of the past.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to Territorial government Alaska needs two other very important things. One is—better lighthouse service—more navigation lights. We do nothing like as much for our vast Territory of Alaska as the Canadian Government does for British Columbia. From Cape Chacon, Alaska, down to the State of Washington is all Canadian territory, called British Columbia. Along this coast is the inside passage, going to and coming from Alaska. All the ships from Puget Sound that go to southeastern Alaska and many of the vessels that go to southwestern Alaska take this inside passage, and for scenic beauty, for recreation, for health, and for pleasure it is the grandest waterway on all this earth.

The inside passage through Norway to the North Cape and the inside passage through the Straits of Magellan combined are not as grand and as beautiful as the inside passage from Puget Sound to the head of the Lynn Canal, a distance on water as calm as a mill pond for more than a thousand miles. People who have traveled all over the world, who have seen all the wonders of nature, hold their breath in silent admiration when they see the scenic wonders of the inside passage to Alaska. As a panorama of changing scenes of grandeur it is glorious beyond description. Thousands and thousands of tourists make this trip every summer. Yet our Government is derelict in that it does not furnish for Alaska proper lights and lighthouses to safeguard navigation and protect life and commerce along our Alaskan shores. Every year there are two or three wrecks; every year there are lives lost, and all for want of navigation safeguards.

We are standing to-day in the shadow of one of the greatest marine disasters in all history. The tragedy of the Titanic appalls us. We are speechless in the presence of this awful catastrophe. More than a thousand lives went down into the depths of the sea with hardly a moment's warning when the Titanic struck. The horror of it all is indescribable. The people of the world mourn.

But every ship that makes this trip through the inside passage to and from Alaska is loaded with human freight, tourists, health seekers, pleasure seekers, our friends, our relatives, and our neighbors, and for lack of proper safeguards is liable to strike a hidden rock, or run upon an iceberg, or collide with a sister ship in the fog. It is criminal for the Government to neglect longer the installation of proper lights on the Alaskan coast.

Alaska has a tremendous coast line. The coast line of the United States on the Atlantic, on the Gulf, and on the Pacific is a little less than 8,000 miles. Our coast line in Alaska, from Cape Chacon around to Herschel Island in the Arctic Ocean, is over 20,000 miles. Yet for thousands of miles of that bleak and dangerous coast we have not a light, nor a safeguard to navigation. This is a crying need, and I hope the Committee on Appropriations will heed the insistent demands of the Lighthouse Board and make substantial appropriations in the future to give Alaska better lights along her coasts.

Alaska better lights along her coasts.

Mr. Chairman, another important thing the people of Alaska need is better transportation facilities. How shall our people settle in Alaska when they can not get around on land in that vast Territory? It is almost as difficult for people to travel in Alaska without transportation facilities as it is to journey on the Atlantic Ocean without a boat. Give Alaska decent transportation and you will find that our people in the United States will not be selling their farms in Iowa, in Minnesota, and in the Dakotas and taking their families, their money, and their possessions and going to Canada. They will go to Alaska. But they can not get around there now, because Alaska has very little transportation except water transportation. We have no transportation in southwestern Alaska save one railroad running from Cordova up to a copper mine. Alaska wants more dirt roads and more railroads through this great country.

Look at the map again. Here is Resurrection Bay in southwestern Alaska—one of the great harbors of the world. All the fleets of the Pacific can ride safely at anchor in this magnificent bay and be invulnerable to attack. It is the greatest natural harbor we own in the north Pacific.

If anything should happen to our North Pacific Fleet it would have no port to make nearer than San Francisco, or Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands. The fleet could not succeed in getting through the Straits of Juan de Fuca. Resurrection Bay is 1,800 miles nearer the Orient than either San Francisco or Puget Sound, and it is the best place in the north Pacific for this Government to have a naval base and a harbor of safety in case of emergency on the north Pacific Ocean.

The people of the United States, for their own welfare, should build a railroad from Resurrection Bay to the interior of Alaska to open the Tanana Valley, the Susitna Valley, and the wonderful Kuskokwim Valley. Then the people who leave our country to better their condition will go to Alaska and settle there. They will go up there and cultivate the ground and till the soil. They will develop the agricultural resources of the country. They will take advantage of the cattle ranges and produce enough meat to supply the wants of our people. They will produce mineral wealth beyond the dreams of avarice. A Government railroad from Resurrection Bay to the Yukon, opening up these wonderful valleys, would also develop the greatest coal deposits on this continent—the Matanuska coal fields.

Here are millions of acres of the finest anthracite coal on earth and of the best bituminous coal in the world. The Government could pay the expenses of operating the railroad every year by mining its own coal for the use of the Pacific Fleet.

The United States buys its coal at Newport News and transports it all the way around South America. It transports that coal in foreign ships, flying foreign flags, and manned by foreign seamen. Every year the Government pays for the coal for its Pacific Fleet and the Revenue-Cutter Service on the Pacific coast a sum of money amounting to millions of dollars. If that money was utilized to build this railroad it would pay a profit to the Government the first day it was in operation, and in 10 years would pay the Government back every dollar it will cost, and be one of the quickest agencies to help the people open up this wonderful country of Alaska.

We ought to do something for Alaska. It is a shame the way Congress treats Alaska. It is un-American, undemocratic, and unrepublican. It is a violation of the fundamental principles of American citizenship. I cry out against governing Alaska like a conquered province. I have done all I could for Alaska since I have been a Member of Congress, and I shall keep up the fight for the right until the people of Alaska get what they want, what they demand as American citizens—namely, Territorial government, better transportation facilities, and more safeguards to navigation.

Mr. Chairman, every newspaper in Alaska is in favor of this bill for Territorial government. The Democrats and the Republicans in the Alaska conventions recently held have unanimously passed resolutions in favor of it. There is not a man in Alaska to-day, in my judgment, who is a bona fide resident of Alaska and who intends to stay there and live there, who is not in favor of Territorial government. If anyone here doubts what I say, let him go to Alaska and find out for himself.

I am in favor of the pending bill. It is a meritorious measure. It will soon be a law. I want to congratulate the chairman and the Committee on the Territories for bringing in this bill. I have gone over it carefully. Take it all in all, it is a good bill. I am the first man in Congress that ever introduced a bill to give Alaska a Territorial government. I introduced the bill 10 years ago at the request of a nonpartisan convention held by the people of Alaska. The presiding officer of that convention was Hon. A. P. Swineford, formerly governor of Alaska—a great man and a great Alaskan. He has gone to his reward, and he has gone into history as Alaska's "Grand Old Man." He was my friend and he helped me draw that first bill for Territorial government for Alaska. I am sorry that dear old Gov. Swineford is not living to-day to witness Alaska's triumph in Congress. It would gladden his heart more than anything that ever happened in his long and useful and illustrious career. I fought for that bill year after year. When Tom Cale came to Congress from Alaska I gave him the bill to introduce. When Judge Wickersham succeeded Cale he took up the bill, and I want to commend the Judge for all he has done in this struggle for home rule for Alaska.

Mr. Chairman, just a few words in conclusion. I repeat now what I said at the beginning-Alaska is the wonderland of the world. No words can adequately describe it. It is the poor man's and the rich man's and the sportsman's paradise. Alaska is the natural art gallery of the earth. The time, in my judgment, is at hand when this vast territory will be developed by American genius, American capital, and American enterprise, and take my word for it, there will be no more prosperous section in all our progressive country for American brawn and American brain. Alaska is the place for the new settler-for the hustler-for the man who wants to go ahead and get on. Alaska wants her rights; she wants home rule; she demands Territorial government. Alaska wants this; Alaska must have it-Alaska with her increasing population of patriotic people; Alaska with her invigorating climate; Alaska with her beautiful scenery, her magnificent distances, her snow-capped mountains, her majestic rivers, her fertile fields, her great industries of fish and fur and timber; Alaska with her great agricultural possibilities; Alaska with her immense wealth in gold and copper and silver and lead and tin and iron and coal-mineral wealth beyond the dreams of the most imaginative person in the world; Alaska with her brave and loyal and God-fearing American citizens; Alaska with her churches and her schools, her splendid public institutions, her towns and her villages; Alaska under the wonders of the northern lights and in the shadow of the midnight sun; Alaska with her inspiring sights, her ancient glaciers, with her great harbors and innumerable lakes and countless cascades; Alaska, in the name of all these and more that I have not time now to enumerate, I ask in the name of justice why the Alaskans should not have the right of local selfgovernment? [Long applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Cultor having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H.R. 21821. In act to authorize the city of South Sioux City, in the State of Nebraska, to construct a bridge across the Missoul River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution of the House of Representatives (H. J. Res. 254) entitled "Joint resolution congratulating the people of China on their assumption of the powers, duties, and responsibilities of self-government," with an amendment to Senate amendment No. 1.

LEGISLATURE OF ALASKA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to be called upon to address the committee at this time, but because of the lateness of the hour and because the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. Wickersham] has a good deal of material which he could not possibly present in a short time, I have been asked to take the time now.

I have been very much interested in the eloquent words which have just fallen from the lips of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzer]. As was said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wedemeyer] perhaps there is no Member of the House, aside from the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. Wickersham], who knows more about Alaska than does the distinguished gentleman from New York. He told us something about the tremendous wealth of Alaska, and as a citizen of this Republic, I am just as proud of the immense resources of that great, undeveloped empire as any other citizen can possibly be. I am proud of the fact that in Alaska we have the greatest fisheries in the world. I am proud of the fact that in Alaska there are tremendous agricultural possibilities, as I shall hope to show before I finish. I am proud of the fact that there are tremendous resources in the way of minerals, particularly in the way of coal, though I think not so much coal as some would have us to believe.

The Bering River coal field is very important, though not nearly so extensive as it is supposed to be. The Matanuska coal field is much more important and more extensive. may I remind you that if we are to change the form of Territorial government in Alaska, or, to be more accurate, if we are to give Alaska a Territorial legislature, it should not be because she has a tremendous amount of coal, not because of her immense mineral resources, not even because of her agricultural possibilities, nor because of her splendid mountain scenery, nor because of her tremendous resources in the way of timbernot for any of these material facts. These are not the things that make up a State. They are the broad foundations upon which a State may be builded, but if we are to give Alaska a Territorial legislature, it must be because it can be shown that there are living in that Territory people who are qualified for self-government to the extent it is proposed to grant it by this bill. I need to remind you only of a line or two of that old stanza of poetry-

What constitutes the State?
Not high-raised battlement or labored mound, thick wall or moated gate.
Not cities proud with spires and turrets crowned—
Not bays and broad-armed ports, where laughing at the storm rich navies ride;
Not starred and spangled courts, where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride.

Nay, not these; but men-

Men with powers as far above dull brutes endued in forest brake or den as beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude.

These, then, constitute the State—not the wealth of forest, field, or mine; not the rich valleys, nor the teeming rivers, nor the snow-capped mountain peaks—not these, but rather the people that make up the community—these constitute the State. Now, what is the kind and the character of the people living in Alaska?

To that phase of this question do I wish to address myself in the first instance. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that while I have not had the opportunity to visit this great country of Alaska, as I mean to do, the information that I have has been obtained from a study of the documents and reports and from various other sources. From what information I have been able to gather I am convinced that there live in the Territory that we call Alaska a sufficient number of people with sufficient qualification to entitle them to elect a Territorial legislature. To be sure that I do not overstep the bounds of truth or propriety, I want to rely, so far as possible, upon official authorities. I have before me an address which was made by the Secretary of the Interior before the American Mining Congress at Chicago on October 27, 1911, and, among other very important things that the Secretary said, I find this statement:

At the very outset I wish to express the high opinion I have formed of the remarkably large and fine body of people who have become permanent residents of Alaska.

The Secretary of the Interior was fresh from an investigation of the conditions in that country. He speaks of these people not simply as transients, not simply as wandering miners, not simply as nomads, but he says that he is impressed simply as nomads, but he says that he is impressed—by the remarkably large and fine body of people who have become permanent residents of Alaska. While there is unquestionably a considerable floating population of a character which does not add to the real strength or stability of the Territory, there is a substantial percentage of vigorous, law-abiding, law-respecting men and women of the highest type of American citizenship, and I found that they possessed what is perhaps the highest form of moral courage—the ability and the willingness to look at both sides of the questions which affect their interests, and to admit that they are wrong when once convinced that they have been led into a mistake of fact or of opinion. The total population is about 65,000, of which a little less than half are whites. They are entitled to a Territorial government better adapted to their peculiar local conditions and needs.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that statement then from the Secretary of the Interior as evidence that the population of Alaska is not nomadic; it is not shifting; it is not trifling; but it is a population made up of substantial citizens or permanent residents, and, in my judgment, a sufficiently large percentage to entitle the people of that country to a Territorial form of

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Is it not a fact that the white popula-tion of Alaska is a little more than one-half of the total; or in other words, 56 per cent instead of a little less than one-half?

Mr. WILLIS. That is absolutely true, and I thank the gentleman for the interruption. I will come to the question of population a little later. That is the next point I want to take up—the number of the people. If it could be shown that there are only a comparatively small number of substantial permanent residents, then for one I would be opposed to the granting of a Territorial legislature to Alaska. But I think it can be shown that there is a sufficient number of substantial citizens, and in that connection I invite attention, in the next place, to the hearings which were had before the Committee on Territories, on page 53, wherein is given a table, which I shall insert in the Record, showing the increase in population in the Territory of Alaska in the last five years:

Population of Alaska, 1909 and 1910.

Class.	1000	1910	Decrease.	Increase.
White. Indian Negro Chinese. Japanese. Ali other	30, 493 29, 536 168 3, 116 279	36,347 1 25,331 209 1,209 913 347	4,205 1,907	5,854 41 634
Total	63,592	64, 356

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEDEMEYER] alluded to the fact-I think it was the gentleman from Michigan, or some one speaking on the bill alluded to the fact, and it is referred to not in the way of criticism at all, but simply as a fact-that when the census was taken 10 years ago from 5,000 to 6,000 people at Nome, or rather not at Nome but in the harbor at Nome on board ships were counted as permanent residents of Alaska. Well, now, the conditions that obtained when the last census was taken were such as to exclude anything of that kind. Consequently if we had the actual facts relative to the census of 1900 and 1910 it would be shown that there was a much larger increase in the white population than even this table shows. But this table shows that in 1900 the white population was 30,000 and in 1910 it was some 36,000, a total increase in the 10 years of 5,854. But it will be said that the total population of Alaska has not increased in the 10 years more than 764. But how does that come? That arises from the fact that the native population has decreased tremendously in the 10 years and also from the fact that the Chinese population has decreased in the 10 years. I want further to make this unquestioned and unquestionable statement of fact, namely, that the percentage of white population of substantial citizenship of the District of Alaska has increased at a fairly reasonable rate. So much, then, for the number. Now let us see about the location of these people. It is said that while there may be a great many there, the Territory is so great that they ought not to have a Territorial legislature, and in that connection I want to insert in the RECORD a table which I take from the third page of the committee's report.

The area and population of Alaska compared with other Territories.

1 Less than 5,000 population.

It appears by that table, among other things, that when the Territory of Mississippi was organized the total population was only something like 7,600—I give the even figures—and the population per thousand square miles was only 82. It appears that when Dakota was organized the total population was only some 14,000, or an average to the 1,000 square miles of 44. In other words-

Alaska now has a larger population than 14 Territories had when they were given the elective Territorial legislature and a larger population than 9 States when they were organized and given sovereign constitutional control over legislation within their borders.

The last statement I quote from the report of the committee. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if it be said that there is not a sufficient population in Alaska to warrant the organization of the Territorial legislature, let it be remembered that in the District of Alaska to-day there are more children in the public schools than there were citizens in the Territory of Mississippi when that Territory was organized; there are more children in the public schools of Alaska to-day than there were people in Indiana Territory when that Territory was organized; there are more children in the schools of Alaska to-day than there were citizens in Dakota when that Territory was organized.

In the face of facts like these it seems to me that it can hardly be said that there is not a sufficient civilized population

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to state to the committee the density of population in the Territory of Mississippi and the other Territories to which he has referred at the time they were organized as Territories, and the density of population in Alaska?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; I have that in the table. I will give that, but the gentleman will find it on page 3 of the committee's report.

Mr. MANN. It must be very brief.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I will read it. Mississippi had a density of population per 1,000 square miles of 82; for Indiana it was 24; for Dakota it was 44, and for Alaska it is 109.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, does the gentleman mean to say that there are more people to the square mile in Alaska, including the entire Territory of Alaska, than there were to the square mile in Mississippi when that Territory was organized as a Territory? Territory

That is exactly what I mean to say.

Mr. WILLIS. That is exactly what I mean to say.
Mr. MANN. What was the population of Mississippi when admitted?

Mr. WILLIS. The population of Mississippi was 7,600; in Indiana it was 5,641.

Mr. MANN. I had supposed that the area of Alaska was much greater in proportion than that would indicate.

Mr. WILLIS. The area given here for Mississippi is 92,000 square miles and Indiana 228,000 square miles. Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. What is Alaska?

Mr. WILLIS. The density per 1,000 square miles is 109.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. What is the area?

Mr. WILLIS. Five hundred and ninety thousand square

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Does not the confusion with regard to the population relative to area arise from the fact that many, of the Territories had a much larger area than the States now. so named?

Mr. WILLIS. Undoubtedly so. For example, as suggested by my friend from Michigan, here is Missouri, which, when it was organized, had an area of 861,000 square miles and a density of only 77 per 1,000 square miles.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it was the Territory to which I had In computing the population of Alaska does the gentleman include both the white and the native population?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is not able to answer that, because he took the table in the report. I do not know. I assume, however, if the total population were used in the one case, it was used also in the other. It should have been, as a matter of fairness, undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of a matter of fairness. It is simply a question of facts for comparison. I think the population in Alaska includes both, according to the census.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It does. It included the number given by the census of that year. Whatever was included was the census of that year.

Mr. MANN. And did not include the natives?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In some instances it did and in some it did not.

Mr. MANN. I know of no instance where it did, because the census expressly excluded the Indians.

Mr. WILLIS. The computation in that table could be very easily made.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman's statement, as a matter of fact, Alaska now with its present population is more densely inhabited than were these Territories, or a large number of the Territories, at the time they were organized?
Mr. WILLIS. That is the argument I am making.

Mr. MANN. Now, the area of Alaska is something over half a million square miles?

Mr. WILLIS. Five hundred and ninety thousand square

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say what was the size of the largest Territory that was admitted in the United States?
Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir. It was Missouri, with an area of 861,000 square miles, some 300,000 more than the present limits of Alaska.

Mr. MANN. It embraced how much, do you say? Mr. WHLIS. Missouri took in 861,000 square miles, and Alaska takes in 590,000 square miles.

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. Of course, that was purely theoretical? Mr. WILLIS. Part of Alaska is theoretical—way up in the northern part.

I think that is hardly a fair example.

Mr. WILLIS. It is the only one, I will say to the gentleman, that is larger than Alaska. I looked carefully to find another

Mr. MANN. Well, that was west of the Mississippi River? Well, that was because they included everything

Mr. WILLIS. I will take the Northwest Territory, and the population of that at the time of its organization was below 5,000. The area was 266,000 square miles.

Mr. MANN. And that was populated at various points of the Territory

Mr. WILLIS. The population was pretty well scattered in the Northwest Territory.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman is now speaking of the time of the organization of the Territory. The Northwest Ter-

Mr. WILLIS. No; it was given a legislature in 1799—some time after the passage of the ordinance.

Mr. MANN. The Territory of Ohio was given a legislature; the Territory of Indiana was given a legislature, but they never embraced a large area.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not quite get the gentleman's policy, if Mr. MANN. When Indiana was organized as a Territory, if Mr. MANN Mr. MANN. When Indiana was organized as a conferred in the first instance upon the judges.

Mr. WILLIS. Until they got 5,000 population.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and when it was organized with the legislature the area of the Territory was considerably diminished?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is mistaken there, because if he will look into the history of the Northwest Territory more carefully he will see the Territorial legislature for the Northwest Territory

Mr. MANN. There never was a Territorial legislature, as I understand, for the Northwest Territory.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that, There was a Territorial legislature for the Northwest Territory, and it met in what is now the State of Ohio in the year 1799.

Mr. MANN. I do not dispute with the gentleman about that. Mr. MANN. I do not dispute with the gentleman drout that Mr. WILLIS. I think my friend is mistaken on the facts. The next year, 1800, a law was passed considerably diminishing the area of the Northwest Territory; in fact, running the present boundary line between Ohio and Indiana up through the southern peninsula of Michigan, and all to the east of that line was Northwest Territory; but it is a matter of fact, which I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will find to be true, that there was a Territorial legislature for the Northwest Territory organized in 1709, and I think he will find a pretty good account of it in Hinsdale's Histoy. There were delegates present there from Kaskaskia and Vincennes and other places. There was a Territorial legislature organized in 1799; but we have drifted away from what I started out to say.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to Bulletin 126, issued by the Geological Survey, on the boundaries of the United States and of the several States and Territories, with an outline of the history of all important changes of territory. That bulletin has been issued by the Government, and contains all the items about which the gentleman from Ohio is talking now. All of the maps of these various Territories and the changes in the boundaries are given there.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that there is a great deal of information included between the covers of a great many volumes. What we want to know is to know the information here and now.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think "the gentleman" is giving it

Mr. MANN. He is, and I am much obliged to the gentleman for the reference.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me take up the mat-Mr. WILLIS. ter that we drifted away from. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] very properly asked about the size of the other Territories when they were organized and given legislatures. Here are some figures. Here is Utah, which, when organized, had an area in square miles of 228,000, Oregon had 297,000, Dakota had 318,000, and then, on the following page of the committee report, is found the statement of the comparative areas of some of the British Provinces—I mean the Canadian Provinces of British North America-and inasmuch as they are situated somewhat similarly to Alaska, I think these facts might be of interest.

Area and population of Canadian Provinces

Provinces.	Area.	Population,
Alberta. British Columbia. Manitoba. New Brunswick Nova Scotia Ontario. Prince Edward Island. Quebec. Saskatchewan. Yukon Territory.	Sq. miles. 253, 540 357, 600 73, 732 27, 985 21, 423 260, 862 2, 184 351, 873 250, 650 207, 076	72,84 178,65 255,21 331,12 459,57 2,182,94 103,25 1,648,89 91,40 27,216

The lieutenant governors of the several Provinces are appointed by the Federal Government for a term of five years. The legislatures are elected by the people of each Province.

For example, here is Alberta, with 253,000 square miles of area; and British Columbia, with an area of 357,000 square miles; and Saskatchewan, with an area of 250,000 square miles. and so on.

In other words, I think that a dispassionate examination of the facts will convince one that the area of Alaska is not disproportionately large when you consider the history and the facts accompanying the organization of territories heretofore in our history. That is the conclusion that I have reached.

Now, then, here is another thing: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] very properly suggested, in speaking of the Northwest Territory, "But the population there was pretty generally scattered throughout the territory." That is an important thing to be considered. If it could be shown that substantially all the people of Alaska live in one place it would be a good argument against the organization of a Territorial legislature

I invite the attention of members of the committee to the A great many have the idea that the population of Alaska is largely confined to southeastern Alaska. This map shows clearly that such is not the case. This map shows the four judicial subdivisions. You might call them the four judicial districts into which Alaska is divided. You will observe that the population down here [indicating] in southeastern Alaska, the first judicial subdivision, is 15,200. Over here is the third subdivision, which is the largest now and which, in my judgment, is bound to be the largest hereafter, for the possibilities of development in this subdivision are vastly greater than elsewhere. Here the population is 20,000. Up here in the fourth subdivision the population is 16,000, and away up here Al in this country [indicating], where it is supposed that nobody at all lives, we find a population of 12,000. Now, I submit that that indicates that the population is fairly distributed over the Territory—15,000 here, 20,000 here, 16,000 here, and 12,000 there. The same facts are more clearly shown by the following table, which is taken from the official report of the Bureau of the Consert 1010 and shown have presented in the consertation. the Census, 1910, and shows how nearly evenly the population is divided between the four judicial districts into which Congress has divided Alaska:

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman give us, in that connection, the native population and the white population in the different

Mr. WILLIS. I could not give that just at this moment. It would be suggestive and interesting information. Perhaps the Delegate could give that. I wonder if that could be obtained.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not know about that.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to have it. Mr. BOWMAN. I figured out that the white population was 61 to each thousand square miles, taking the entire area.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the population in the extreme northwestern division is mainly native.

Mr. WILLIS. That takes in the Nome district?
Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. WILLIS. I do not think the committee in its investigations got any facts before it to show the proportion of native and white population in the four subdivisions.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No, it did not.

Mr. WILLIS. It would be interesting to obtain that information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman state the population per square mile in Alaska?

Mr. WILLIS. I stated it per thousand square miles. It is 109 per thousand square miles.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not have the figures per square mile?

Mr. WILLIS. It is a simple matter of arithmetic to compute that. It is 100 per thousand square miles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WEDEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman 20 minutes more time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman the figures showing the population per square mile for the whole United States?

Mr. WILLIS. No; I have not that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is about 33 per square mile, is it not, at the present time?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know. I have not computed that. I do not want the gentleman to get the wrong idea, however, from this statement I have made about the population of Alaska being 109 per thousand square miles. The figures I gave as to the other Territories when they were admitted was per thousand square miles, and they show that the relative density of population in Alaska is greater than that of any other Territory appearing on the list, with the single exception of Montana, which at the time it was admitted had a population of 140 per thousand square miles.

The figures for each of these districts in Alaska show that the population is fairly well distributed through the Territory.

Now, there is another way to find out whether this population is distributed throughout the four subdivisions. That is to see the amount of business that is transacted in each subdivision.

In this connection I refer to the report of the governor of Alaska, at page 45. This is in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], I think. As I explained a moment ago, this map shows the population in the different sections. Now I cite here the report made by the governor of Alaska for the past year, which, at page 45, contains a statement of the amount of business transacted:

Comparative statement showing value of the merchandise shipped from the Office States to the different divisions of Aldaka.

Divisions.	1906	1907	1908	1909	1910

St. Michael and Yu- kon River	4,659,844	3,564,591	3, 294, 689	4,609,692	3,627,735
Total	18,368,145	17, 273, 944	15,066,318	18,923,887	17,917,083

This is a comparative statement showing the value of the merchandise shipped from the United States to the different divisions of Alaska. Of course, in a matter of this kind you can not hope for mathematical accuracy, but I submit that if it can be shown that year after year substantially the same amount of merchandise, of substantially the same character, is shipped to these various subdivisions it would indicate that there is a fair distribution of population.

I find that in the year 1910 the amount of merchandise shipped from the United States to southeastern Alaska, subdivision 1, was $5,300,000 worth. Please remember these figures so you can compare them. Into the third subdivision the amount shipped was $4,600,000, substantially the same. Into the second subdivision it was $4,200,000, and into the northernmost subdivision it was $3,600,000. In other words, this shows, approximately, not only that there are substantially the same number of people in each of these different subdivisions, but there is substantially the same amount of business transacted. That would not prove conclusively, of course, but would indicate that they are substantially the same kind of people. The point I want to make is that when you think of Alaska you are not to think of a great group of savages in one section and a few white people settled in a small area in another. The population is fairly well distributed over the Territory.

Now, I want to take up another matter, viz, the kind of schools they have. If you can show me a District, a Territory, or a State where they have good schools, good school buildings, where there is an active educational sentiment, where the children are attending the schools, that indicates that in that District or Territory or State a pretty high standard of citizen-ship and civilization obtains. Now, that is the case in Alaska. They have their schools; they have their churches, and those schools and churches are well attended.

Then last, but not least, they have their newspapers, and that surely ought to satisfy any man who is inclined to be a doubting

Thomas that they are civilized up there.

I took the pains to hunt up, in the report of the governor, the number of newspapers. It was stated by the gentleman from Alaska as 25. I have them here, with their names, and I think he counted them correctly. I notice that there are two or three daily papers in the list, and the rest of them are weekly, spelled w-e-e-k, and not w-e-a-k. I have read a number of these newspapers, and they are well gotten up, well edited, full of spirit, and come from all sections of the Territory. To prove that, here is the Cordova Alaskan, the Alaska Citizen up here at Fairbanks in subdivision 4, the Haines Pioneer Press way down here, and the Wrangell Sentinel in the southern section, and the Nome Daily Nugget in the northwest. These papers, or nearly all of them, I have personally examined, and they are scattered all over the Territory. All these things tend to show that this population is progressive, up-to-date, and fairly well distributed over this whole Territory.

I have already shown that the population per square mile is greater than it was in the organization of any other Territory have mentioned, with the single exception of Montana. If I have been able to show that, and that the population is well distributed, it seems to me that I have made out a prima facie case for the organization of a legislature in that Territory.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell] asked a question of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood]. He wanted to know about the towns. I have a table showing the important towns and population, when organized, and all about I will insert it in the RECORD.

Date of settlement of towns in Alaska and their population.

1 Including Treadwell.

So I think I have shown, Mr. Chairman, that we have in Alaska a population sufficiently great, sufficiently intelligent, sufficiently patriotic, sufficiently active in business, sufficiently distributed, to entitle that District to a Territorial legislaure.

Now, there is another thing. I did not mean to put aside with a wave of the hand the discussion of the topic of the wealth of Alaska. That is an important consideration and is the foundation upon which a civilization will have to be built, if it is built. I call attention to the report of the governor of Alaska, I find there a statement which I shall ask permission to put in the Record, but will only read a part of it, showing something of the tremendous productive power of the Territory for the past year:

Value of domestic merchandise and gold and silver shipped from Alaska to the United States.

Alaska sent to this country $230,000 worth of copper; canned salmon, $10,000,000; fish guano, $54,000; salmon and all other fresh or cured fish, $487,000; gold and silver, $15,000,000; making a total for the year of $28,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, not only that, there are tremendous resources in Alaska absolutely untouched. Under the policy we have had heretofore it is not feasible, it is not sensible, to tie up absolutely the resources of Alaska so that we have a situation whereby, with an abundance of coal cropping out of the mountains almost in sight, the people of Alaska have had to buy coal not simply from British Columbia, but from Wales. Within the past year thousands of tons of coal have been shipped away around the Horn from the coal mines of Wales and sold up yonder in Alaska, where you have one of the greatest coal fields in the world. That is a condition that can not remain permanently.

Mr. CANNON. But are we not keeping it for posterity?

Mr. WILLIS. That is a question I should not like to go into at this time with my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

In other words, Alaska has tremendous wealth, and while it is undeveloped as yet in large part, there is a tremendous amount of wealth flowing from that district to the United States. As I have indicated, an annual trade of $55,000,000—equal to that of Hawaii or of Porto Rico; vastly greater than our trade with the Philippines or with China. All this money comes into the United States. The point I am making is that Alaska has not only a business future, but a business present. There is now a tremendous amount of trade carried on. That is from the report of the Government. Then let us take the hearings of the committee. At page 42 of those hearings I find some other information to which I wish to call attention, indicating the wealth of that country, not taking time to read all of the table:

Growth of Alaska's output of gold and fish.

Years.	Gold output.	Fish output.	Total.
1900. 1901. 1902. 1903. 1904. 1905. 1906. 1907. 1908. 1909.	$8,166,000 6,932,700 8,283,400 8,683,600 9,160,000 15,630,000 22,036,794 19,340,743 19,100,000 19,778,962	$6,219,887 6,926,167 8,667,673 10,289,635 7,735,782 6,563,655 9,071,090 10,160,183 11,181,388 11,847,443	$14,385,887 13,858,867 16,951,073 18,973,235 16,895,782 22,193,655 31,107,884 29,509,926 30,960,350 30,947,443
Total	137, 121, 199	88, 662, 903	225, 784, 103

I merely call attention to this fact, that in the year 1909 the gold output coming into this country from Alaska was $19,-000,000 and the fish output $11,000,000, and in the 10 years from 1900 to 1909 the total gold output was $137,000,000 and the total fish output $88,000,000, a total of $225,000,000 for 10 years. In other words, this is not a desert up there; it is not a country with a few miners wandering about over it and a few gamblers, but this is a country that is contributing now tremendously to the commerce of this country, a country that is peopled with a substantial business people. Again, on page 47 of the hearings is another statement that I wish to insert, showing the comparative resources of the country and the value of the commerce of Alaska as compared with Porto Rico and Hawaii:

A comparison of the per capita trade value of Alaska's population with that of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands is an instructive one.

27auc van	e per capita
Territories.	Total trade 1909.	Population.	Per capita value,
Alaska Do Hawaii Porto Rico, Philippines	$52, 109, 999 52, 109, 999 60, 529, 466 52, 152, 230 27, 335, 857	1.40,000 2.65,000 218,000 1,075,000 8,282,000	$1,302.75 801.69 277.65 48.51 3.30

1 Whites. 2 Total.

The trade value of Alaska's population is based upon an estimated total population of 65,000 and an estimated total white population of 40,000. Upon that estimate each white man, woman, and child in Alaska is worth, in trade value, $1,302.75; but when all the Indians and Eskimos, men, women, and children, are added it lowers the per capita value to $801.69. A white man in Alaska is worth 4.6 Hawaitans, 27 Porto Ricans, or 394 Filipinos in trade value. Add to that the value which comes from a permanent and growing trade in Alaska and you have a fair view of the comparative value of Alaska's trade to the United States. Why not help them develop it?

The per capita value of the Alaskan citizen, counting all of them now, not simply the white citizens, but all of them, is $801 in trade; of Hawaii, $277; Porto Rico, $48; and the Philippines, $3.30. I am not making these statements with the idea of making any invidious comparison as related to these other dependencies or Territories, but to prove that Alaska commercially is of tremendous importance and worthy of our most careful consideration.

I wish I had time, but I have not, to go into the coal question in Alaska. I differ with some in that respect. I do not think there is the vast amount of coal in Alaska that a great many people seem to think there is. I have examined pretty carefully the report here of the Geological Survey—the Geology and Coal Felds of the Lower Matanuska Valley. I have read a good deal of that, and also a document issued by the Bureau of Mines entitled "The Alaskan Coal Problem," by Secretary Fisher.

I do not think there is such a tremendous amount of coal there. As I indicated in my remarks earlier there are valuable coal fields, and I shall point them out on the map. The Bering River coal field is right here, and that is probably 50 square miles in extent, and then farther north is the Matanuska Valley, the Matanuska coal field, some 74 square miles in extent. tered about here there are various areas of lignite, and all that sort of thing, but those are the two important coal fields of Alaska.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much coal is there? Mr. WILLIS. All I know is the number of square miles—50 in one and 74 in the other.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many tons?

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, I have not gone into that, and I do not think anybody knows.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A very considerable amount?

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, yes; undoubtedly so; a very considerable amount.

Mr. RAKER. Is that all in public ownership yet? Mr. WILLIS. Yes; substantially all. My understanding is that some of the Bering River coal fields were mixed up with the famous Cunningham claims, and probably he knows as much about that as I do, and perhaps more; but there is enough coal there. Mr. Chairman, to warrant us in saying that there is an immense business future for Alaska. If we can get a few of these questions settled, if we can give to the people a stable and substantial government, I think the future for Alaska is bright and radiant and rosy.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Has the title to any of these coal fields passed into private ownership?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from California just asked that question.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; it has not.

Mr. WILLIS. I know it has not in the Matanuska field.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not one foot.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Would it be a proper subject of legislation for the gentleman's committee to report at this session, providing for the proper disposition of these coal fields or their operation by the Government?

Mr. WILLIS. I will say that the committee now has under consideration, and I think perhaps has already reported favorably, a mining bill that will help some.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. And the coal matter, I think, is before the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILLIS. And properly so. Mr. LAFFERTY. That information is very gratifying to the people of the West.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, there is another item-Mr. WEDEMEYER. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will yield me more time.

Mr. WEDEMEYER, I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. WILLIS. I may not need it.
Mr. WEDEMEYER. Would the gentleman from Ohio permit me to interpolate here in answer to the question of the gentleman from Oregon something that may be of interest. This is from the proceedings of the fourteenth annual convention of the American Mining Congress and from an address delivered by Mr. George E. Baldwin, of Valdez, Alaska, in which he makes this statement. I know nothing about it in detail except I was struck by the statement and perhaps it will answer the question of the gentleman. Mr. Baldwin, in this paper read before the American Mining Congress, says:

Mr. WILLIS. I thank my friend from Michigan. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to something upon which but little has been said and that is the agricultural possibilities and probabilities, and, may I say, certainties of this country, and I am not talking up in the air now. I will quote from the report of the governor of Alaska, beginning at page 14:

AGRICULTURE.

am not talking up in the air now. I will quote from the report of the governor of Alaska, beginning at page 14:

AGRICUTURE.

There has been so much discussion in very recent years about what has been termed the "possibilities of agriculture" in Alaska that a wire statement of the several phases of this discussion may be useful. The possibilities of agriculture were admitted by only a few persons—even of those familiar with local conditions—10 or 12 years ago. There were many who disbelieved them who have themselves recently demonstrated the feasibility of raising garden crops and even some of the several phases of this discussion may be useful. The Territory, even in some of the settlements north of the Arctic Circle. At present no doubt is expressed by anybody in Alaska as to the "possibilities of agriculture," and the local pride of residents everywhere in their gardens and small farms is one of the significant facts impressed upon the minds of visitors from the States. The general discussion of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question, not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question not of the subject at this time has narrowed down to the question of the subject at the subject of the subject

The luxuriant growth of grasses in the great territory surrounding Cook Inlet, as well as in other favored regions where the winter climate is comparatively mild, induces the belief that stock raising will eventually become a profitable industry. Although products of the soil may never enter into the export trade of Alaska to any considerable extent, the same is not to be said of beef and mutton. The grazing areas are of large extent, and in several localities cattle and even horses, having been left at the end of the working season to shift for themselves, have survived the winter without artificial shelter. Grasses and all the other forms of plant life common to the northern temperate zone grow with great rapidity in Alaska. In the interior valleys, in the vicinity of former mining or construction camps, are commonly seen scattered patches of timothy, which sprung years ago from the seed of hay brought from the States for horse feed, the roots of which have never been winterkilled. White clover grows wild everywhere in the Territory south of the Arctic Circle.

With stock raising as with agriculture in Alaska, the question is not one of adaptability, but simply of the time when the land shall be needed and markets made available.

He goes on to say further that the experiment station does

He goes on to say further that the experiment station does not need to be continued in order to determine the question of whether it is possible to raise these great standard crops of barley, oats, and potatoes, and to raise them successfully, even Less than two-hundredths of 1 per cent of the land of Alaska is in private ownership, more than ninety-nine and ninety-eight one-hundredths are still in the public domain, and I ask you, in all candor, etc.

was he to look upon, as he showed in his garden a fine crop of potatoes and flowers. Up in that country they have all the accompaniments of agricultural prosperity.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?
Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.
Mr. CANNON. I was at that experiment station in Sitka the year of the Portland Exposition. I went around and saw the house in which the superintendent lived, and I went over and saw the farm, or the alleged farm. Now, I am not prepared to dispute they have made some experiments, but I would not give one acre of Missouri soil for production or half an acre of Illinois soil for everything I saw on that experiment farm.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will say that is true on the coast, but in the great interior, in this immense portion which the gentleman sees here on the map, it is quite different.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may be correct, and I hope he is.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the best agricultural land is not down in here [indicating on map] at all, but up here in this country, the Tanana Valley, and that is where the great possibilities of agriculture are. It seems to me pretty well established that Alaska has a great future agriculturally. Secretary Fisher says of it:

I found Alaska a country of wonderful scenic beauty, which in itself will in future years be one of its greatest financial assets. From all the information I could gather, I believe it to be a country of great mineral and agricultural possibilities; indeed, I should go further and say a country of great mineral and agricultural probabilities, needing development, ready for development, and inviting development, but held back chiefly by inadequate transportation facilities and inadequate laws.

I shall insert in the RECORD, with the permission of the gentleman from Alaska, some of his private correspondence, a letter that he has from Mr. William Young stating what sort of a time he has had with his farm products the past year. It is a typical farmer's letter, telling what he raised, how successful he was with his different crops, and to me it is tremendously interest-ing. He goes on to tell how much cabbage he raised and how many beets and how many hogs, and all that sort of thing. shall insert that in the RECORD, with the permission of the committee:

[Letter of Mr. William Young, of Fairbanks, Alaska, showing the agricultural possibilities of the Tanana Valley of Alaska,] FAIRBANKS, ALASKA, November 8, 1909.

. James Wickersham. Delegate to Congress, Fairbanks, Alaska.

Hon. James Wickersham.

Delegate to Congress, Fairbanks, Alaska.

My Dean Judge: In answer to your suggestion that I write you a letter about my farming operations, I take pleasure in doing so. When you and Mr. Joshin and Mr. Birch and Mr. White were at my place last fall I had not begun to take in my crops, but since then I have done so. I had 3 acres of potatoes, and they yielded me 18 tons, and the market price was $120 per ton, for which I sold most of them. I had I acre of beets, on which I had a crop of 8 tons: 2 acres of carrots, which yielded me 7½ tons, with a market price of $140 per ton; 1 acre of turnips, from which I gathered 200 sacks of 80 pounds to the sack, or 8 tons, at $80 per ton. I had 2½ tons of rutabagas upon one-fourth of an acre of ground, for which the market price was $100 per ton. I had 1 ton of red beets on one-quarter of an acre of ground, at $140 per ton. I had 15 acres of barley, which I cut and sold for hay. I had 3½ tons, which I sold for $75 per ton, and still have enough left to fill my barn chuck full for my own use for the winter. I raised 2 tons of cabbages, which I put away for the winter, besides which I sold between 3½ and 4 tons during the summer at an average selling price of $140 per ton.

I raised 20 sucking pigs, also 13 pigs which weighed about 100 pounds each, and 23 big hogs. I sold 5 of my hogs to the butcher for $60 each. This fall I put in 6 acres of winter wheat, barley, and oats, and all kinds of garden vergetables, and I never saw a better stand of wheat anywhere. I have raised good winter wheat, barley, and oats, and all kinds of garden vergetables, and in my judgment, as a farmer of more than 30 years' experience, the Tanana Valley is a first-class agricultural country.

My farm is near the river and is perfectly level. The soil is a sandy loam and is very rich, made up of sediment and silt and sand brought down by the river in ages gone by. The Tanana Valley in the North so wide and rich and variable for agricultural purposes as the Tanana Valley.

I ha

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] pointed out that down here about Cook Inlet it is entirely possible, and not a mere matter of possibility, but a fact, that live stock can graze out of doors the year around without one single penny being expended for shelter or food.

We think of Alaska as a great country of glaciers. It is a country of tremendous possibilities and probabilities. Now, in the minute or two that I have I want to say that to me, after all, these things that I have spoken of are only an incident. I believe that the future theater of the world's activity is to be the Pacific. I am tremendously proud of the fact that this great Republic of ours occupies the position of advantage. We are going to finish the Panama Canal, and finish it on time. Just let me say in passing, that when we get the Panama Caual finished we will have enough extra railroad iron and enough locomotives and flat cars to build a railroad from Resurrection Bay to Fairbanks, and, in my judgment, we ought to do it. But that is neither here nor there. Hawaii is already a part of our country. It does not show on this map, but it is the most important position of strategy in the whole Pacific. We have the western coast of the mainland of the United States. Whatever shall be the future of the Philippines; I presume there is not anybody so unpatriotic as to suppose that the Philippines could ever be given up for any purpose without reserving to this Republic an important coaling station there.

And then it seems to me that I can see in the near future the great populations of the earth circling as they are about the Pacific, there the millions of the Japanese and the Chinese and here the teeming millions of our own West, ourselves controlling the Panama Canal, and these points here [indicating], Resurrection Bay or Valdez, the best harbors in the world, and almost on the direct line of transit between Seattle and Japan, on the great circle route. It seems to me, gentlemen, it is of tremendous importance that we shall do something for Alaska; that we shall make it possible for this Territory to develop. I look to see the time when the population of Alaska will not be 60,000, but will be 600,000 [applause] and perhaps 6,000,000. And I say to you, gentlemen, that the best way to make possible the development of this magnificent and almost untouched empire is to pass this bill.

And another thing that ought not to be forgotten that will come with the increase of the power of this Republic on the Pacific is its mighty influence for peace; this Government has its hands raised not to strike, but in benediction. The greatest power on this earth for peace is the United States of America.

[Applause.]

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world and all the wonder that would be; Saw the beavens fill with commerce, argosles of magic sails, Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales; Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue; Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm, With the standards of the people's plunging thro' the thunderstorm; Till the war drum throbb'd no longer and the battle flags were furl'd, in the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

The best thing to do to make that possible is to develop Alaska, and the best way to develop Alaska is to pass this bill. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Adam].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, during my six years of service in this body I have sought and taken advantage of every opportunity to use both my voice and vote in support of legislation that would promote and advance the interests of the American farmer. Believing, as I do, that the prosperity of the country depends almost entirely upon the success of the farmer, I have felt it my duty to support all legislation that would tend to build up and make more profitable the business in which he is engaged.

Mr. Chairman, I am here representing a large agricultural district, whose farmers are intelligent, industrious, progressive, and successful. We know out in Indiana that their success means the success of the merchant, the manufacturer, the banker, the lawyer, the doctor, the laborer, and the mechanic, While I am not a farmer myself, all the business I have depends upon the farmer, and if his business is not profitable, my business is likewise unprofitable. The fact is, agriculture is the foundation of all prosperity. It has built up and maintained our great manufacturing industries. It has made possible our beautiful and opulent cities bound together with bands of steel. It has furnished the wealth that has opened up and beautified, no matter how obscure, every hole and corner of this vast universe. You may burn down and destroy our splendid cities, and the wealth of the farm will rebuild them more beautiful than before; but destroy our farms and our cities will decay and our people will starve.

Mr. Chairman, appreciating these facts as I do, I have stood upon this floor during the past six years advocating measures that in my judgment would tend to make better the conditions of the men who live upon the farm, and by whose toil our entire population is fed, and upon whose welfare and prosperity the country depends. I have been pleased to watch the growth of the Agricultural Department here in Washington. No department of this Government has done so much of genuine benefit to the country as a whole as has this department.

I have voted for and favored the strictest economy in the administration of governmental affairs, I have never yet, and will never, vote to lower the appropriations for agricultural purposes. Each year since I became a Member I have helped to increase the appropriations for the use of the Department of Agriculture in order that its efficiency may be improved and its power for good increased.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask this House to go further in its effort to further the interests of the American farmer by passing House bill No. 22871, a bill providing for the establishment of agricultural-extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States, which bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Agriculture, and if enacted into law will, in my judgment, be of inestimable value to the agriculturists of the country. It is stated in the very able report of the committee that the object of the bill is to establish agricultural-extension departments under the direction of the land-grant colleges of the several States to aid in carrying to the people useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economies through field instruction, demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

The Federal Government has committed itself emphatically and irrevocably to the policy of appropriating money to aid in the encouragement, development, and preservation of agriculture, both in the maintenance of its most efficient Department of Agriculture, and through a series of legislative enactments endowing agricultural colleges and establishing agricultural experiment stations in the several States. Thus agriculture has been recognized as of supreme importance to the Nation, and is so recognized by every thoughtful student of present economic conditions.

Liberal as we have been toward our agriculture, the fact remains that this Government expends less money for its encouragement and development, in proportion to its population and the extent of its agricultural area, than any nation of Europe, with the possible exception of Spain. It was recently pointed out in a reliable farm journal that less than 1 per cent of the annual total appropriations of the Government is expended for the purpose of aiding agriculture—a most significant statement when agriculture is unquestionably the basic industry upon which is builded every other industry and upon which is depended the real prosperity of the Nation.

The enactment of the first Morrill Act-for the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be * * * to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts—was epochal, being the first serious national effort to aid agriculture in a practical way. As a result of this encouragement and Federal recognition, every State has a well-equipped agricultural and mechanical college training its young men to solve agricultural and industrial problems.

It was soon discovered that their peculiar difficulty lay in lack of sufficient, definite, and exact scientific information. Realization of this insufficiency became so manifest and so insistent that the Hatch Act, establishing agricultural experiment stations, "to promote scientific investigation and experiment respecting the principles and applications of agricultural science," was enacted 25 years after the land-grant colleges were authorized. Under this act agricultural experiment stations, devoting their energies to gathering scientific truths and exploding harmful fallacies touching agriculture, have been established in each of the States.

When it is remembered that only a very small per cent of the people can enjoy the benefits of these institutions, it is evident that the system of Federal aid to agriculture is yet incomplete. "The colleges deal with ideas; the stations with facts. The colleges teach theories of agriculture; the stations prove good theories and disprove bad ones." The stations gather facts of practical and scientific nature; the colleges disseminate these facts, but only to limited numbers in proportion to the total rural population.

The committee believes that this bill is the next logical, necessary step to give this country the most comprehensive system of governmental aid to agriculture in the world. The central idea of the bill is to bring the farmer, upon the farm, this informa-tion, these scientific truths, and these better methods of agri-culture which the colleges and stations have been and are gathering. Past legislation has resulted in the accumulation of valuable agricultural information; this bill proposes to disseminate it in the most practical and far-reaching manner.

Objections can not be urged to the bill on the theory that it proposes to commit the Government to a new and untried policy. It seeks only to give fuller force and more complete effect to the agencies already created by congressional action. Thirty-four States are now supporting, through their agricultural colleges, some kind of agricultural extension departments: but, as urged before the committee, the moral effect of the aid of the Federal Government upon this line of work will be of incalculable value in further extending and promoting it.

The bill has received the most emphatic indorsement of the leading agricultural thinkers of the country, the rural press, influential business associations, and agricultural organizations.

The principle of agricultural extension work, through field instruction and demonstrations, is recognized by every leading country of Europe, including the British Empire, Austria, Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Hungary, Italy, Holland, Germany, Russia, and Belgium.

It is a significant fact that 25 years ago the agriculture of Belgium was in a most deplorable and discouraging condition. The wise men of the nation, seeking a remedy for this situation, established a system of extension work in agriculture, such as proposed in this bill, which in this brief period has completely revolutionized this foundation of all industries and governments, and has placed Belgium in the front rank of agricultural nations.

It is likewise significant, as pointed out by authorities in agricultural work, that the farmers of Europe are producing two and one-half to three times as much per acre as American farmers, and this in the face of the fact that European lands have been under cultivation for many centuries and were perhaps originally not so fertile as ours.

Fortunately, the conditions of Belgium, before the establishment of agricultural extension departments, as yet have not come entirely upon our country, but the committee is not unmindful of the striking similarity in tendencies. Soil fertility is undeniably decreasing, especially in the older States, and the production is failing to keep pace with the demands of the nonagricultural classes. At the present ratio the time is not far in the future when we will cease to produce sufficient food-stuffs with which to supply the Nation. It becomes the imperative duty of Congress to check these tendencies which, if mitted to continue, must bring about a deplorable condition. The committee recommends this bill as furnishing a remedy with which to avoid these inevitable consequences—a remedy found all-sufficient in Belgium and other European countries, and which is not entirely untried in this country.

Section 1 authorizes that agricultural extension departments may be established in each State in connection with its landgrant college or colleges, and permits the State in which two or more such colleges have been or shall be established to designate which may administer the funds.

Section 2 defines the object and duty of these agricultural extension departments to be to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

Section 3 makes frankable printed matter and correspondence for the furtherance of the purpose of the act issued by the agricultural colleges or by agents of the extension departments This privilege is necessary in order that the plan of the bill may be executed.

Section 4 is the appropriating section of the bill and provides that the sum of $10,000 shall be appropriated annually to each State which shall assent to the provisions of the act. nual appropriation is a straight, unconditional appropriation to the several States and amounts each year to a charge upon the Treasury of $480,000. The sum of $300,000 is appropriated for the fiscal year 1914, and an annual increase of this appropria-tion of $300,000 a year over the preceding year for a period of nine years is provided until the total amount of additional appropriations will be the sum of $3,000,000 annually. But these additional appropriations, or this sum of $3,000,000 annually, is to be allotted among the several States in the proportion which their rural population bears to the total rural populations of the United States, as determined by the next preceding Federal The Census Bureau defined as "urban population that census. residing in the cities and other incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more, including the New England towns of that population.'

The bill provides a sum of $10,000 per year to each State unconditionally, and provides also that no State is to be entitled to any part of its allotment of the additional sums until its legislature has provided for the establishment of agricultural extension departments, as provided in section 1 of this bill; and it requires further that no State shall receive of these additional appropriations a sum exceeding the sum authorized by its legislature for that year for this purpose, or provided by State, county, college, or local authority. The idea is that there must be furnished to these extension departments by some authority other than the Federal authority as much as is provided by the Federal Government; no more, no less.

For example, the allotment to a given State might be the sum of $50,000, which the State would receive if it should duplicate this amount, but it might happen that the State would desire to appropriate for such a purpose only $25,000, in which event such State would be entitled only to $25,000 of the Federal funds in addition to the $10,000 which is given each year unconditionally. It makes mandatory that not less than 75 per cent of all moneys available under this act shall be expended each year for field instruction and demonstrations. The remainder of the money is available for extension work proper, home economics, and allied subjects.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is no legislation before the House of greater importance than this bill. Its passage will result in great benefit not only to the American farmer but to the entire country. I sincerely hope this bill will be taken up at an early date and passed without a dissenting vote. Our agriculturists are entitled to this consideration, and I insist upon them having it. While I am not in favor of class legislation, yet, in view of the fact that the prosperity of the farmer means the prosperity of the Nation, I stand ready to give my support to any bill that will advance his interests and make his life more pleasant and his profession more profitable.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE]. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, as favorably recommended by the Committee on the Territories, provides for an elective legislative assembly for the Territory of Alaska. I feel to some extent qualified to discuss this measure by reason of my two and a half years' experience in the Alaskan interior-not as a tourist nor in an official capacity, but as a placer miner-one of the several thousand who plunged into the country during the Klondike stampede in the early spring of 1898. I have heard this afternoon of railroads already constructed and in operation, but previous to 1900 no locomotive whistle had pierced the stillness of the Alaskan air. 5,000 Americans who were struggling to get over the mountains into the interior were forced to pack their provisions and outfits on their backs. It was the gold of the Yukon Valley-about $30,000,000 in 1898 and $28,000,000 in 1899-brought back by these pioneers that flowed into the banks of the United States and contributed to the reestablishment of an adequate gold reserve, the scarcity of which had determined the issue of the strenuous campaign of 1896.

Ten years have passed and the railroad has been built through the mountains over which we laboriously worked our way on foot. The older towns on the southeastern coast and the cities on our Pacific coast have felt the impulse of the constant flow of yellow metal. Yes, Alaska is unquestionably rich in mineral

I have listened to the splendid oratory of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wedemeyer] and of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzen], who tell us they have cruised along a few hundred miles of the southeastern coast, and I have enjoyed the eloquent speech of my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis], who has so industriously studied statistics, and I find myself wondering if the Alaska they picture could have so changed since my experiences there. I want to be fair to Alaska but could not help thinking, when the gentleman from New York spoke of the "salubrity of her climate and the grazing advantage for sheep and cattle," that he had availed himself of the license granted to poets. It is true the Japan stream tempers the climate of the islands and a limited area of the southeastern coast, but, unfortunately for the people of the interior. that stream does not flow north to the Bering Straits or up the mighty Yukon River. During six months of the year an arctic cold prevails, extending over very much the larger part of The thermometer seldom drops lower than 50 or 60 degrees below zero. In this summer garden we have heard described the sun shows its face during one or two hours a day throughout six or eight weeks to the shivering Alaskans, with the evident purpose of demonstrating that it still shines in Alaska has vast territorial extent, 590,000 square miles. presume throughout approximately 400,000 square miles of this area the ground is frozen the year round from 10 to 100 feet in depth. My partner and I sank a 72-foot shaft near the Yukon and were forced to thaw every foot of the dirt the entire depth. Judging by these facts, the House will understand why I question to some extent the immediate rush of home seekers and farmers that is promised as a result of the enactment of the pending bill creating an elective legislative assembly for the Territory. The bill provides for the election of 16 representatives in the assembly and 8 representatives in the council, and takes the 4 judiciary subdivisions as legislative units for election purposes.

No one at all familiar with the history of Alaska can question the statement that the Congress of the United States has neglected to pass legislation adequate to the development and needs of the Territory.

Session after session, under Republican control, has left unheeded the petitions and demands from the people of Alaska. It has remained for the Democratic Committee on Territories to formulate a bill to set up a legislative government, that the people themselves may write into statute the laws they have so long needed. In my humble judgment, however, the committee, in formulating the bill, has provided for a form of Territorial government far in advance of that which is justified by the present population.

And at this point I would like to take up, Mr. Chairman, the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. and which no one on the floor of the House seems to be able to answer, namely, the relative proportion of native population-Indians and Chinese-as related to the white population in the different districts. Fortunately I have made a detailed analysis of the population of the second district, and will submit this the committee and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for their information. The second district has an approximate area of 150,000 square miles and a total population of 12,351, as you will observe on the map displayed before us. This total includes 7,233 Indians and 350 Chinese and mixed. The number of white males over 21 years of age is 3,492. The pending bill proposes to give these 3,492 voters, scattered over 150,000 square miles, the right to elect two representatives to the council and four representatives to the assembly. call your attention to the further and more important fact that as against the 3,492 voters there is only a total of 938 white women. I submit that this proportion between men and women does not-at least in this second district-promise a settled community life, nor indicate the homes that are generally reckoned as a necessary foundation for a self-governing people.

My criticism of the bill refers only to the sparsity of population and not to the character of the men who live in Alaska. The men and women are a sturdy, self-reliant type of Americans. The very height of her mountain peaks and the grandeur of wild scenery seem to wield a subtle influence for good in this land of the midnight sun. The hazardous struggle in which men engage to successfully wrest from an arctic storehouse the mineral wealth contributes to the strengthening of moral and physical fiber. That such men should be demanding some form of self-government is the natural voice of a free people.

The President has repeatedly recommended in speech and message an appointive commission as best suited to the existing conditions in the Territory. A bill was introduced by Senator Beveridge last session, after having been favorably recommended by the Senate Committee on Teritories, embodying this plan, and failed to pass the Senate.

The Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Walter L. Fisher, following a trip to Alaska last summer, suggests a middle-ground proposition as between the President's appointive commission and the present Wickersham bill creating an elective legislative assembly, and, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary's plan is, in my humble judgment, best adapted to develop a form of government suited to the needs and requirements of the Territory. Let me quote from the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, page 55:

The fact that the Federal Government has heretofore made direct appropriation for the beneft of the Territory and that increased appropriations are needed constitutes one of the chief arguments against the extension of the principle of Territorial independence and Territorial responsibility to Alaska. Taken in consideration with the comparatively small and widely scattered population and the inadequate means for transportation and communication, it would seem to demonstrate that a commission form of government would best meet the existing situation. Such a commission could consist of appointed representatives of the Federal Government and locally elected representatives of the Territory itself. To it could be transferred, under appropriate limitations, the authority to make Territorial laws and regulations such as are now sadly needed.

Notwithstanding my avowed preference for the Secretary's proposed form of Territorial government, I intend to cast an affirmative vote for the bill under consideration to-day. The House Committee on the Territories has unanimously recommended the passage of the bill, and I am able to waive the objections already indicated because of my knowledge of the urgent need of relief from the present inadequate form of government in operation in the Territory. I view the granting of an elec-tive legislative assembly to the 27,988 voters, scattered over 590,000 square miles, as contemplated in this bill, much in the same light as I imagine our fathers must have contemplated the purchase of a Sunday suit of clothes for us, when that transaction marked the turning point of another year, by selecting a suit several sizes too large, with the certain knowledge that we would grow into it at some period of the wearing.

Alaska is in a formative stage of development. The Territory needs better transportation facilities, the extension of her wagon roads, the building of a railroad from the coast to the great Yukon Basin, the opening up of coal and timberlands to honest and industrious seekers of home and fortune under a workable leasing system, and a revision of the mining laws, which for years have been abused and has resulted in retarding active development work.

I feel confident that agriculture will be developed to a certain degree through the energy of the people. In the great Tanana Valley men have demonstrated that they can, notwithstanding the frozen ground throughout 12 months of the year, grow a variety of produce and will be able to supply the demand for food resulting from the growing population. The testimony from Fairbanks and vicinity proves conclusively that farmers are successfully tilling to the depth of 3 or 4 feet of alluvial soil thawed by 20 hours of sunshine with which Alaska is blessed during the summer months. I have used the pick and shovel in Alaska's rich placer gravel, have swung my ax in her forests, have traveled over the trails with sled and dog teams, in close companionship with her sturdy pioneers, and can prophesy with the certainty of experience the grateful thanksgiving that will result in Alaska when the news of to-day's proceedings in the House is transmitted to this long-neglected people.

As the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] knows, the sun is this month beginning to climb the southern skies after its winter's sleep, and it is certainly most appropriate that at the same time the hearts of these people be cheered by the news that a long-slumbering Congress has arisen to its opportunity of giving to her most northerly possession relief from the prevailing inadequacy of governmental control. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

[Mr. RAKER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record for the purpose of placing therein the very able speech delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] as permanent chairman of the Democratic State convention at New York City on Thursday, April 11, 1912. In this speech the gentleman from New York deals at length with the achievements of the Democratic Party during the time it has been in control of this House.

Mr. MANN. The speech can not be very long, then.

Mr. BURLESON. It also deals with the delinquencies of the Republican Party during the recent past, when in control, which makes it quite lengthy.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I am concerned, I shall certainly assent to this request, but I want to suggest the propriety of printing these speeches and addresses as documents. perhaps some one else has made that suggestion. It is a common thing to talk about burying a speech in the Congressional RECORD, but there is too much truth in that, on account of the comparatively limited circulation of the RECORD. If we should follow the practice of the Senate and print these things in the shape of documents, they would be more accessible. Of course, I have no doubt a great many people will read this speech.

·Mr. BURLESON. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the better practice would be to print such speeches as documents, but I assure the gentleman that this particular speech will not be buried in the Congressional RECORD, for it is our purpose to circulate it in certain sections of the United States where the people are in need of enlightenment. We intend to send many copies to Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. And Texas will doubtless receive a large number.

Mr. MANN. I made the same suggestion in the House the other day which my colleague, Mr. Cannon, has made now, intending to discuss the matter afterwards with various gentlemen in the House, and see if we could not arrive at some policy in reference to the printing of such things as this. I made inquiry at the document room and ascertained the number of copies that could be published if such a speech were printed as a document, and the number is not very large. Of course they would be frankable, and that is what gentlemen want to have done. I have not yet reached any understanding with gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, or even with gentlemen on this side of the aisle, with reference to the matter. I think it is desirable to adopt a policy and then after that to require that they shall all be printed as House documents.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in accord with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois, and believe such speeches should be printed as House documents, but I would prefer that this speech take the usual course.

Mr. FINLEY. The proposition is to have this printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes. I hope no one will object. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech referred to is as follows:

SPEECH OF THE HON. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, AS PERMANENT CHAIRMAN OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION, AT NEW YORK, N. Y., THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1912.

"Gentlemen of the convention, to participate in a Democratic convention is a privilege highly prized; to be chosen to preside over this one is a distinction which I very greatly appreciate. For this expression of your esteem I thank you most sincerely.

"PROSPECTS OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY WERE NEVER BRIGHTER,

"Never in all of its existence have the prospects of the Democratic Party been so bright; never has the party been more entitled to be intrusted with power and control of governmental affairs; never has it been more deserving of the confidence of the country.

"RECORD OF ACHIEVEMENTS UNRIVALED IN POLITICAL HISTORY.

"In the coming campaign the party will appeal to the people upon a record of achievements unrivaled in political history.

"For sixteen years the Democracy had been excluded from the management of practically every department of the Government. Early in that period our opponents denounced us as a party of negation and of obstruction. They asserted that our party was wanting in that constructive capacity so essential to the successful conduct of governmental affairs. So persistently was this groundless statement reiterated that many of our own adherents were misled, and forgetting that the most glorious and most prosperous days of the Republic were during Democratic administrations, they frequently united with the professional political claque that misrepresented and ignorantly and unjustly condemned us.

"PAYNE-ALDRICH TARIFF RESENTED BY THE PEOPLE,

"Upon the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law a storm of resentment against the Republican Party swept the country. In the congressional campaign of 1910 an appeal was made for continued Republican supremacy upon the contention that the Democracy was a disorganized, disgruntled, incompetent, and incoherent group without unity in principles and policies and incapable of concerted action upon public questions. dent, in his speech at the Republican Club in this city on Lincoln's birthday, realized that disaster was impending, and that the country was about to pronounce its condemnation upon his party. He endeavored to appease the wrath of the people, by justifying the tariff law as he had attempted in his Winona speech, but by conjuring the danger that threatened from Democratic success.

"Should disaster follow us-

"He said-

"and the Republican Party becomes a minority in the next House, it may be possible that in the Democratic exercise of its power the people of the country will see which is the party of accomplishment, which is the party of arduous deeds done, and which is the party of words and irresponsible action.

"Disaster did follow the Republican Party. 40 in the House of Representatives was turned into a Democratic majority of 65. We await with confidence the decision of the country as to which has been the party of accomplishment and which the party of irresponsible opposition.

"The Congress was convened in extraordinary session in

The President was informed in advance that the April, 1911. Democratic House would not be content merely to enact such legislation as he desired, but that it would insist upon the consideration of other legislation imperatively demanded by the country, and particularly of bills to relieve the people from the unjust exactions of the iniquitous Payne-Aldrich tariff law, which had been so universally condemned.

"THE PRESIDENT DISPLAYS CONFIDENCE IN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

"No more flattering nor more deserved compliment was ever extended to political opponents since the beginning of the Government than by the President in convening Congress in extraordinary session. For he not only called the Congress to-gether to enact legislation to which a majority of his own party was opposed, but he gave a solemn pledge to refrain from exercising his constitutional right to prorogue the Congress until the Democratic House had completed its appointed task of attempting to remove from the people the grievous burdens laid upon them by Republican Congresses.

"CONFIDENCE SPEEDILY JUSTIFIED.

"Upon the convening of the Congress the House was organized with a rapidity and smoothness that amazed and disconcerted our Republican opponents. The confidence of the President in the capacity of the Democratic Party to act in a patriotic manner was speedily justified. Although but two of the Democratic Members had served in the House when the party had previously been in power, public business was transacted in such a manner as to command the admiration of the people regardless of their party affiliations.

Instead of a disgruntled, disorganized, quarreling, and inefficient mob, the country witnessed the welcome spectacle of a united, harmonious, efficient, and thoroughly organized political party, whose individual members freely subordinated their personal preferences for the accomplishment of results beneficial to the great majority of the people.

"RECORD FOR CONSERVATIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE STATESMANSHIP UNRIVALED.

"Under the wise leadership of Speaker Clark and of Representative Underwood, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Democratic House during the first session of this Congress made an unrivaled record for conservative and constructive statesmanship which awakened anew Democratic hopes and merited universal respect and admiration.

"At the outset important changes were effected in the procedure of the House. The Speaker was stripped of much power, the possession and improper exercise of which had been the cause of very considerable complaint.

"DEMOCRATIC REFORMS FRUSTRATED BY REPUBLICAN SENATE.

"The consideration of public business then proceeded upon a comprehensive and a patriotic basis. Our party was pledged to the election of the United States Senators by direct vote of the people. This reform was declared to be "the gateway to other national reforms." The Democratic House promptly proposed an amendment to the Constitution to effect this reform. That the amendment has not been submitted to the States for ratification is due to the action of the Republican Senate in so amending the resolution as to insure its defeat. Three times during my service in the House has such an amendment been sent to the Senate. Until a Democratic House adopted the proposed amendment, backed by a widespread and insistent public demand, the Senate had ignored such resolutions. Failure to submit the amendment to the States for ratification will be due to the opposition of a Republican Senate, which has frequently demonstrated its ability to frustrate the expressed will of the people just as effectively by the indirect as by the bolder and perhaps more hazardous direct method.

"DEMOCRATS PREVENT IMPROPER USE OF MONEY IN ELECTIONS.

"The Democratic platform of 1908 demanded legislation to terminate forever "the partnership existing between the corporations of the country and the Republican Party under the expressed or implied agreement that in return for the contribution of great sums of money to purchase elections they should be allowed to continue substantially unmolested in their efforts to encroach upon the rights of the people."

"Convinced that the abuses resulting from such a system constituted the greatest existing menace to the Republic, and that "the rule of the people," about which so much has been said recently by some who had been the beneficiaries of the practice condemned in the Democratic platform, was prevented by the alliance thus denounced, the Democratic House, as one of its first legislative acts, passed a bill requiring publicity of The more effectively to accomplish campaign contributions. this end the bill provided for publicity before as well as after the election. In the last Republican national convention a resolution pledging the Republican Party to such legislation was overwhelmingly defeated. An awakened public conscience compelled the reluctant Republican Senate to accept this Democratic measure, and it is now the law of the land. It will prevent the improper use of money in national elections. Had the Democracy not obtained control of the House, the law would not have been enacted, as such a bill was defeated in the Sixty-first Congress by the Republicans then in control.

"REPUBLICANS REPUDIATE THEIR PROMISES.

"The last national campaign was determined largely on the Both parties appreciated the importance of the question, and both candidates for the Presidency were pledged to convene Congress in extraordinary session immediately upon taking office to revise the existing tariff law.

"The Democratic Party was clear and explicit in its pledges. Its platform declared for the 'immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties.' No one has ever been able to determine exactly the meaning of the Republican platform.

During the campaign President Taft frequently stated that many of the duties in the then existing Dingley law were excessive, and the country justly assumed from his campaign utterances that, however vague the Republican platform, the candidate of that party earnestly favored substantial reduction in the import duties. Yet he signed the Payne-Aldrich bill and aroused the just resentment of an already outraged people by declaring in his Winona speech that it was the best tariff law ever enacted.

"No more scathing denunciation of any legislation was ever uttered than the condemnation of this law by the late Senator Dolliver, of Iowa. He was a staunch Republican and an ardent protectionist. He had served eleven years in the House before his election to the Senate. As a member of the Commit-tee on Ways and Means in the House he had aided in the preparation of the Dingley Act. He had approved and defended it with all the vigor of his wonderful eloquence and commanding personality. Yet he revolted at the atrocious features of the Payne-Aldrich law. On June 10, 1910, he characterized this act in most forcible terms. As a revision of the tariff downward he ranked it as a hoax with the discovery of the North Pole by Dr. Cook.

"We were unable to vote for the conference report-

"He said-

"because, in our opinion, it had failed to fulfill the promises which the party had made to the public. We had no promise outstanding " " to reduce schedules here and there. That was not our promise. " " Our promise was to revise the tariff with reference to a set standard of justice and fairness by which our laws should give the advantage to our own people of that difference in the cost of production which is known to exist between this market place and the market place of other countries. That was our promise. How did we fulfill it? It was laughed at as ridiculous.

"COUNTRY DEPUDDIATES THE PERIPLICAN PARTY."

"COUNTRY REPUDIATES THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

"But the country did not laugh. The promise and its breach were taken by the people seriously, and the Republican Party was overwhelmed in the campaign and the Payne-Aldrich law emphatically repudiated.

The Democratic House proposed the so-called farmers' freelist bill. It was designed to accomplish two purposes-to take from the protected list the implements of trade used by the farmers in producing crops and to reduce the cost of living to the American people by putting foodstuffs upon the free list. If enacted into law there would have been admitted free of duty agricultural implements, cotton bagging and ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles, the price of all of which has been placed at unjustifiably high levels to the discomfort and disadvantage of the American people.

"FARMERS' FREE-LIST BILL DESIGNED TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING.

"To illustrate the abuses sought to be eliminated by that bill and the relief that the people would have obtained it will suffice to refer briefly to the situation relative to sewing ma-chines. They are articles of necessity in every American house-

"In 1905 the value of sewing machines for household use manufactured in this country was in excess of $14,000,000. Last year the exportations of such machines were valued at $9,000,000, while those imported aggregated only $52,000. The duty on sewing machines is 20 per cent ad valorem. They sell here at from $20 upward, and are purchased as necessaries by those who earn their bread in the sweat of their face. It was authoritatively stated during the debate on the free-list bill that identical machines were laid down in the Orient, wholesale, including freight, for $8.25. In whose interest is so prohibitive a duty retained?

"The Republican platform declared for such duties as 'will equal the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.' That is the excuse for maintaining prohibitive duties whereby under the guise of reasonable profits to an American industry unconscionable profits are extorted from the American What are the reasonable profits which the President persists must be protected?

"Moody's Manual for 1909, the well-known and standard publication concerning corporations, contains information on this question at once illuminating, astounding, and almost incredible. It appears that the Singer Manufacturing Co. was organized originally in 1864 with a capital stock of $500,000. The present company was organized in 1873 for the purpose of manufacturing sewing machines. It has plants in New Jersey, in Scotland, in Canada, and various other places. In 1906 it absorbed the Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co., and now handles 80 per cent of the world's output of sewing machines, and it owns its own iron mines and timberlands. The capital stock of the present company was originally $1,000,000. In 1887 it was increased to $10,000,000, and in December, 1900, by a stock dividend of 200 per cent, to $30,000,000. In 11 years it has declared a stock dividend of 200 per cent and cash dividends of 268 per cent.

"COST OF NECESSARIES WOULD HAVE BEEN REDUCED.

"It was to take the unholy clutch of this trust from the purse of the starving seamstress and of the toiling pieceworker, and from the earnings of every reputable household, where the busy housewife is compelled to purchase a machine on the installment plan, that the free-list bill was proposed. But this was not the only trust that would have had its strangle hold shaken off the American people. The Beef Trust, the Harvester Trust, the Bagging Trust, and other equally indefensible aggregations of capital would have been arrested in their exploitation of the American people, and the price of many of the necessaries of life would again have been brought within the reach of all without imperiling a single dollar legitimately invested in honest industry.

"As an essential part of the plan to obey the people's mandate, bills to revise the woolen and the cotton schedules quickly followed.

"INDEFENSIBLE WOOLEN SCHEDULE REVISED.

"The President had declared the woolen schedule to be indefensible. It had remained practically unchanged in Republican tariff laws since 1866. A combination of western wool growers and eastern woolen manufacturers had a controlling grip upon the Republican Party. They acquiesced in the revision of the tariff in the Sixty-first Congress upon condition that the wool schedule should not be changed. Under existing law the average duties on manufactures of wool average over 92 per cent ad valorem. The cheaper and more common the use of the articles, the higher the duty. The Democrats proposed to reduce the duties to an average of 42 per cent. Such reduction would not have injured any legitimate industry, although law-protected profits would have disappeared and immeasurable benefit resulted to the consuming public.

"RATES OF THE COTTON SCHEDULE SUBSTANTIALLY REDUCED.

"An infinite variety of articles of clothing, blankets, carpets, and other necessaries are taxed under this and the cotton schedules, and the resulting burdens have been the most onerous ever imposed upon the American people.

"These bills were sent to the Senate. The controlling majority of that body are Republicans and advocates of the protective system. Under such conditions neither party could obtain legislation in complete harmony with its principles, and thus com-promises were imperative. The free-list bill was sent to the promises were imperative. The free-list bill was sent to the President but slightly modified from the form in which it passed the House. Adjustment of the differences on the wool bill resulted in average duties on manufactures of 48 per cent. The cotton bill made substantial reductions from the existing law, and, in addition, there were added provisions reducing the rates of the chemical schedule 25 per cent and eliminating some of the most ingenious and indefensible jokers in the metal schedule and reducing the duties therein generally.

" VETOED BY REPUBLICAN PRESIDENT.

"With such adjustments the bills went to the President for approval. Happy day! On December 3, 1910, he had said to the Chicago Association of Trade: 'We are bound to promote elimination of instances of injustice in the tariff laws.' Bills to eliminate gross injustices, to remove intolerable burdens were before him. They were not partisan; they had been sup-ported in the House by more than 20 Republicans, and had been approved in the Senate with the aid of Republican votes. The deliverance of the American people from the grasp of greed and monopoly appeared to be at hand. Indecent protection had received a staggering blow in the Senate, the stronghold in which privilege was most strongly intrenched. But there still remained the citadel apparently occupied by a champion of the people. Until that moment the alliance between politics and privilege was believed to be most repulsive to the President. Only his signature was needed to vitalize the legislation and to dispel the gloom which so completely enveloped the country.

"TRUST MAGNATES PLEASED BY VETOES.

"He must have forgotten his warning that if the House were Democratic 'the people would have an opportunity to see which is the party of arduous deeds done and which the party of words and irresponsible action.' The Democrats had acted; the President had talked. The House had stricken the shackles of the trusts from the people; the President put the shackles Had he approved these bills his memory would have been cherished in every hamlet. The smoke from the newly kindled fire in millions of homes would have been an incense expressive persons in the land would have uttered fervent prayers of thanksgiving sweeter and more beautiful than the noisy plaudits of thoughtless partisans. Never again in this land of plenty would there have been the necessity to form nonment-eating clubs to check the rapacity of the Beef Trust. But the President failed the people in the hour of need. He vetoed the bills: and when the news was flashed to the public, his expressive smile was but the flickering shadow of the expansive grin of contentment that was prevalent wherever the trust magnates and the beneficiaries of law-protected profits gathered to commend his action.

"The effect of the vetoes was far-reaching. The country had demanded modifications in the tariff. To the most casual observer it was apparent that inexcusable preferences were accorded to favored individuals, while for large numbers of the people the inalienable right to life and the pursuit of happiness had degenerated into a desperate struggle for bare existence. "THE LAWRENCE STRIKE A CONDEMNATION OF THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

"What was of common knowledge at the time of the vetoes has since been sharply emphasized by conditions in the city of Lawrence. Located there are extensive woolen and cotton mills. The industries are highly protected. Duties in excess of 90 per cent are asserted by Republicans to be imperative to insure reasonable profits to the manufacturers and to protect the American workingmen against foreign pauper labor. manufacturers have all accumulated comfortable, in many instances incredible, fortunes. What is the condition of employees? It is a pitiable tale; it is a sweeping condemnation of the structure upon which the protective system is built. Out of every 100 deaths in this country 27 are of children under 5 years of age; but in Lawrence, and in other communities where highly protected industries largely predominate, the deaths of children under 5 years of age are 47, 48, and even as high as 50 in every 100.

"Different estimates have been made as to the compensation of toilers in these mills. W. J. Lauck, formerly in charge of the industrial investigations of the United States Immigration Commission, has recently stated that-"The average annual earnings of the male heads of families in the woolen and worsted industries in Lawrence are only $400, and of all males upward of 18 years, $346.

"A distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, Representative Townsend, of New Jersey, peculiarly well fitted for such work, has just made a careful personal investigation of the situation in Lawrence. As nearly as it was possible for him to ascertain the average actual earnings of males is about $5.30 a week. While the Lawrence strike was at its height a trained nurse was sent from this city to aid in arranging for the comfort of children in distress. Out of 119 children placed in her charge only 4 had any underwear, and only 20 had over-coats. All of them were employed in the mills, and many of them in those mills in which woolen underwear was made. Yet their earnings and condition were such that they were unable to obtain underclothing to shield their frail bodies from the bitter blasts of the New England cold.

"DEMOCRACY DETERMINED TO ELIMINATE APPALLING ABUSES.

"Such conditions the Democratic Party desired to correct. In so doing they reflected the will of the American people. So far as the appalling abuses are due to the excessive tariffs the Democratic Party has determined to eliminate them. primary object of our solicitude is the great mass of the people—the consumers of the land. Whatever relief is essential can easily be extended without affecting any legitimate in-dustry, although industries existing and fattening upon tariff privilege may well be alarmed for their security.

"In his veto messages the President considered only the interests of those engaged in the protected industries. chief concern was whether anyone who had been enjoying illicit profits through aid of the law should be separated from The manufacturer and his profits were uppermost in the President's mind; the welfare of all of the people was the anxiety of the Democratic House. His veto messages are inconsistent; they are irreconcilable. He disapproved bills which were compromises between a Republican Senate and a Democratic House, and which were supported in the House by many Republicans.

"FAILURE TO OBTAIN RELIEF ATTRIBUTABLE TO THE PRESIDENT.

"His action was based on lack of information to determine whether sufficient protection from his standpoint was retained for those long the beneficiaries of Republican tariffs. The biils affected only a few of the schedules. Yet he had approved the Payne-Aldrich bill which changed all but the woolen schedule with much less information than he had when he rejected the of the gratitude of a liberated and happy people. The lowliest | bills which the Democrats originated. From one standpoint his action is intelligible. The President realized that any revision of the tariff by a Republican Congress would not seriously interfere with the plunder of the tariff barons; and he also knew that their interests would be subordinated to the people's rights in bills originating in a Democratic House.

"TARIFF BOARD USED TO OBSTRUCT REMEDIAL MEASURES.

"Failure to obtain relief is due to the President. He hid behind a Tariff Board; he pleaded that it should report before action was taken. Some abuses could be cured without such delay and expense. At Winona he said it would take the remaining years of his present administration to make the necessary investigations, and during that time the differences in the Republican Party could be healed. The board apparently has acted upon that assumption. It has proved an obstruction, a hindrance, an obstacle to remedial measures. The Democratic Party will gladly appropriate every dollar required to obtain information needed intelligently to revise the tariff, but it will not consent to the continuance of a board which is used to prevent legislation urgently demanded.

That relief is imperative is a matter of common knowledge. An investigation just completed by the United States Commissioner of Labor covering prices of more than 250 articles of food discloses that in 1911 the cost of foodstuffs increased 2 per cent over the prices of the previous year. There has been no reduction in the cost of living; there will be none until the return of the Democratic Party to power.

"DEMOCRATIC PARTY CONTINUES ITS EFFORTS TO REMEDY EVILS.

"Undismayed by the President's vetoes, confident that their bills were justified, and that they met with universal commendation, the Democratic Party has continued during the present session of Congress its efforts to take the weight of tariff-made prices from the people's back.

"It has passed bills to revise the metal schedule, the chemical schedule, the wool schedule, to place sugar on the free list, "SUGAR SHOULD BE ON THE FREE LIST.

"In 1909 there were consumed in this country 3,628,300 tons and to impose an excise tax upon certain incomes.

of sugar; $35,800 tons were raised here from sugar cane and sugar beets, and 2,887,100 tons were imported from other countries. The increased cost to the consumer as a result of the present tariff is 11 cents a pound. Based upon a consumption in 1911, 7,356,600,000 pounds in the United States, the tax Of this, extracted from the people amounted to $115,000,000. however, but $55,000,000 were collected by the United States; the other $60,000,000 represented tariff profits to the trust and other refiners. In the investigations recently conducted by Congress it was decisively established that the price of refined sugar to the American people is affected to the full extent of the duty. Sugar is a prime necessary of life. If the cost of living is to be reduced, sugar should be admitted free. It may be that a Republican Senate will not enact this bill, and the President in his solicitude for the profits of the trust, will not approve such a measure. If the interests of the people were by the great apostle of protection, the late President McKinley. To justify such legislation at this time some means of obtaining the revenue lost by its enactment is necessary. To maintain the Government during the present fiscal year the Republicans appropriated the enormous sum of $1,026,287,505.81. These expenditures must be met from moneys raised by taxation. From no other source other than the people can the Government obtain money. Last year the receipts of the Government were, from customs, $314,497,071; from internal revenue, including the corporation tax, $322,529,200; from miscellaneous sources, $58,614,466; from sale of public lands, $5,731,636; and put first, however, every Republican would support such a bill, because twenty years ago it was advocated by such ardent pro-tectionists as Representatives PAYNE and DALZELL as well as from the postal service, which was expended in that service, $237,879,823.

"All of this revenue is needed to meet the expenditures heretofore authorized.

"To supplement the revenue to be obtained through the Payne-Aldrich law, provisions were inserted therein imposing an excise tax upon the incomes of corporations in excess of $5,000. That tax has been sustained by the Supreme Court.

"AN INCOME TAN WOULD SHIFT BURDEN FROM CONSUMPTION TO WEALTH.

"The Democratic Party has long favored an income tax. It believes that under our existing system of taxation unequal burdens rest upon those least able to pay. The theory of all Republican tariff legislation has been to impose the burdens on consumption largely to the exclusion of wealth. The Demo-cratic Party, so far as it can equitably be done, would shift the burden from consumption to wealth. The result would be the fairest and the most equitable system that could be devised. In 1894 the Democrats, in enacting the Wilson law, included provisions for an equitable income tax. The Supreme Court, overturning the decisions of a century, decided by a vote of five to four that it was contrary to the Constitution.

The present House passed a bill which is in conformity with the most recent decisions. It practically extends to individuals and to copartnerships the law sustained by the court as applicable to corporations. Unfortunately it does not include the incomes of many of the idle rich, which should be comprised in a completely rounded system of taxation. At present such sources of revenue can not be reached, but they will be whenever the constitutional amendment now pending is ratified by a sufficient number of the States. It was a Democratic legislature in this State that ratified the amendment, and it lacks the approval of but six more States to be effective.

When the amendment was pending before our legislature it was denounced by Gov. Hughes because it was so framed as to permit the Federal Government to tax incomes derived from State governments and their subdivisions as compensation for official services. The pending bill has been most vigorously criticized by Republicans because it exempts such incomes from taxation. Any attempt to make the wealth of the land bear its legitimate share of governmental burdens will find the Republican Party ready and resourceful in strenuous opposition.

"REPUBLICAN PARTY LAVISH IN EXPENDING THE PUBLIC TREASURE.

"If tariff taxes are to be reduced, it is essential to curtail the expenditures of the Government. During the past sixteen years the Republican Party has been most lavish in expending the people's treasure. Many thoughtful students of govern-mental affairs have been inclined to believe that certain farseeing Republicans deliberately encouraged liberal expenditures to make more difficult substantial reductions in tariff

"As stated heretofore, the authorized expenditures for the current year are $1,026,287,505.81. Twenty years ago the people revolted at a 'billion-dollar Congress.' Now a 'billion dollars' are expended every year instead of every two years. Prior to 1900 the expenditures for the Government reached the thousand million dollar mark but once in our history. In 1865, when the country was in the throes of a bitter, bloody, and expensive civil war, the expenditures aggregated the enormous sum of $1,394,655,448, but of this sum $1,030,690,400 were for the support of the Army.
"The expenditures during the four fiscal years ending in 1869, immediately following the Civil War, were 50 per cent less than during the four years of the war, while the second four-year period after the war saw a reduction of $404,000,000, or about 25 per cent less than in the four years ending in 1869.

In the four years ending in 1905 the total expenditures were $235,000,000 in excess of the preceding four years, during which the cost of the War with Spain had to be met.

"DEMOCRATIC PARTY IS PLEDGED TO AN ECONOMICAL ADMINISTRATION.

"There has been no stop in the riot of expenditures. So long as it continues the heavy burden must fall upon the peo-The Democratic Party is pledged to an economical administration and to retrench public expenditures.

"It proposes, so far as it has the power, to cut out all useless services and unnecessary expenditures in the Government, so that the people may be relieved from excessive and oppressive taxes. We believe that results, not promises, are the criterions by which the people shall judge. We challenge a comparison of our accomplishments with those of our opponents. When this Congress was organized the Democrats set a Spartan example by reorganizing the service of the House of Representatives so as to make an annual saving of $258,940.

"POSTAL SERVICE DEMORALIZED THROUGH USE AS POLITICAL MACHINE.

"In a special message to Congress on Thursday, April 4, 1912, the President states that if the postmasters in first and second class post offices 'were embraced in the classified service and required to devote all their time to the public service the annual savings would eventually represent many millions of dollars." These postmasters are the appointees of the President; they are under the control of the Executive branch of the Government; they are subject to the rules and discipline of the Post Office Department. It is the duty of the Postmaster General to require from them the services for which they are paid. If they do not devote all their time to the public service, let the President command them to do so, and to refrain from the arduous work of endeavoring to conduct the chaotic affairs of the Republican Party. The demoralization of the postal service is easy to understand. It could hardly be otherwise since the establishment of the custom in recent years of putting it in charge of the head of the Republican national machine.

"IN STRIKING CONTRAST WITH DEMOCRATIC IDEAS.

"This message confirms the knowledge that there is much for our party to do. The work has just begun. It will be continued during the present session. Our policy is predicated upon the homely notions of a former and a distinguished citizen of this State, who towers among our Presidents as a giant, the late Grover Cleveland.

"In his first inaugural address he said:

"It his first maugural address he said:

"It is the duty of those serving the people in public place to closely limit public expenditures to the actual needs of the Government economically administered, because this bounds the right of government to exact tribute from the earnings of labor or the property of the citizen and because public extravagance begets extravagance among the people. We should never be ashamed of the simplicity and prudential economies which are best suited to the operation of a republican form of government and most compatible with the mission of the American people.

"In striking contrast with these exalted ideas of a great Democratic President is the attitude of the present adminis-

"A different conception of the simplicity compatible with the mission of the American people is being encouraged. President and the Secretaries of State and of the Treasury, imbued with the later-day views, have all approved plans for a new building to be erected in Washington for the Department of State, which make provision for an audience chamber, a dining room, a kitchen, and regal suites to permit of the entertainment of distinguished foreigners without danger of their contamination from association with ordinary American citizens in the hotels of Washington.

"BENEFICIARIES OF UNEQUAL PRIVILEGES ARRAYED AGAINST US.

"No easy task confronts the Democracy. Arrayed against us are all the legions that have so long enjoyed unequal privileges and unfair opportunities under Republican legislation. They have awakened to the meaning of the Democratic program; they realize that it means the end of the system so profitable to them. Sinister movements already can be discerned to thwart our efforts. Every obstacle that human ingenuity can devise will be placed in our path. Trifles are being magnified, bugaboos are being invented, fears are being aroused, attempts are being made to stir up strife within our ranks in order to distract the people from the significance of the action of the Democratic House of Representatives. Heretofore our opponents have sneeringly demanded to be shown our achievements during the period in which they were in complete control of governmental affairs. Our pledge was given that if afforded an opportunity faith would be kept with the people. We have had the opportunity; we have kept the faith. The promises made to the people have been rigorously fulfilled. We revised the tariff downward; we provided for direct election of United States Senators by the people; we legislated to strike corruption from our political system; we admitted Arizona and New Mexico to statehood; we have met labor's demand for a humanitarian and just eight-hour day; we have retrenched public expenditures; we have striven to reduce the cost of living; we have conducted the business of the House with dignity, with dispatch, and with due regard to the rights of the entire membership; and to stop unjust discriminations against American Jews we forced the passage of a resolution to abrogate the Russian treaty.

"OUR RECORD IS UNEQUALED AND OUR PRINCIPLES SHOULD PREVAIL.

"Such is our record. No political party has ever equaled our record in this Congress. It is open for inspection. invite criticism; we challenge comparison. It is an earnest of the high purpose of the Democracy to serve unselfishly the Many great problems of momentous importance await consideration and solution. They can not be settled in stump speeches or between naps on a train. They require thoughtful, earnest, labored study and patient consideration. We ask to be judged by what we have already done. It is the measure of our capacity, of our intelligence, and of our patriotism."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOB].

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

[Mr. REILLY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on this subject, for it is one in which the whole country is interested. As a comparison between what Canada is doing for the benefit of her Provinces and the United States for Alaska, I want to say that the Parliament at Ottawa, Canada, this year has appropriated $39,000,000 for railroads.

[Mr. Levy asked for and obtained unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may be allowed to extend their remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all those who have spoken on the bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. On the subject matter of the bill? The CHAIRMAN. On the subject matter of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13987) to create a legislature in the Territory of Alaska, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

House of Representatives, April 17, 1912.

Mr. Speaker: I resign as a member of the Committee on Accounts. S. A. RODDENBERY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Indian Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. 2931) for the relief of registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5355. An act to acquire a site and for the erection thereon of a public building at Beaver Dam, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 5333. An act to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2270. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Richfield, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:
H. R. 20117. An act to authorize the Nebraska-Iowa Interstate Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bellevue, Nebr.; and

H. R. 19638. An act to authorize the San Antonio, Rockport & Mexican Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Morris and Cummings Channel.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5059. An act granting school lands to Louisiana; and

S. 244. An act extending the operation of the act of June 22, 1910, to coal lands in Alabama.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 18, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting estimate of appropriation made necessary by the present floods in the Mississippi River (H. Doc. No. 704); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of State submitting estimate of appropriation required to pay expenses of printing certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice President of the United States as transmitted by the executive of each State to the Secretary of State (H. Doc. No. 703); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting estimate of appropriation for constructing and equipping a dry house for small-arms powder at Picatinny Arsenal to replace one destroyed by fire on April 6, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 702); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Arcadia Harbor, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 701); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

R. 20738) for the transfer of the socalled Olmstead lands, in the State of North Carolina, from the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of Agriculture, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 564), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri, from the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23349) providing for publicity of contributions and expenditures for the purpose of influencing or securing the nomination of candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 565), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House as follows:

Mr. CANTRILL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 183) for the relief of G. A. Embry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 500), which said bill and report were referred to the Private

Mr. HEALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4050) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 561), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 837) to reimburse the officers and crew of the lighthouse tender Manzanita for personal-property losses sustained by them on the foundering of that tender October 6, 1905, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 562), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13580) for the relief of Alexander Read; Committee on Indian Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 3104) for the relief of A. H. Raynolds; Committee on Indian Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 20868) for the relief of August Schultz; Committee on Indian Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 20455) for the relief of Elsie J. Angier and others; Committee on Indian Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 573) for the relief of the estate of Israel Folsom; Committee on Indian Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4580) to permit second homestead entries in certain cases, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 633) thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8784) to supplement the act of June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 634) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5776) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to adjust and settle the claims of the attorney of record involving certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 635) thereon.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I should like to ask some member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections whether there is any prospect in the near future of having a report submitted to the Senate in the Lorimer case. The time is going rapidly; it is an important matter, with a vast volume of testimony, and I will ask the chairman if there is any definite information which can be given to the Senate as to when we may expect a report.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am unable to state precisely when the report will be presented. I devoted a vast amount of work to the condensation of the evidence in an effort to bring it together in the form of a report. I made a rough draft, but have not been able to submit it to the other members of the committee, owing to the fact that most of them, at one time or another, had been called from the city on public business, two of them going to the funeral in Tennessee and others being absent for other purposes. I have worked for a long time, 16 hours a day for the last two months, and the report will be presented just as soon as it can possibly be put in shape and agreed upon by the committee. We are making as much progress as we can. tell the Senator that there is no desire on the part of the committee to delay the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator understands that I do not mean to impute that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I know the Senator is not imputing that. As I said, I have worked as much as 16 hours a day for the last two months. I have done the best I could, and I am doing the best I can. I want to make a report.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator is not able to state when the report will be made?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am not able to say when the report can be made.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not understand that the Committee on Privileges and Elections have charge of it, but it is a special committee of that committee, and it should be so stated in the RECORD.

MEAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, under date of the 12th instant the President sent a special message to Congress asking for a million dollars to be appropriated to enable the Department of Agriculture to inspect microscopically the flesh of hogs converted into meat-food products. The message was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which at the present time is considering the general agricultural appropriation bill. I therefore ask that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the message and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5428) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 631) thereon.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill. Mr. HEYBURN. It is being read only for information? The VICE PRESIDENT. It is being read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are there amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are several amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that they may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the proposed amendments.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 3, after the word "That," insert the words "section 1 of."

Mr. HEYBURN. I was only asking that it be read for information. I do not want any action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; the Chair so understands. The remaining amendment will be read.

The Secretary. On pages 2, 3, and 4 strike out sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state in a few words the purpose of the bill.

The act of February 19, 1909, known as the enlarged-homestead act, includes certain States. At the time the act was passed by Congress North Dakota was not included in the States over which the bill would take effect. At that time there were a good many lands in North Dakota which were very valuable. Since then the valuable lands have been taken up.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] introduced a bill simply providing for an amendment to the act including the State of North Dakota. That is all the bill does. It includes North Dakota in the enlarged-homestead act. The report fully shows what the bill does. That is the object of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say what I have to say after it is taken up.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 3, after the word "That," insert the words "section 1 of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 8, strike out the remainder of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the bill having just been reported, of course one can not conveniently know the effect of striking out certain portions of it. No one can carry in his mind a bill that has been read of which we have no copies available. I shall, in a word, suggest my objection to this class legislation. The bill should have gone upon the calendar, and it should have been open to consideration as other bills are. There is no sleep being lost by anyone over the enactment of this legislation.

I, unfortunately, on a former occasion was unable to be present when the principle involved in this measure was passed upon by the Senate. Of course unanimous consent has been given to the consideration of the bill, and I do not desire to do more than to express in a few words my objection to the prin-

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Senator from Utah anything that he would like to ask?

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say that I reported the bill and, of course, it would have gone to the calendar, but the Senator from North Dakota asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It affects only North Dakota. The bill as introduced repeated the whole act of February 19, 1909, and the committee struck out all of the sections but section 1, and it on includes North Dakota among the other States.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, you strike out the existing law?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will raise no objection to the measure, as the Senator from North Dakota desires to have it applied only to his State, but I will take this occasion to express in a few words my objection to this kind of legislation.

We are complaining one day—and I say "we"; I mean those who undertake to speak for the people of the United States generally, those in official position—that we have not sufficient land for those who desire to settle upon it and the next day we are complaining that we have too much, and we are undertaking to enlarge the areas of land open to settlement. This bill will diminish the public lands open to settlement more than one-In other words, if we had land enough for a million people under the law as it existed we would have instead land enough for half a million people. I merely desire to call attention to it because I would not like anyone to think in the future that this question received no consideration in the Senate of the United States.

There is a certain ambition on the part of men in or out of this body to secure, or seem to secure, some special concession The State of Idaho was left out of the profor their States. visions of the bill, I think with the concurrence of both Senators from that State, because we did not think we had too much land. We thought we would rather have two settlers on a tract of land than one. Acting upon that we were not included within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Which bill? Mr. HEYBURN. This bill. Idaho is not included in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Idaho is included in the enlarged-homestead

Mr. HEYBURN. No; not to the extent proposed by this amendment. If the Secretary will read the list of States involved he will find that Idaho is not included.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, there can be no question about it, because thousands of acres have been taken up under the enlarged-homestead law in Idaho,

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that proposition perfectly, but that is not in this measure.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know what is in this measure, but I know that we are within the operation of the enlarged home-

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; against my protest, but I was unfortunately absent—that is, from my standpoint I was unfortunately absent-when certain steps were taken. This is just creeping forward a little more every time it comes up until by and by a man will have 640 acres subject to the will of some clerk of a department. It is a high-sounding phrase to say with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior. It looks as though we were going to have some tribunal especially selected because of its fitness to pass upon it. They seldom know that such an application is made,

I had occasion yesterday to run up against a practical test A certain application had been made to one of the Secretaries of the President. I supposed that it had reached him some weeks ago. I had acted on the assumption that it had reached him. I had called up the office by telephone, and supposed I was talking to the responsible head. Yesterday I ran it down, and I found the clerk who received it had simply occupied the relation of the Secretary, and it had never come to the Secretary's notice at all. That was only yesterday.

I am beginning to be somewhat alert in regard to these matters. We say subject to the consent of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior, subject to such rules and regulations as may be made by this Secretary or that. The regulations and the rules are made by clerks in the department. and an endeavor is made, and I charge it on the fact, to prevent the party making the application from knowing that it was never brought to the notice of the Secretary.

I have just taken this occasion to express these few words in order that the inquiring minds of Senators may be alert to the situation

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] that when the enlargedhomestead bill passed the Senate North Dakota was included. I was then a Member of the House and a member of the Public Lands Committee. It was at my request that North Dakota was excluded from the law at that time.

As the Scuator from Utah has stated, there was much valuable land in the State of North Dakota. Now all that land has land in the State of North Dakota. Now all that land has been taken up, and there is only rough land left that is worth a great deal less, and where people must have at least half a section to make a farm. So at this time we ask that the settlers be given 320 acres.

The bill does not change the law; it simply gives to North Dakota the same right that has been extended to other States-allowing the settlers to take 320 acres.

It is true that it does not include the Senator's State. But there has been given to that State, under a special law-Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. Mr. HEYBURN. I have already made it plain that I am not objecting to the extension of the law to the State of North Dakota. I was only taking occasion to express a few remarks applicable to the whole bad system.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to know that the Senator is not objecting to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when the enlarged-homestead act was passed—I think in 1909—It included my State in the first instance, both in the bill in the House and I think also in the Senate. I did not wish the name of North Dakota to go in the list of States included in that act. The reason for that was apparent. We were then taking up lands right along and granting 160 acres to each settler. The lands which were to be taken up were of the same character as those that had already been taken up, and there was no line of demarcation whatever between homesteads that would be only 100 acres and those that would be 320 acres. That was the reason for not including it at that time.

I agree with my colleague that if we have practically disposed of all the lands of that character that could be taken, and properly taken, as homesteads in North Dakota, and have only those left which we generally denominate the bad lands, we might as well apply this provision to the bad lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. But I know of no line, and I do not know where the law is going to place it. I do not know whether we have taken up all of the other lands or not. There should be some report to indicate that the land now to be taken up is of that character and that 320 acres of this land are as necessary as 160 acres of the other land.

Mr GRONNA. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER I yield to my colleague, because undoubtedly he has the information and can explain the matter. Possibly it is in the report accompanying the bill, but I have not read the report.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have looked into this matter quite thoroughly. The most valuable lands in our State have been taken, and the lands now remaining are rough.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask my colleague, Is he certain that the man who is taking up his homestead of 160 acres to-day will be satisfied when to-morrow another man takes up 320 acres of land that looks at least to be similar? In order to do justice, will we not have to pass another law to allow the man who took up his 160 acres to take up an additional 160 acres, so that he may be in comparatively the same position?

Mr. GRONNA. No. Mr. President, the 160 acres formerly taken is worth more than 320 acres that can be had under this proposed act.

Mr. McCUMBER. That, of course, depends on what extent the word "formerly" is applied. I assume the 160 acres of land that was taken up yesterday differs materially from that which will be taken to-morrow under a filing of 160 acres. Of course some of the land which was taken 10 years ago is worth from $40 to $50 an acre, and some of that which was taken 25 years ago is now worth $75 an acre.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish simply to explain to the Senator that no land in North Dakota can be taken up under the enlargedhomestead law unless it has been designated by the Secretary of the Interior, so that all of the balance of the lands in North

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the information that I wanted to get-whether that is clearly protected, so that all will be treated alike.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; and no entryman in North Dakota, after the bill passes, can take more than 160 acres until the Secretary of the Interior makes an investigation and designates that land, so that it can be taken up under the enlarged-homestend law; or, in other words, if the conditions are such in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior that the land can not be cultivated as the land formerly taken has been cultivated, then he designates how it can be taken up under the enlargedhomestead act.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can see, Mr. President, a good reason, taking the Bad Lands as I know them, why in many instances double the acreage might be allowed, because in taking double the acreage the claimant would not receive a greater amount of land that he could cultivate and use than under the old law. I agree with the Senator entirely, if the bill is so restricted and so guarded that one man will not get 160 acres of a given character of land for a homestead and his neighbor get 320 acres.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, there is such a provision, and it is in the original law. This bill does not change the original law; it simply applies the law to North Dakota the same as it has been applied to other States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead,' approved February 19, 1909."

MINNESOTA & MANITORA RAILROAD CO.

Mr. JONES. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5548) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain tract of land to the Minnesota & Manitoba Railway Co., to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 632) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committe on Public The bill had been reported from the Committe on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, before the word "Company," to strike out "Railway" and insert "Railroad"; in line 10, after the word "station," to insert "and grounds"; in line 11, before the word "hundred" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "five" and insert "fifteen"; and at the end of line 13, after the word "Interior," to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words "the price to be paid by said railroad company to be not less than the sum that may have been heretofore agreed upon between the entryman and said railroad company," so as to make the section read:

make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, upon such terms as he may deem advisable, to convey to the Minnesota & Mantoba Raliroad Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, a tract of land adjacent to the right of way of said railroad, in the southwest quarter of section 35, township 161, rauge 32 west of the fifth meridian, as a site for a station and grounds; said tract to be not more than 200 feet wide and 1,500 feet long, the location and size of said tract to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, the price to be paid by said railroad company to be not less than the sum that may have been heretofore agreed upon between the entryman and said railroad company.

The amendment was agreed to.

the entryman to his homestead the fact that he may have made a contract to sell a portion of the same to said company as a site for a station and grounds shall not be construed against his right to the lands covered by his entry, as such tract appears to be the only available site for a railway station, which said railroad company has been directed to establish by the State Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota," so as to make the section read:

the section read:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall set aside the sum received for said tract of land and hold the same to be paid to Herbert Sanborn, provided his homestead application for said southwest quarter of section 35, township 161, range 32, is proved, and in determining the right of the entryman to his homestead the fact that he may have made a contract to sell a portion of the same to said company as a site for a station and ground shall not be construed against his right to the lands covered by his entry, as such tract appears to be the only available site for a railway station, which said railroad company has been directed to establish by the State Railroad and Warchouse Commission of Minnesota. Should said homestead application be finally disallowed, then said sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The avandance of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether that last provision, which protects the homesteader or the man holding an inchoate title against the charge that he is not entitled to a patent because he has allenated a part of his land, goes further than on this right of way?

Mr. CLAPP. Just on this right of way, and it is because of the fact that inadvertently he made this agreement that his homestead entry has been held up.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is all I wish to know.

Mr. CLAPP. I think it is very just that that should not be counted against .him.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain tract of land to the Minnesota & Manitoba Railroad Co."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (S. 6407) granting an increase of pension to Edwin J. Trowbridge (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROOT: A bill (S. 6408) for the relief of Margaret McQuade (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims. By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 6409) granting a pension to John Mooney (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions. By Mr. DAVIS:

A bill (S. 6410) granting an increase of pension to George W. Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:
A bill (S. 6411) for the relief of certain Shawnee and Dela-vare Indians; to the Committee on Claims. By Mr. DU PONT:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which, on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment requiring immigrants coming into the United States from any foreign country to embark upon vessels of American registry, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigra-tion of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the establishment on the coast of the Pacific States a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine fishery interests of that region, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRIGGS submitted an amendment relative to a survey The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 6, after the word "proved," to insert "and in determining the right of proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $29,000 for improving the Kansas River up to Argentine. Kans., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 21477), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CATRON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 86), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved. That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at the rate of $1,440 per annum for the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

SPRING ROAD NW., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5333) to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes, and I will make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, when it shall have been returned to the Senate. I want to say that in my absence the bill was passed on Tuesday last, and the committee had arranged for a hearing on the bill. It is for that reason I ask for its return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion to request the House of Representatives to return-the bill is agreed The Senator from New Hampshire enters a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present a statement from the Cunard Steamship Co. calling attention to certain administrative features of the pending immigration bill. I move that the statement be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The motion was agreed to.

PANAMA CANAL TRAFFIC AND TOLLS (S. DOC. NO. 575).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the paper which I send to the desk be printed as a public document, and that 5,000 extra copies thereof may be printed. The document consists of four chapters of the report of the special commissioner appointed by the President to investigate the subject of tolls for vessels passing through the Panama Canal. It is of great interest to the public generally, and there will be a great demand for it. There is one other chapter which I will add later and which has not yet come up from the office.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator request that 5,000 additional copies be printed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. For the use of the Senate or for the use of the committee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, I do not care which. I would just as lief have it printed for the use of the entire Senate. I am sure that as soon as it is known that the document is published every commercial body and every railroad and steamship line in the country will desire copies of it. I am perfectly willing to have it go to the document room and be equally divided between all Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be better to have it go to the document room for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the document will be printed as requested, and 5,000 additional copies will be printed for the use of the Senate document room. The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 5,000 additional copies of the preliminary statement of Emory R. Johnson on Panama Canal Traffic and Tolls, with illustrations.

OWNERSHIP OF STEAMSHIPS PASSING THROUGH PANAMA CANAL,

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present a set of resolutions adopted by the directors of the port of Boston in relation to the question of the ownership by railroads of steamships passing through the Panama Canal. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a meeting of the directors of the port of Boston, April 11, 1912, the following statement was adopted as the opinion of the directors of the port of Boston concerning a proposed amendment to section 5 of the interstate-commerce act, contained in section 11 of the Panama Canal bill No. 21969, and it was voted that a copy of this vote be sent to each member of the Massachusetts delegation in Congress.

The Panama Canal bill reported to the House of Representatives, Congress of the United States, as house bill No. 21969, contains in section 11 an amendment to section 5 of the interstate-commerce act, as Congress of the United States, as house but to the interstate-commerce act, as follows:

"From and after the 1st day of July, 1913, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

This is followed by a provision in substance that any railway controlling a water carrier engaged in foreign trade and having through rates and facilities with it, shall, upon request, provide like port facilities, connections, and joint through rates for and in connection with any water carrier engaged in the lake, river, or coastwise trade of the United States, including trade through the Panama Canal.

The enactment of such legislation would be detrimental to the port of Boston and to the transportation of both passengers and commodities of the Commonwealth. It is certainly unwise as an inclident to the regulation of traffic through the Panama Canal to enact a drastic change affecting transportation facilities and methods whose development in New England covers nearly a century where the connection of steamship lines and their control by railroads is as old as the construction of the railroads themselves. This bill commands the disruption of serviceable and efficiently operated transportation systems involving, if the compilance of law is to be more than in form, the sale of valuable properties, probably in many cases at a loss, many of which can not be operated independently with the same degree of efficiency as at the present time.

Such legislation threatens to place American railways interests under a severe handicap in competition with Canadian railways. It has been the distinct policy of the Canadian Government to encourage and assist its railways in the development of steamship facilities. A provision having this in view is incorporated in the contract of July 29, 1903, between the Dominion Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co.

At the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce it was testified that "the entire transportation of Canada with England and Japan is in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. T with England and Japan is in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. They are one of the largest ship-owning companies on the continent of North America, and they are closely followed by the Grand Trunk."

Considering the vast extent of the financial assistance given by the Canadian Government to its railroads and the distinct tendency of its policy regarding steamship connections up to this time, there is no indication that the early future will see any change of policy in this regard. The result of the proposed restriction of American railways therefore may be a severe discrimination against them.

It is not suggested that our Government should in any way change its policy in the direction of restricting our railways in the ownership or control of vessels engaged in the foreign carrying trade, whether through the Panama Canal or not. That such ownership or control especially on the Facific Ocean, has been much to the benefit of our foreign commerce is not denied.

It is obvicus that in many cases the enterprise of a railway company in establishing foreign steamship lines might depend, to a great extent, upon its opportunities for operating domestic steamship lines in connection with them. The use of common wharf facilities, the stopping at domestic ports of foreign-bound vessels, and other factors might have an important bearing; yet it is proposed in this legislation to deny to our railroad companies the privilege of operating such lines—a restriction which may operate, as indicated, in very undestrable ways as respects our foreign commerce.

The argument which has apparently brought about this amendment to the interstate-commerce law is the fear that railroad owned or operated vessels will be in a position to control coast traffic through the Panama Canal. These arguments allege that railway companies would be in a position to, by drastic reductions in rates, drive independent competitive lines out of business, and also wherever railroad companies over the canal or the strain of the case of competing ra lation is not necessary, and that any difficulties can be met when they arise."

In imposing the restriction in question upon railroads in respect to "any common carrier by water with which said railroad " " does or may compete for traffic," the proposed law is vague and indefinite. It does not state what circumstances constitute competition. It makes no distinction between a case such as that of the Long Island Sound lines, operating between the same points as the controlling railroad, and steamship lines which might possibly be considered competitive in a sense, because forming a small connecting link in a long through route of which the controlling railroad is also a part. The result of this vagueness might be to forbid the establishment of a steamship line which in the promotion of foreign or domestic trade would be of great public benefit. The proposed new steamship line of the Grand Trunk from Providence to New York is a case in point.

In attempting to discourage monopoly of domestic traffic by placing this restriction upon the railroads, the law could easily have the effect of fostering and promoting steamship monopoly, since it would be forbidden for a railroad to establish a steamship line in competition with existing independent lines; also the law certainly would not restrict and might promote industrial monopoly through the control by large corporations of steamship lines.

The Standard Oil Co. operates a large fleet of American and foreign vessels. The Steel Corporation has a large fleet on the Great Lakes,

The proposed legislation wholly overlooks many important public advantages resulting from the control and operation of coastwise steamship lines by strong rallical companies. As was, by implication, admitted by Mr. Wheeler, such Bres provide in many cases excellent passenger facilities and in convenient connection with trains, the two services perhaps actually connecting on the wharf. They facilitate rall-way operations by taking, to a considerable extent, the heavy froight, have a considerable extent, the heavy froight, and have a considerable extent, the heavy froight, and Navigation Co., controlled by the New York, New Haren & Hartford, can deliver freight directly to the lower part of New York City, while the rallway lines must leave their freight at points far up town, and the strong them to the majority report of the committee. While the relations are necessarily close and friendly, the rates and service on the steamship line are made to the majority report of the committee. While the relations are necessarily close and friendly, the rates and service on the steamship line are involving, on necessity, some actual competition between rail and boat.

The policy embodied in this legislation must have a strong fendency to stuffly enterprise, to stand in the way of large and important out of the strong the strong the agreement of the enterprise of the strong the agreement of the enterprise of the agreement of the enterprise of the strong the str

It may be freely conceded that all actions of a railroad tending to deny to independent companies proper and fair facilities for their service and equal treatment in switching charges and similar matters should be vigorously opposed by the proper public authorities.

SUMMARY.

The directors of the port of Boston regard section 11 of the Panama Canal bill (H. R. 21969), which forbids railroads from being interested in water lines, wherever located, which compete or may compete, as detrimental to the port of Boston and the State of Massachusetts. The bill would disrupt valuable transportation routes of many years standing, such as the Long Island Sound lines, which have no reference to the Panama Canal.

It would place American railways under a severe handicap compared with Canadian railways, which are encouraged to go into the steamship business.

It might promote rather than prevent monopoly of steamship service. It overlooks the important public advantage resulting from control of coastwise lines by strong railroad companies in protecting rates through offering differential routes.

RULES OF DEBATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair begs the attention of the Senate for one moment to call to their attention the concluding clause of section 2 of Rule VII, which reads:

It shall be not in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a com-mittee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

The Chair recognizes the fact that quite often it does not seem gracious on the part of the Chair to enforce that rule, and it would relieve the Chair if Senators would bear this rule in mind and not put the Chair in a position where to obey the mandate of the Senate he must appear in the position, perhaps, of one who desires to dictate to the Senate what course they should follow; but the Chair on yesterday knowingly, and thinking at the moment what he was doing, did violate the rule in recognizing the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to present a resolution, interrupting the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] so to do, and the Chair thought, having purposely—if he may use that word—violated the rule yesterday, that he should call the matter to the attention of the Senate, acknowledge his fault, explain the reason for his action, and ask the Senate to help in maintaining strictly the rules of the Senate.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present con-Mr. OWEN. I ask thanhous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6339) to adjust titles within the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether the bill has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. OWEN. It has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and upon a letter of recommendation from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the report a unanimous one? Mr. OWEN. The report is unanimous.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

whole, proceeded to consider the onl, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to validate by approval any instrument purporting to be a deed of conveyance or contract for title of allotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes made prior to the removal of restrictions and before January 1, 1912, in the following cases, to wit:

First. When the purchase or contract was made in good faith, and no fraud was practiced, and the Indian allottee was actually paid the reasonable value of the land.

Second. When the purchase or contract was made in good faith and no fraud was practiced, but when the consideration paid was not sufficient to over the reasonable value of the land conveyed: Provided That in this class of cases the settlement can only be made upon the condition that the Secretary of the Interior be paid for the benefit of the allottee a sum sufficient to make up the reasonable value of such lands: Provided further, That the settlement in either case shall be made upon such settlement such terms of settlement as the Secretary may deem just, proper, and equitable, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and upon such settlement suit, if any, instituted at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be dismissed without cost to the defendant.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to permit the sale or exchange of the restricted land of any Indian of any tribe in Oklahoma and invest all or part of the proceeds of any sale which has been or may be made for the benefit of said Indian and his heirs or legal representatives, the property so secured to be held for the use and benefit of such Indian, subject to the same conditions, limitations, and restrictions as imposed by law upon the original lands soid or exchanged by such Indian, subject to the same conditions, limitations, and res heirs, or legal representatives whenever it shall be shown that he or they should receive the same.

SEC. 4. That from and after the approval of this act any person, firm, or corporation procuring, accepting, or placing of record any deed, mortgage, contract to sell, power of attorney, lease, or other instrument or method of encumbering real estate relating to land allotted to members of the Five Civilized Tribes, made prior to the removal or expiration of restrictions therefrom, or if not approved as provided in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than 60 days nor more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before the bill is taken up, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma if I am correct in my deduction that section 2 of the bill substantially removes all restrictions which Congress has heretofore placed upon the alienation of Indian lands, subject to the will of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. OWEN. It does not. It merely permits the Secretary to invest the proceeds of sale of land in other land better situated. The act of May 27, 1908, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to remove restrictions upon any lands in the Five Civilized Tribes. That is the present law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then how does this bill change the present law?

Mr. OWEN. The bill changes the present law in this, that the act of May 27, 1908, forbade the Secretary of the Interior to approve any contract made prior to that act, although the previous agreement—as the Creek agreement, for instance—permitted such contracts to be made subject to the approval of the Secretary. The purpose of this bill is to enable the Secretary to bring to a conclusion, by administrative and executive adjustment, the innumerable suits which have been brought in the Five Civilized Tribes, of which there are about 26,000 still pending, and which can not, in the nature of the case, be economically, quickly, or conveniently adjusted by judicial and equitable procedure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Would not that purpose be accomplished without the insertion of section 2 in the bill?

Mr. OWEN. Section 2 of the bill is intended to cover this point: Selling restricted lands in the drainage districts, where it is proposed to dispose of restricted lands, and authorizing the Secretary to invest the proceeds in other lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Would not section 2 enable all the lands of all the Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes to be placed, by the consent of the Secretary, in the market for sale, and thus eliminate entirely the Indians as landholders? I notice the section says he may sell or exchange certain lands.

Mr. OWEN. Permit the sale.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But it does not say that the proceeds of the sale of those lands shall be invested in other lands. The assumption of the second section is that the proceeds shall be invested in other lands, but the wording of this section does not require it. So that the full-blood Indian lands could be disposed of under section 2 and no other lands be substituted in place thereof. But the proceeds of the sale of those lands could be invested in such a way as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit.

Mr. OWEN. Under existing law, the act of May 27, 1908 the Secretary has the right to allow the alienation of any of these lands, including those belonging to full bloods, but the practice has been that he has only permitted parts of it to be sold where the proceeds might be judiciously invested in the improvement of the remainder; but under existing law he can not invest the proceeds in other land. Section 2 of this bill enables him to do this.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My impression has been that the purpose of all our legislation along this line has been to fix for a certain period of years the title in the full-blood Indians. It

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator from Wyoming will excuse me for a moment, I suggest that the Senator from Wyoming is probably thinking of what is known as the McCumber amendment of April, 1906, which provided that lands of the full bloods should be inalienable until 1931; but the act of two years later, known as the removal-of-restrictions act, approved May 27, 1908, provided they might be sold with the approval of the Secretary, and he has 16 district agents acting in an advisory capacity in that country so he may protect the interest of the restricted Indians

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if this question has been before the courts of the country?

Mr. OWEN. It has been before the courts for four years, and there are 26,000 of these cases pending, the first demurrers only having been decided after four years.

Mr. GALLINGER. And a decision has been rendered?

Mr. OWEN. In part, in a few cases brought upon demurrer.

Mr. GALLINGER. As this matter has been before the courts and appears to have been in part adjudicated, I must object to the present consideration of the bill, as I want to look into it.

Mr. OWEN. There has been no final adjudication. The first demurrers only have been passed upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the bill is all right, but I want time to look into the matter. Therefore I wish it to go over for

Mr. OWEN. The letter of the Secretary fully explains the matter, and will be found in the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, on the calendar. Of course, if there is any objection I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read the Secretary's letter and also the report of the committee.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The Secretary. Beginning on page 7, line 11, of the last print, it is proposed to strike out beginning with the word "all" down to the word "excluded," on page 8, line 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment striking out the illiteracy clause. I believe the time has come when it will be for the benefit of the people of the United States, including all the millions of immigrants who have come into this country in recent years, to put into our immigration law a clause which will require the immigrants who are admitted here to pass the test of ability to read and write.

I intend to say but a very few words on the subject. not in favor of this proposition for the reason that it will tend to exclude criminals and anarchists. I do not suppose it is intended for that purpose at all, and the fact that it will not accomplish that purpose is no argument against the test. not in favor of the test of illiteracy because I think there are not many good people who would become useful citizens and who can not read and write at this time. It may well be that such a test will exclude a good many people whom we should be glad to have here. But, Mr. President, the question is not whether this test will still leave it possible for some people to come in who ought to come in, or whether it will keep out certain people whom it would be well to keep out, but whether such a test will be beneficial to the people of the United States.

It seems clear to me that it will be beneficial as a whole. think there is a general and well-founded feeling that we have been taking in immigrants from the Old World in recent years rather more rapidly than we have been assimilating them. They have been coming in rather more rapidly than they have been acquiring American habits of thought and the American spirit of government, and it could not well be otherwise in view of the fact that of the 9,555,000 immigrants who have come into this country during the 12 years following the War with Spain, 2,238,801 over 14 years of age were unable to read and write, with the result that we have many great communities composed of people gathered together unable to speak the English language, unable to read the newspapers or the magazines or the books, through the agency of which a knowledge of what is going on in the world and a knowledge of the principles of our Government may be communicated to our people.

These communities of foreigners, speaking a foreign tongue, with foreign habits and thoughts, cut off by inability to read from the great body of the people of America, cut off from our ideas, from our thoughts, our sentiments, our feelings, our purposes by their own ignorance, are encisted in the body politic of America and the body social of America and are not a part, in fact, of the organized community which we call the United

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Swanson in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly. Mr. GRONNA. Would the Senator from New York exclude immigrants unable to read in English no matter how well they might be educated in some other language?

Mr. ROOT. No; I would not, because if they can read and write the demands for information will be responded to by the journals of their own tongue.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The bill does not exclude them.

Mr. ROOT. The bill does not exclude them. The bill draws the line very clearly. It is inability to receive ideas through the written or printed word in any language.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me further, he lays stress upon the fact that these immigrants are unable to read the magazines. I wish to suggest that there are a great many published in languages other than the English language.

Mr. ROOT. There are also many magazines published which it is just as well they should not read. But I think it is desirable that they should be able to read in some language.

Mr. President, the general consideration which I have mentioned is still further emphasized when we consider the character of the present-day immigration. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] in his most interesting and instructive speech yesterday presented the distinction which the commission had recognized between what they call the old immigrathe new immigration, the old immigration having come chiefly from northwestern Europe and the new immigration coming chiefly from southeastern Europe.

I do not wish to be understood as saying a word that in any degree implies an assertion of our superiority to the peoples of southeastern Europe or which in any degree reflects upon the high character of those peoples, but, sir, we can not fail to perceive, if we read history and if we acquaint ourselves with contemporaneous events, that the people of that part of Europe are much further removed from sympathy with our modes of government, are much less trained in the kind of self-government which is necessary to us than the people who came from northwestern Europe. They are more unlike us, not only in language but in habit and in their acquired capacity for selfgovernment. So they need to a much greater degree than the people of the old immigration to be able to read and write, to be able to come into touch with the public sentiment and to a knowledge of the public purpose of our country.

The specific reason why I think this educational qualification will, as a whole, be a great advantage is that it will especially affect a very large immigration from southeastern Europe, which has in recent years furnished this unassimilated element, this element which it is difficult for us to assimilate, and which when it gets here is cut off from the general sentiment and opinion of the country.

Look at the figures of illiteracy among the people who have been coming here of late from southeastern Europe. Of the Poles, 861,303 have come in since the War with Spain, and of them 35.4 per cent could not read and write. Of the Slovaks, 342,583, and of them 24 per cent could not read and write. Of the Croatians and Slovenians, 320,977 have come in, and of them 36.1 per cent could not read and write.

Mr. STONE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but what was the number he just named?

Mr. ROOT. Three hundred and twenty thousand nine hundred and seventy-seven.

Mr. STONE. At what time?
Mr. ROOT. That is since the War with Spain.
Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.
Mr. SHIVELY. How was that percentage ascertained? Has there been such a test and such an examination as to make these statistics authentic?

Mr. ROOT. It is the report of the Immigration Commission, and is to be found on page 99 of the first volume.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator has examined the report. Is there an examination made on the entrance of these people?

Mr. ROOT. There is an examination made upon their entrance into this country, and among the facts that are recorded is the fact whether the immigrant can read and write or can not.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is that done under a requirement of existing law, does the Senator know?

I do not know whether it is or not. and the Immigration Commission makes this report in Table 11, Number and per cent of immigrants admitted to the United States who were 14 years of age and over and who could neither read nor write, during the fiscal years 1891 to 1910, inclusive, by races or people, compiled from reports of the United States Commissioner General of Immigration."

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. STONE addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield, and to whom?

Mr. ROOT. I yield first to the Senator from Mississippi, and then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is that fact determined by a practical test, or simply by asking the immigrants the question?

Mr. ROOT. I do not know, Mr. President.

Mr. ROOT. I do not know, Mr. President.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Vermont know?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am unable to state definitely, but I think it is the result of inquiry.

WILLIAMS. If it is determined simply by asking the question, a great many people who can not read and write would say that they can.

Mr. ROOT. Yes. The effect of that, of course, would be that if there was any error it would be in the way of an un-derstatement of the number of illiterates, for no one who can read and write is going to claim that he can not. Does the Senator from Missouri wish to interrogate me?

Mr. STONE. I understood that the period covered by this table is from 1899 to 1910, inclusive. That is 12 years. The Senator states that the immigration from certain countries during that period was so much in the total, and then that there was a certain per cent of illiteracy. Take the last case the Senator referred to, about which I made an inquiry. What was the total immigration during that period of 12 years?

Mr. ROOT. I think the last was the Croatians and Slovenians

Mr. STONE. I think so. Mr. ROOT. The number was 320.977. Mr. STONE. What was the per cent of illiteracy?

Mr. ROOT. 36.1 per cent.

The Portuguese sent 38,122, and of them 68,2 per cent were illiterate. They should not properly, of course, be counted as having come from southeastern Europe. Twelve thousand six hundred and seventy Turks came in, and of them 59.5 per cent were Illiterate; 47,834 Syrians, and of them 53.3 per cent were illiterate. The Bulgarians, Servians, and Montenegrins sent in 95,596, and 41.7 per cent were illiterate. Of the south Italians there came in 1,690,376, and of them 53.9 per cent were illiterate. So, with them no ray of public opinion could pierce the darkness which makes possible the Black Hand and the blackmail and the number of assassinations for gain which has proved so serious a problem for the peace officers of our country to deal with. Fifty-three and nine-tenths per cent out of 1,690,000 were unable to read and write in any language, inaccessible to those ideas which are essential to the maintenance of our peace and order and the perpetuity of our institutions.

Now, Mr. President, it is manifest that the imposition of the literacy test will bar practically one-half of this class of immigration. It will bar that part which by and large is the least intelligent, the least capable of being manufactured into good American citizens, and the most dangerous as a new and unassimilated element in our body politic. That consideration, it seems to me, should be controlling in favor of the inclusion of this literacy test.

Mr. President, there are two special considerations that I wish to lay before the Senate in its dealing with the question whether it is desirable for us to impose this limit. One is that the coming of great numbers of these people who are wholly illiterate and who have to take, of course, the lowest rate of wages, whose minds are not open to the ordinary opportunities for bettering their condition, does tend to break down the American standard of wages, and to compel American workmen, whether they be born here or be a part of the 9,000,000 who have come in since the War with Spain, to compete with a standard of wages and a standard of living that they ought not to be required to compete with

Now, that is the reason why within a comparatively recent time the workingmen of the country who formerly were moved by sympathy with the friends they had left behind them on the other side of the ocean have now come to feel that it is essential that something be done, so that this bringing in and planting on our soil the pauper labor of Europe may be checked, and why they are asking for this legislation.

I do not see, sir, how any one upon either side of this Chamber can square his conduct with his professions of a desire to promote the welfare, to improve the conditions, to contribute to the happiness of men who work with their hands in this country and refuse to check this influx of ignorant labor to compete with our workingmen and reduce them to a standard of living below that which they have at present.

Mr. President, I do not blame a business man who has work of construction, or mining, or manufacturing on hand for trying to get ample labor, and to get it at as low wages as he can consistently with common humanity and fairness. I do not mean to say that a man who has a coal mine should not be regarded as at liberty to employ labor and to desire that there should be plentiful labor for him to employ. But I do say, sir, that the interests of owners of mines and manufactories and contracting organizations should yield to the interests of the people as a whole, and the interests of the people as a whole must prevent the further dilution of our labor by this muddy stream.

There is one other consideration which seems to me of very serious importance. We do not have to wait now, sir, for men to be naturalized and accorded the suffrage before they can exercise a potent influence upon the most vital concerns of the whole people. It is only a few weeks since we have seen Great Britain face to face with a paralysis of industry, with imminent danger of famine, with a condition which had thrown out of employment more than 2,000,000 of the working people who themselves were not on strike, but who were thrown out of employment because the coal supply to keep going the industries in which they worked had failed. That situation was brought which they worked had failed. That about by a vote of the miners of coal.

But a few years ago, sir, we ourselves were confronted with a situation-not so widespread and not so imminent in its danger, but serious enough-when the coal miners of Pennsylvania stopped absolutely the supply of anthracite coal for the country. That stoppage of that great supply necessary to the comfort, necessary to keep going the furnace fire and the kitchen fire, to keep going the manufactories which employed labor, to keep going the wages of labor, was brought about by a vote of the miners in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, I do not in the remotest degree touch upon the question of right or wrong, wisdom or unwisdom, expediency or inexpediency of such a vote. At times it may be justified: at times it may not. It even may be a close and doubtful ques-tion as to whether the men who mine the coal or the men who work in any other of the great basic industries upon which our great structure of production and commerce is built up should vote to stop.

Surely, sir, it is of vital importance to the people of the United States that the men who are to consider that question, the men who are to vote whether they will go on to furnish or will cease to furnish the supplies necessary to the continuance of our industries at large, to the continuance of the supply of the necessities and comforts of life-surely it is of vital importance to us that the men who are to cast that vote shall be men instructed, men who are able to read, men who are able to get into touch with the sentiments of American life, with the principles of American institutions. Yet we find by the report of the Immigration Commission that it is into those basic industries upon which all our industries depend that these new arrivals from southeastern Europe go. They go to the point where ignorant, uninstructed action may do the greatest damage, to the point where instructed and wise action is of the greatest consequence. Here is what the commission says:

A large proportion of the southern and eastern European immigration of the past 25 years has entered the manufacturing and mining industries of the Eastern and Middle Western States, mostly in the capacity of unskilled laborers. There is no basic industry in which they are not largely represented and in many cases they compose more than 50 per cent of the total number of persons employed in such industries.

And to-morrow, sir, the question whether the workers in our mills shall continue to have employment, the question whether our furnace fires shall continue alive, whether the ordinary necessities of life shall be cut off, is liable to be determined by the vote of the miners, more than 50 per cent of whom, according to this report, may be unable to read and write.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand, Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROOT. Yes. Mr. STONE. Do I understand the Senator from New York in that remark to assert it to be a fact that 50 per cent of the miners are illiterate?

Mr. ROOT. No, Mr. President; I make no such assertion.

Mr. STONE. The Senator's remark seems to leave that Mr. ROOT. I have read the statement from the report of the commission. The commission says:

There is no basic industry in which they are not largely represented-That is, these unskilled laborers from southeastern Europein which they are not largely represented, and in many cases they compose more than 50 per cent of the total number of persons employed in such industries.

I do not think it is a fact that a majority of the miners in any part of the country are illiterate, but I say that, unless we put some check on this immigration, we are feeding into the body of men who are engaged in these basic industries-the continuance of which is necessary for all other industries-a continual stream of men whose minds are closed to the principles and the sentiments of our American institutions and our American civilization. I think that this consideration is powerful in its persuasion toward the adoption of such a test as it is now proposed to strike out from the bill.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, after the illuminating speech on and the forceful presentation of the question by the Senator from New York [Mr. Roor], I have no hope of adding anything of interest to the discussion; but I do desire to briefly submit the reasons which influence me in supporting the bill as framed and opposing the committee amendment which seeks to strike from that bill the literacy test.

For a period of years preceding 1907 the tide of immigration into this country had grown steadily with every year, until in that year more than a million and a quarter of immigrants came to our shores. All over the country, from ocean to ocean, our people had become apprehensive over this growing flood of immigration. They wondered what it meant to the wages of the American workingman, what it meant to the perpetuity of American institutions; yet whenever there was an attempt to restrict this immigration by national legislation that attempt was met by the claim of the great employers of labor that they needed this unrestricted flood of immigration to draw on for labor to properly conduct their business and that any curtailment of it meant a check in the prosperity of our people.

There were no sufficient accurate data upon which the question could be intelligently discussed and legislated in reference to, although a bill containing the literacy test has passed one or the other Houses of Congress nine times. Such a bill passed both Houses in 1897 and was vetoed by President Cleveland. In 1907 a bill containing substantially this provision passed the Senate of the United States; but when it reached the other House, either for the purpose of retarding legislation restricting immigration or for the purpose of securing information so that such legislation could be more intelligently considered, the other House substituted for the literacy test a provision creating the Immigration Commission. The bill creating the commission provided that the commission should investigate the immigration question and report its conclusions and its recommendations as to legislation on the subject.

A word about the composition of that commission. It was composed of nine members, three Senators named by the President of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives named by the Speaker of the House, and three persons, not Members of Congress, selected by the President of the United States because of their familiarity with the immigration question.

This commission represented every shade of opinion upon the question of immigration. Some of its members favored no restriction in immigration; some of them favored no immigration. Under the power conferred upon them they first investigated conditions in those countries from which the heaviest immigration was coming. They investigated the economic conditions of the laborers there, what wages they received, what drove them to our shores, what kind of citizens they made in those countries, and what kind of citizens it might be expected they would make when they came to our country. Returning to this country, the commission followed these aliens into the various pursuits in which they had embarked. To show the nature and the scope of this investigation, the commission considered more than 3,000,000 individual cases, following them into the occupations in which that number of aliens were then engaged.

The result of their work is comprised in 42 volumes, containing much valuable information to the student of this subject. The commission ascertained two pregnant facts in connection with this question: One, that in the past 25 years there has been a total change in the character of the immigration coming to our country. Prior to 1882, 95 per cent of the immigration came from northern Europe-the British Isles, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, and Scandinavia. These immigrants were home seekers and were readily assimilated by our people. They desired to become citizens, and they helped in the development of that great northwestern empire of ours; but within the past 15 years more than 80 per cent of the immigration comes from southern and southeastern Europe, and those immigrants are not as a rule home seekers; they are not readily assimilated by our people; they do not desire to become American citizens; but each year they either ship or they carry back to the shores from which they came millions of dollars of American money.

The commission found, too, that there was a greater supply of unskilled labor than the business of our country demanded, and that this surplus supply of unskilled labor was used by the great employers of labor as a weapon with which they forced down the wages of American workingmen below a fair wage, according to our standard, and below a fair share of the profits of the business in which those men were employed.

The commission, as the result of their investigation, unanimously recommended that there should be legislation substantially restricting immigration; and, with the exception of one member, Mr. Bennet, of New York, they unanimously recomthis subject by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dilingham] | mended among the various methods of restricting immigration the adoption of the literacy test. To strike this test from the bill rejects the conclusion reached by that commission; it emasculates the bill and leaves it nothing but a codification of existing immigration laws; it bitterly disappoints the American people, whose sole interest in the immigration legislation is that there shall be some substantial reduction in the flood of immigration.

The reason given by the committee for striking out that section of the bill is that the retention of it might jeopardize the passage of the bill. I do not believe that to be the case. think that is the most important part of the bill, and should be retained in it.

There is one other consideration that influences me to reach this conclusion. There has never been a time in the history of our country when restriction in immigration would work as little injury to the business interests of our country as to-day. There are no great enterprises being rapidly pushed to completion requiring as an indispensable adjunct to their development an unlimited supply of cheap labor. There has never been a time in the history of our country when its political welfare has imperatively demanded a substantial reduction in immigra-

We are living in a shifting era. The burden of government, according to the tendency of political thought, is being placed more directly upon the shoulders of the people; and whether one reloices in that or whether one deplores it is absolutely immaterial; the fact remains.

It is likewise, Mr. President, immaterial whether we belong to that school of cheerful political optimists who believe that by the direct primary, the initiative, the referendum, and the recall a change is going to be wrought in the character of our people, a change more wondrous than a sea change and more miraculous than the alchemist's dream of converting common dross into pure gold, the change of the derelict citizen into the sage statesman, the change that will make the citizen, who to-day through indifference or ignorance fails to discharge the burdens of citizenship, discharge with intelligence and with zeal those added burdens which will be imposed upon him, or whether we belong to the school of politicians who believe that these changes unchecked portend the end of representative government, and who believe that representative government, as it has existed in the United States by virtue of what it has stood for, by virtue of what it has achieved for mankind, is deserving of commendation and perpetuation and not of repudiation and destruction-to whichever school we may belong, we all must realize that we stand on the threshold of an era in which the capacity of the American people for self-government will be tested as it has never heretofore been tested; and in meeting the great governmental questions which confront them they have a right to be protected from the injection into the body politic of millions of aliens, uneducated and incapable within any limited time of becoming intelligent American citzens. right to make this demand, and that is their demand to-day.

Every consideration, Mr. President, seems to me to make imperative a substantial reduction in immigration, and there is no question that the literacy test is the best single means of reducing immigration, reaching, as it does, that class of immigrants which is most undesirable. For these reasons I shall support the bill as submitted to the committee and shall oppose the committee amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I can not vote for the literacy test in this bill as a passport to this country. Forty or fifty years ago 90 per cent of the immigrants that came to this country came from Ireland and Germany, and scarcely one of them could have stood this test; and yet all those immigrants, or practically all of them, became industrious citizens, amassed money, yes, fortunes, through their thrift and ambi-tion, and their children to-day are among the best citizens of this country. Education to a man or a woman of evil character and disposition will make him or her most dangerous.

Mr. President, this test would have kept my mother, from whose bosom I drank the milk of justice and liberty, from this fair land. I believe that this great country, blessed of God, can digest and assimilate all of the nations of the earth. I have no fear. Let our test be clean morals, sound and clean bodies, and, with a public-school system, we can safely trust the rest to God. As Heaven is my witness, I will never vote to pass a measure that makes this ungenerous and unjust exaction on the part of a free people.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the fact that of the Irish immigrants who have come to this country since the War with Spain, 97.4 per cent were able to read and write.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is to-day, is it not? Mr. ROOT. That is what we are legislating for now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know; but I take my example, as I have said, from the immigration of 40 or 50 years ago, when, with the drastic proposition in this measure which is to-day proposed, with its exactions, the best and the grandest element that has carved out the fortunes and welfare of this fair land would have been shut out.

Mr. ROOT. Two and six-tenths per cent of all the Irish immigrants since the War with Spain have been illiterate. difference is very marked. You look at the figures as to Scandinavians. Only four-tenths of 1 per cent are illiterate; 99.6 per cent could read and write. Of the Scotch, only seven-tenths of 1 per cent were illiterate. Of the Dutch and Flemish, 4.4 per cent were illiterate, and so on; and even of the northern Italians as compared with the south Italians, only 11.5 per cent of the northern Italians were illiterate, while 53.9 of the south Italians were illiterate. The desirable citizens will come in-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from New York sits down, I call his attention to the fact that he did not read anything as to the percentage of illiteracy among the German people who come here. I have not the percentage at hand, but it has been a fact from the very beginning of the German immigration that a vast majority of them were of the class who could read and write. And that is especially true, notably of 1848, when the great German immigration occurred, when it first began in stupendous proportions. They constituted the most intelligent part of the German people, the most highly educated in political and in social science, and from them came the class of people to whom the Senator from New Jersey has referred. There has never been a time in our history when the German people did not possess a higher percentage of literacy than the American people did, taking the American people as a whole.

Mr. ROOT. I can supply the figures from this report as to the German immigration since the War with Spain. Only 5.2 per cent of the Germans who have come in during that period were illiterate and 94.8 per cent could read and write.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to delay the vote upon this bill long if the Senate is ready to vote upon it, as I take it that it is, but I desire before the bill is finally submitted to express briefly some views on the subject of immigration.

I have no prejudice against foreigners. From them we secure some of our best citizens. But there are two classes of immigrants that particularly concern me, in reference to any immigrants gration bill, and that is the immigrant who comes here without any expectation of remaining permanently and the immigrant who is unfit for citizenship when he does arrive and concludes to stay. According to the figures which we gather from the report of the commission, there are about 30 or 40 per cent of the immigrants from a certain part of Europe who come to this They do not come country and remain for a time and return. with the expectation of remaining and becoming citizens. do not become citizens. They enter for a time in competition with American labor and return to their former abode.

The amount of money sent back by the immigrants was under discussion yesterday, and as it has a bearing upon this particular proposition of the itinerant immigrant, I desire to read a paragraph or two from Dr. Jenks's book on immigration. Upon page 106 of this volume he says:

Page 100 of this volume he says:

The importance of immigrant banks as agencies in the transmission abroad of immigrant money is indicated by the fact that approximately one-half of the estimated amount of $275,000,000 sent abroad by aliens in 1907 passed through the hands of immigrant bankers. The transmission was effected by means of the "money orders" of certain large banking houses which were placed in the hands of immigrant bankers and sold by them to their customers.

The amount of money sent abroad by various correspondent banking houses of immigrant banks in the two and one-half years cading June 30, 1909, is shown by the table below. This table is a summary of carefully prepared statements furnished by four general banking houses, the financial departments of an express company and of a steamship company, and three large Italian banks, including the New York office of the Bank of Naples. These are the leading concerns through which immigrant banks transmit money abroad.

From January 1, 1909, to June 30, 1909, $30,780,645.65 was sent abroad; during the year 1907, $141,047,381.92; during the year 1908, $77,666,035.46. It is evident, of course, that wages are far better here than in the countries from whence they came or they would not come solely to get work, accumulate money, and return. If they could secure the wage there that they do here, they would not be here. But the effect of their coming, while it betters their condition, militates against the conditions of labor here.

We have, therefore, a very large class of immigrants who come to this country, not, as I say, with the expectation of becoming a part of our national life or a part of our citizenship, but who compete for a time in our labor market, send their money back to the old country, and finally return themselves. That is a kind of competition-much as we believe in competition in these days-that we should guard against so far as we can. It is having its effect in the industries of the country.

There can be little question that in a number of industries of the country foreign labor, and this class of foreign labor, is taking the place of our people, taking the place not only of those who were born here, but of those who come here with the expectation of remaining. I desire to read a single paragraph from the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor upon the condition of wages in the steel industry. This will show that not only the American born, but foreigners who come here, and whom we are glad to have come when they come to stay, are interested in this subject. All who become a part of us are interested in a good wage, for I want it understood that I regard the foreigner who comes among us to permanently remain as entitled to the same rights and protection as the home born, and I speak of them all as American citizens.

home born, and I speak of them all as American citizens.

Another striking characteristic of the labor conditions in the iron and steel industry is the large proportion of unskilled workmen in the labor force. These unskilled workmen are very largely recruited from the ranks of recent immigrants. For the industry as a whole, not far from one-half of the 91,463 employees in the productive iron and steel occupations included within this investigation were of the class of unskilled workmen. In the blast-furnace deartment, the largest single department in the industry, more than two-thirds of the 24,722 employees in productive occupations were unskilled laborers, a large proportion of whom do not yet speak or understand English; and even in the South the number of immigrants employed in the industry is rapidly increasing.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. BORAH. From the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor upon the conditions of labor in the steel in-

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Would it interrupt the Senator if I gave some figures bearing upon that point, which I had not at hand yesterday?

Mr. BORAH. I shall be glad to have the Senator insert them. Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have found since yesterday that the commission received returns from about 86,000 laborers in the iron and steel industries, and of that number 57.7 per cent were foreign born, and that the yearly earnings of those reporting averaged $346 and their weekly earnings about $4.35, which would indicate that they did not have work for much more than half the time.

Mr. BORAH. I find also from the report of the commission that about 44 per cent of the immigrants from southeastern Europe are unable to read and write.

Now, I would not, if I was drawing a measure, exclude one because he could not read or write our language, of course, but it does seem to me that there should be taken into consideration the necessity of assimilating these people to our life and our mode of living and thought, and that it ought to be required of them that they be capable of reading and writing their own language. They come presumably to take part as citizens, if they come to stay, and they ought, it seems, be prepared for the duties imposed upon them. There is practically no way by which we can communicate with them or by which they can take in our mode of life and our theory of government unless they are in some measure capable of reading and writing. If they are capable of reading and writing their own language, it will be but a short time until they are capable of understanding the questions uppermost in our civic life. There will be no difficulty in their getting in touch with our way of thinking and living.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon a suggestion? This country is full of splendidly edited papers published in every European language, and the man who can read his own language thus may keep in touch with current events and be informed about what is really going on in his adopted country. So you do not have to wait until he learns English. He can inform himself from the existing current literature published in his own tongue. There is not a single one of these tongues that has not some great journal in this country.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi, and while I did not express myself, perhaps, as clearly as I should, I had in mind the fact that if he could read and write his own language there would be a channel of communication, either through journals published in his own language or through translations, by which he would be able to keep in touch with American life.

I read a quotation from a newspaper. Of course, I do not youch for this, although I take it from other sources that it is likely of substance and well founded:

While the illiteracy test is not intended as a substitute for laws debarring alien criminals, if it had been in effect years ago one-fifth of the foreign-born criminals in our jails and prisons would not be there, for, according to the censuses of 1890 and 1900, 21 per cent of the alien criminals are illiterate.

Not all immigrants, but those who have been convicted of Mr. HEYBURN. That is a small percentage.

Mr. BORAH. I also desire to read a page from Dr. Jenks's with reference to the effect of this kind of competition upon the sanitary and safe conditions of the places where the employees of this country are employed:

upon the sanitary and safe conditions of the places where the employees of this country are employed:

Relative to the effect of recent immigration upon native American and older immigrant wage earners in the United States, it may be stated, in the first place, that the lack of industrial training and experience of the recent immigrant before coming to the United States, together with his illiteracy and inability to speak English, has had the effect of exposing the original employees to unsafe and unsanitary working conditions, or has led to the imposition of conditions of employment which the native American or older immigrant employees have considered unsatisfactory and in some cases unbearable. When the older employees have found dangerous and unhealthy conditions prevailing in the mines and manufacturing establishments and have protested, the recent immigrant employees, usually through ignorance of mining or other working methods, have manifested a willingness to accept the alleged unsatisfactory conditions. In a large number of cases the lack of training and experience of the southern and eastern European affects only his own safety. On the other hand, his ignorant acquiescence in dangerous and unsanitary working conditions may make the continuance of such conditions possible and become a menace to a part or to the whole of an operating force of an industrial establishment. In mining, the presence of an untrained employee may constitute an element of danger to the entire body of workmen. There seems to be a direct casual relation between the extensive employment of recent immigrants in American mines and the extraordinary increase within recent years in the number of mining accidents. It is an undisputed fact that the greatest number of accidents in bituminous coal mines arise from two cases: (1) The recklessness and (2) the ignorance and inexperience of employees. When the lack of training of the recent immigrant abroad is considered in connection with the fact that he becomes a workman in the mines immed

The extensive employment of recent immigrants has brought about living conditions and a standard of living with which the older employees have been unable or have found it extremely difficult to compete. This fact may be readily inferred from what has already been said relative to the methods of domestic economy of immigrant households and the cost of living of their members.

Of course, Mr. President, the immigrant must necessarily come to this country, because the conditions of his own country are not as desirable, wages are not as desirable, as they are in this country. But that does not meet the proposition of protecting the American laborer and the responsibilities which he has to perform against the competition of this itinerant element of immigration.

Mr. President, our shores have always been a refuge for the people of other countries. Those seeking to better their economic conditions and those seeking for the freedom denied them at home have found a welcome here. I do not want to change that in any sense so long as those who come come with the purpose and possessed of the capacity to make good citizens. But I am opposed to admitting to this country the immigrant who has neither the expectation of permanently remaining nor the qualifications of good citizenship should be conclude to remain. I would make the law as efficient and stringent as possible to test the intent with which the immigrant comes and his capacity for discharging the duties of citizenship after he arrives. If he comes simply to compete for a time in our labor lowering the wage and standard of living of the American workingman, and then return, I would deny him admittance; if possible. If he comes for the purpose of staying, then I would certainly require as a prerequisite manifest friendliness toward and an intelligent conception of the worth of our institutions. I am opposed to admitting to this country the itinerant immigrant who lowers our standard of citizenship and the unfriendly and incapable immigrant who is a menace to our institutions. I am in favor of closing down the gates with every possible stringency against those who have neither the loyalty nor the intellectual capacity to meet the obligations of citizenship.

If we who have faith in our form of government, who respect its traditions and are fond of the story of its birth and growth, after fair discussion and intelligent observation come to the conclusion that changed conditions require some change in the details of our Government, we will make those changes. We will make them with a profound regard and an affectionate concern for the great underlying principles upon which our Government rests. But I am not favorable to the proposition of turning loose in this country an unfriendly and ignorant class of people who compete with American labor, degrade American manhood, and conspire against American institutions. Our civilization has derived much of its vigor and its varied strength and power from the different nationalities which have fed the intellectual and moral forces of our land; but they come to stay, they come with a deep love for our institutions, they become a part of the national life, enter into its spirit and its purpose—loyal, capable, and brave. But the immigrant who lands here with a half-intelligible curse upon his lips for the Government to whose shelter he has fled should be turned back to await the regeneration of heart and mind which will bring him to a realization of the value and worth of this refuge.

The people in this county are calling for greater power in overnmental affairs, a wider range of duties, and a far more difficult class of obligations to be performed by the people. The abuse which has been made of delegated powers is bringing about a desire to resume those delegated powers with the intent upon the part of the people to exercise them more directly. The benefits to be derived from this reassumption of power will be just in proportion to the sustained interest and to the unselfish and intelligent activity of the people at large. The average of American citizenship must be kept high, for no one other than an arrant demagogue will contend that unless our general electorate is to be kept up to the highest possible average for intelligence and honesty and fidelity these extended powers will be other than fruitless even if they are not freighted with disaster and misery for the very people whom it is intended to serve. These measures of popular government will not of themselves bring either happiness or prosperity. their advocates understand this and be honest enough to admit They are only instruments of government, and these instruments in the hands of a weak, a corrupt, a dissolute, ignorant electorate would bring utter chaos and ruin. What would such instruments be worth in the hands of an electorate like that in Adams County, Ohio? What would they be worth in some of the congested centers of political degeneracy in our great cities? I use the illustration to warn the friends of these measures, in some of which I believe, that whatever merit they may have and whatever virtues may be wrapped up in them the obligation of protecting the electorate from this swarm of unfriendly, incapable immigrants who would seek our shores is second to no other obligation which we have to meet. The effort for good government and the effort for a high average electorate must go hand in hand.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BORAH, I yield. Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Idaho referred to certain citizens of the State of Ohio in the county of Adams. One would infer from his remarks that those citizens are of foreign I wish to ask the Senator if he knows whether or not those citizens are of foreign birth?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think that anyone should infer that I said or intimated that they were of foreign birth. I was speaking wholly upon the subject of keeping up the standard of American citizenship in order to meet and respond to the idea of popular government. I said that those measures would not of themselves bring any relief, but they would only do so as they were exercised by an intelligent electorate. I did not mean to have it inferred that they were foreigners. I think upon reflection the Senator will see he is in error. I judge from the manner in which they played politics that they were Americans of long standing.

Mr. President, the highest ambition of a republic is to build up citizenship, and the only guaranty of free institutions is to be found in the success of that ambition. Without sturdy, selfreliant, sober, frugal, industrious, prosperous citizens we can have some form of government, but we can not have a republic. Year after year thousands of immigrants are crowding to our The public lands which heretofore have enabled us to furnish an outlet for congested centers are fast disappearing. Private lands are passing in price beyond the reach of the man of small means. Homes are becoming more and more difficult to obtain. The wickedness and poverty, the ignorance and vice which hive and fester in the shadow of our great cities have startled our most conservative students of economic affairs. These people live in a way and in a manner at war with every demand of stable society and at enmity with every interest of the average American workingman. If our workman is compelled to compete with itinerant immigrants, will it be possible for him to escape the low level upon which that immigrant Can he educate his family and fit the members of his family for the duties and obligations of citizenship? I insist that no man can properly discharge the duties of citizenship, meet the responsibilities which rest upon our voters, if he is dragged down by daily toil and deadly competition to the level of the class of people who come here for a season and then go away or who come here mumbling a half-formed curse against every manifestation of law and order.

The most effective speech I have listened to for some time I the honor to be chairman. He was a workingman; he carried in his appearance the certifude, the dignity, the ancient honor of his calling. He was stating the effect of long hours of laborhow it discouraged men from marriage, took away the desire for a home whose comfort their hours of labor prevented them from enjoying; how the long and close application, upon release, incited men to stimulants; how when the work was over they sought either the exhilaration of drink or the rest of the bed, always indifferent to that social life and social intercourse which lift men into a higher level of morals and intellect. He then stated that a large number of men within his own knowledge had left these long hours, begun to work for the Government at eight hours, and that these men had purchased homes, were rearing families, had quit their drinking, and most of them were now taking some kind of a study or intellectual work at night school. In a simple, quiet, sincere way the story was told, and no man who heard it could doubt the sincerity of the speaker or the truth of his word. I have no patience with the laborer who seeks to array his fellow workman against law and order, who incites men to violence and crime, and I have no patience and no respect for those who connive at such things in public life. I would no more countenance it in the laboring man than in the millionaire. But neither have I any patience and very little respect for that class of men who, when you talk about helping the intellectual and moral side of the American workingman, take out their pencils and begin to figure upon what these men can live and keep alive. They curtail nothing from their profits for the sake of good citizenship. They take into consideration not at all the general interests which the Republic has in building up the character and individuality of the citizen. I do not mean to include in this class of figurers, by any means, all who employ labor, because everyone knows that the attitude of the employer toward the employee, in many instances, in this country could not be well improved. But I speak of that very large class still left in the business world who can not get the idea of the serf or the slave out of their system.

We owe it to the workingmen of this country, we owe it to the dignity and strength of American citizenship, we owe it to the good order and peace of society and to the safety and stability of the Republic itself-for its citizenship is its life-to close down the gates against those who are both unfit and unwilling to become American citizens in the full and wholesome meaning of that term. Whatever may be our obligations toward immigrants from the less prosperous countries, whatever may be our sentiments toward the oppressed, nevertheless our first duty is to keep this country and this Government a home for the honest, the industrious, the patriotic people whose only allegiance is here and who know the worth of the asylum to which they have fled. I would not discriminate against beliefs or religions. I would simply say here is a home for all who truly intend to make it a home.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this is a rather important question, and therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum, that there may be a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. SHIVELY. My colleague [Mr. Kern] is temporarily and necessarily absent from the Chamber on important public business.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Poindexter] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). heard a few weeks ago before the committee of which I have Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. STONE. I do not see the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] present. There are Senators here who would like to have the bill go over until to-morrow. The Senator in charge does not seem to be here.

Mr. SMOOT. He will be here in a moment.

Mr. LODGE entered the Chamber.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have been in a little consultation with one or two Senators on this side, and they are not quite ready to proceed today, but can proceed to-morrow and conclude the debate so far as they are concerned.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I, of course, am anxious to dispose of the bill as soon as possible, because there are other very important measures that are pressing for consideration. think there are several Senators who desire to be heard on the I have no objection to agreeing that the bill shall go over until to-morrow, if no other Senators desire to speak now, if it can be agreed by unanimous consent that we will take a vote to-morrow and dispose of the bill, but I do not want to make any agreement in regard to it otherwise.

Mr. STONE. I am personally anxious to have the matter out of the way not later than to-morrow, and so far as I am concerned I would not hesitate to agree that a vote be taken on the bill and all amendments before adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not like to agree to that, because I know that there are a number of Senators to speak upon the measure. I would join with the Senator in asking the Senator from Massachusetts to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. I think there are many who desire to speak, and I do not care to diminish the comparatively short time we have for the discussion of the measure. Even if we agree on a time to vote to-morrow I would still feel that Senators desiring to discuss the measure should be given an opportunity to do so now

Mr. STONE. Of course, if there are Senators who desire to proceed this afternoon, then we might postpone the voting; in fact, it would not be necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to postpone the voting, if we can agree to a time to vote to-morrow, if that would be any convenience to Senators, otherwise I think it would be better for us to go on with the discussion of the bill and amendments.

Mr. STONE. I withdraw the suggestion for the present.

There are some Senators who may like to go on now. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. The Secretary. Commencing on page 7, line 11, strike out commencing with the words "all male aliens" down to and including the words "unless otherwise excluded," on page 8,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read in full by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Strike out the following words, on pages 7 and 8:

All male aliens 16 years of age or over, who are physically capable of reading and writing, but who are unable to read and write in some language or dialect, such aliens to be tested in this regard in accordance with methods and rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, but an admissible alien may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, or a son not over 18 years of age, otherwise admissible, whether said father or grandfather or son are able to read and write or not. This provision, however, shall not apply to citizens of Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, the Bermudas, or Mexico, nor to alien residents of continental United States returning from foreign contiguous territory after a temporary sojourn therein, nor to aliens in continuous transit through the United States, nor to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, or Hawaii, except as hereinafter provided, nor to aliens arriving in the Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, or Hawaii, but if any such alien, not having become a citizen of the United States, shall later arrive at any port or place of the United States on the North American continent, the reading and writing requirement shall apply; unless otherwise excluded.

Mr. HEVBURN. Mr. President it is not my intention to en-

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is not my intention to enter upon any general discussion of the bill, but there have been some statements made in regard to the effect of the elimination of this provision or the reincorporation of it into the bill that seem to me to demand brief consideration.

Most of the discussion has centered about a certain class of immigrants, referring, doubtless, to the Italian race. It has been assumed that the bad element of the Italians are those who can not read and write. An investigation will disclose the fact that the contrary is true. The Italians are divided into There are what they call the free Italians, who are not under church domination, give it no recognition, care nothing for it, speak scornfully of it. Those people are the ones who are most generally educated. The people who take their instruction from a religious basis, as a rule, have a less percentage of educated people among them.

They are not so much inclined to crime as those who have a little learning. It is the little learning, just merely the ability to read anarchist papers and sentiments, that makes trouble. Those people make the trouble in Italy, and they make it here when they come to this country. It is well enough to bear these facts in mind that it is not entirely the uneducated Italians who comprise or make up the Black Hand or the undesirable element. They have an enthusiastic religion, as a rule, and it is held by them, and by those who are responsible in a large measure for them, to be a sufficient substitute for educa-

I took up this question with one of the members of the Italian Government connected with educational matters, and I talked with him for nearly a day about it. He called my attention to the fact that we were laboring under a wrong impression in this country, so far as the mainland Italian is concerned. do not refer now to those living upon the islands. He impressed upon my mind that those were a safer class of people than those who acquire just enough learning to enable them to become acquainted with anarchistic views. He said, "You can go into one of the organizations of anarchists in that country and I will undertake to say the same of your own-and you will find that they can probably all read and write; that it is the literature that they have come in contact with, and their ability to communicate with each other, that has laid the foundation and maintained this spirit of lawlessness, while the other element, resting upon a quiet religious sentiment and teaching, know less about and have less opportunity to know about the contentions out of which disturbance grows.

You will find, Mr. President, that view of it is worthy of consideration, and that it is wrong for us to conclude that an educational test applied to the Italians will eliminate the dangerous element. You will find that the officers of these secret organizations are educated men in most instances; in any event they have enough education to equip them for the management of other men, the organization of men, and the direction of men's actions. The uneducated man can not do that, or it is the rarest exception where he can do it. If you will go over into some of our States bordering upon the Hudson River you will find that the persons composing those dangerous organiza-tions against which we have been directing our energies are persons we permitted to come in here under the educational test. So it is not sufficient; it affords no guaranty to apply an educational test to those people, and we do not want to rest on fancied security of that kind.

The benefit that this country derives, if it derives any, from immigration is in the second generation, not from that which comes over. That is merely the seed that rots in the ground. The racial influence that we afterwards obtain is from the second generation trained in our public schools.

Why, there is a perfect mania, a frenzy almost, among the immigrants to get their children into the public schools. I have been watching it with some care for years. The first thing they want to do is to get their children into the schools, whether they themselves are educated or not. The public-school system has been the greatest of all attractions in the drawing of immigration to this country.

I do not believe it is good form to mention these various races of people specifically any more than is necessary for an intelligent discussion of this matter, but take the people of the Jewish race who come from Poland and Russia and that section of the world. They are perhaps as clamorous, if not more clamorous, than any other race of immigrants for the advantages of public schools for their children. I had occasion last fall to be in one of the States lying on the Great Lakes, and I found there people who had only just recently come to this country discussing and clamoring for the opportunity to have the "home language," as they called it, taught at the same time and together with the language of the American public schools. I talked with one of them about it. That demand was being made on the part of the Poles. I said, "Why are you not content to have your children go to the public schools and have them educated in the language of the country in which they are going to make their homes?" He gave me this answer: "At first blush that would seem to be reasonable, but we want our children to be thoroughly educated people, and just as you educate your children, not only in the language of your own country but in the language of others, we would like to have our children taught at the public expense in the language of their parent country and in the language of the United States." I have thought a great deal about that. It seemed to me there was some reason for it. It was a business proposition with the school committee in that place as to whether or not they would allow any part of the public-school fund to be used for the purpose of teaching those children the Polish language or the language of that particular portion of the world from which they came. To them it was a burning question; but still it all went to the question of education, to the question of the manner of education. As long as people have that in their minds, whatever idiosyncrasies may intervene, the principle is that which will ultimately bring them up upon the broader plane of an educated people.

Probably the evil against which we should most certainly strike is that of the returning immigrant. We employ no allens in our mines or in our public works in the State of Idaho, so that we are not very much bothered with this question. We were bothered with it until we legislated upon the subject.

To-day a man must be a citizen or have declared his intention to become one before he can be given employment in the mines. That has made a vast difference in the character and personnel of those who work in our section of the country. I would commend it to other States. But we did have for years what we called "the roving element." A man could come from Italy to called "the roving element." A man could come from Italy to the United States for $75. He could remain eight months, during which time he would earn $800; he could have $500 of it clear, and go back and spend the winter in Italy just as well as a millionaire, and he would have a surplus capital, because it would not cost him a hundred dollars in Italy in the environment to which he would return to remain there during the winter. In the spring he could, for another $75, come joyously back again to the United States, go to work in the mines, and repeat the operation year after year. I know personally of many who did that, and they have talked to me about it. I have discussed it with them, and they said it was the best possible life they could attain. When we enacted a law prohibiting any but citizens or those who have declared their intention to become citizens from obtaining work or employment, it made them stop and think; and they commenced to become citizens of the United States or to declare their intention to become citizens, and to pay some attention to the law of the land and become attached to it. We had for many years a mayor of our city who was an Italian, whom I have known since he was a little boy, when he came over with his father. We have a number of them who, because of the insistence of the law, were first attracted to the possibilities of citizenship. The acquiring of property, the locating of mines, the taking up of lands-all of those things became an argument in favor of citizenship.

Now, we want to deal with that question, and have to deal with it in this bill. We ought to provide that a man could not return to this country the second time who had left it under these conditions, but that he would be stopped at the landing. That is the only way to prevent the abuse. I have not thought out any plan for eliminating the first condition, his first experiment, but these people take back hundreds of millions of dollars and leave it in a foreign country. They do not bring it back

I know a man now settled in Spain who for years had a little store in our part of the country, where he made a lot of money and went back to Spain. I know another man who has remained in Italy. Take 50,000 men, each with $500—and that is a low estimate, and, of course, I take 50,000 men merely as a basis for the estimate, for it is really hundreds of thousands—and just see the amount of money that they take out of the country and do not bring back. They invest it against the time when they will be able to retire and go back to Italy and stay there, or they invest it in staking some of their people over there and making them more comfortable, but they do it at the expense of the money available for business in the United States.

Mr. President, these questions are of sufficient importance for us to consider their incorporation in some form into this measure, because the amount of money that has been taken out of this country by the various races and sent back, never to return to America, is a very large item. It is the exportation of money. They earn it; it is theirs; and we can not prevent them from sending it out of the country without doing violence to the principles of our Government; but we can prevent those same people from coming back to the same fishing grounds again; and that is what we should do.

A right comprehension of the educational test, which is the subject immediately under consideration, and a right disposition of the question of the exportation of the funds they realize from their labor, and the question of conferring the privileges of citizenship without the responsibilities of it, are the principal features, in my judgment, in this bill.

I do not feel capable at this time of doing more than suggesting these things. I shall not undertake to discuss them at such length as I would under other circumstances; but I hope that the suggestion will attract the attention of some Senator who will develop those ideas. I have given enough facts—and they can be verified—to enable those questions to be safely dealt with in this legislation.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I am opposed to the imposition of an educational test upon those born in foreign countries who desire to come to the United States. I think it would be regrettable to exclude thousands of able-bodied, honest, and industrious men otherwise desirable who might not be able to meet the requirements of this proposed qualification.

It is said in behalf of this amendment that the large number of foreign-born who pass through the ports of the United States enter into competition with American labor. That is true; it has always been true; it was as true a generation ago as it is to-day, and yet in its results the entire country has been benefited.

This proposal to exclude foreigners has no novelty. This Republic had but completed the first decade of its existence when, in the administration of John Adams, the same sentiments which I have heard expressed on this floor to-day and yesterday were uttered against the foreign born. To discourage immigration, as far back as 1798, under the influence of the Federalist Party, the period of naturalization was extended from 5 to 14 years, and during the same session of Congress and under the same influences the odious alien and sedition laws were passed, which conferred upon the then President of the United States the power to exclude at his will any foreigner found upon American territory. It is to the honor of our institutions and to the glory of the Republic that the shame and infamy of that legislation was wiped out when the Democrats of this country elected Thomas Jefferson to the Presidency.

From time to time in every succeeding generation there have been those who were opposed to the admission of the foreign born into the brotherhood of the Republic. The same arguments were used then that are used now. Within the memory of men in this Chamber it was said of the races which are now glorified and alluded to as the "old immigration" that they could not be assimilated with the American body politic. That those accusations in those days were unfounded has been demonstrated by the experience of the American people. That the aspersions now cast upon the races from southern and eastern Europe are equally unfounded will be established in time.

We are not crowded on this continent. The population of all Europe might be placed in the single State of Texas, and there would be less congestion than now prevails on the Continent of Europe. If there ever comes a time when the American people may deem it necessary to impose restrictions upon desirable immigration, the time will not come in our generation; and if a restriction should be required, if it should be deemed wise as a national policy to discourage immigration, let us proceed upon a safe and sound theory; let us make the qualification that of character and not educational attainments.

Our country is enriched every time an honest, able-bodied man enters the United States. Our institutions are threatened, our safety imperiled, when we become careless respecting those who, possessing an intellectual qualification, are devoid of that which is far more essential, a character qualification. Washington himself spoke of the need of preserving the morality of our people. With this proposed test you ignore the morality of your citizenship; you ignore the question as to whether in character the man is worthy to take his place in this great Republic and help to work out those problems that promise so much for the betterment and happiness of mankind.

For many years in our history we claimed to be the country that extended a welcome to the oppressed from every clime. Why have we changed? Are we so content with our own insulation and with the blessings of our institutions that we would exclude the rest of the people of the world from sharing in their advantages? Our marvelous prosperity, unexampled in the history of governments, a growth in a century and a quarter from 3,000,000 to 90,000,000 people, was made possible only by the policy of free immigration that this country has so generously and so wisely observed in the past. The foreign born have contributed their share of energy, devotion, and patriotism to the greatness of the Republic.

I can find nothing in the suggestions of Senators who have spoken on the other side of this proposition to incline me to yield to their view. I shall vote against every educational test. Impose any character test, and it will have my support.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, whoever else may vote to continue this dangerous infiltration into the body politic and the soul politic of America of dense ignorance which is now coming to our shores from Europe, I shall not. I am the least chauvinistic of human beings; I am one of the few Americans who have never thought that an American was superior to anybody else. I know better. I know that, within certain broad lines of racial denomination, wherever the white race lives its representatives are about the same.

I have no racial objection to these people. The Poles, the Magyars, are in every sense racially my equals and the equals of my people, but the ignorant man, whatever his race, coming to a country where he is not governed but becomes a part of the governing force, is dangerous. It is almost equally dangerous to attempt to cure the trouble by an educational qualification for the suffrage, leaving a vast number of people outside of the suffrage ranks-nonvoters-as an element discontented and semirebellious.

The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] says our country was once the home of the oppressed of the whole world. So it was, and that is the very point now. It is not the oppressed who are coming to us. It is not the man seeking liberty for himself and a free country for his children.

The man who is coming here now comes for the purpose of beating down the price and the standard of American labor. The price of labor is fixed by the demand and the supply. Upon the one side the number of people with dollars, willing and able to hire labor; upon the other side the number of men seeking to be hired; these are the two sides of the equation which fixes the price of labor.

From the other side of the Chamber we have heard much about the protection of American labor from the products of the pauper labor of Europe. I have always said that if there been any sincerity in the reason given for advocating the protection policy advocated upon the other side its advocates would have gone to the source of the evil for the purpose of protecting American labor directly from the direct competition in America of incoming pauper labor.

Although you can not say that illiterate labor is necessarily pauper labor or that pauper labor is necessarily illiterate labor, in nine times out of ten it is true. The man is made unskilled; he is made in a sense a pauper laborer by his ignorance. His ignorance is not his fault. I have the highest degree of sympathy for him; but I also have some degree of sympathy for the American laboring man, already here; and the class of them that most needs protection from this illiterate, densely ignorant class, who must take the first job they can get at any price they can get it for, is not our native American population. It is the Poles and Magyars and Croatians and Russians, and so forth, already here, working in mines and factories and receiving these minimum American wages. It is their wages that are first beaten down. Just as they drove the Americans out of those works, so these newcomers drive them out little by little by smaller and smaller wages.

Is there anything in the constant cry on both sides about trying to raise or maintain the standard of wages of the American laboring man? Do you mean it or do you not? Of course, I know that very frequently you do not. You have other and ulterior motives in mind. But for those who do mean it the right place to stop competition is where it becomes direct, right here at our homes. Make a scarcity of laborers of the unskilled class in proportion to the demand for labor, and wages will go up in any community as surely as wheat goes up in price with a scarcity of wheat.

So much for the aspect of this question from the laborers' standpoint.

No analogy can be drawn between our condition now and our condition 40 or 50 years ago whereupon to predicate any conclusion as to the inadvisability of exclusion of immigration now because we did not exclude it formerly. The old immigrant who came to the United States found a homestead to settle upon, and he went out by himself or with his family where his neighbors were Americans, and he soon necessarily acquired the language; he soon acquired a certain degree of familiarity with the institutions of the country and a certain degree of knowledge of them. Now what does he do? He herds, he literally herds like cattle in the great cities, and he has no more knowledge of American institutions than if he were herding in Vienna or Berlin-not as much as if he was herding in Vienna or Berlin-no more than if he was herding in Budapest or Moscow or upon some place on the coast of Asia Minor.

Then there is another thing. It is true that education is not all gotten from books. Nor is culture. The most perfect gentleman I ever knew in my life could not write a word, except to sign his name. I frequently said he was also one of the wisest men from a citizenship standpoint I ever knew. He was. But when you come to the consideration of the knowledge that men have as to how to govern a country there is a school far superior to the schools wherein instruction is given from the books. The old immigrants who came to us came principally from England and Ireland and Scotland and Wales, Switzerland, and countries -Scandinavians and Germans-and although some of the Scandinavians and most of the Germans never had a republican form of government, nor even a free representative government, in the sense in which we speak of it in England and here, they were the people of all Europe who possessed in the highest degree, and do now, personal liberty, and cherish it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I want to correct one statement that the Senator made with reference to the political institutions of the Scandinavian countries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ought to have excepted Norway and perhaps Sweden.

Mr. NELSON. They have as free institutions as there are in America.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. And have had for years, Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. They have had democratic institutions for years, Mr. WILLIAMS. They are the most democratic countries in Europe. That is true. And they have been for years.

If you were to take an illiterate man who came from Norway, England, Scotland, or Ireland he would not necessarily be an ignorant man, because he has attended this great school of the common people in free countries. What is that school? In our own country it is the school of jury service; it is the school of public discussion of political and social matters, where all matters can be and are discussed. It is the school of talking about and participating in elections, where men learn from one another.

I heard old Prof. Holmes once state that William Preston once said to him that although the percentage of illiteracy was comparatively high-higher than it ought to have been-in South Carolina before the war, they were yet the most perfectly educated people politically that ever existed outside of ancient Athens. This, he said, was owing to the habit of having discussion of public questions whenever the county courts and whenever the circuit courts met and whenever barbecues and picnics were held in the summer time. So that there was not a man in South Carolina who could not comprehendingly go through all that metaphysical disquisition of John Caldwell Calhoun on State rights, nullification, and the tariff, and all that. But when you come to a people who have had no participation in government, they have missed this great unbooked school for the education of the people.

I believe you could take 10,000 illiterate Mississippians, or Englishmen, or Missourians, or men from Massachusetts, or men from Oregon, or Scotland, or Ireland, or Norway, and shipwreck them upon a distant island, and they would at once give themselves a tolerably good government, at least protecting life, limb, and property, and the right of one man to one wife; and I believe if you were to take the same number of highly educated people who have never been accustomed to some sort of free institutions in their own land and put them there they could not organize a government that would be in any sense free and just. They would at first have chaos or else the rule of the strongest.

Now, then, the ignorant man coming from a country of despotic institutions is the most dangerous thing possible to enter into the body politic and to become an aspirant for entrance into the soul politic of a people with a long line of free traditions behind them and a longer line of free ideals in front of them, toward which they are working all the time.

As for myself, I shall not be deflected from my duty to the people who are in America, and who have a right to be here, by any fear of political punishment from those who insist that people who are not here and who would be dangerous to us if they came shall nevertheless be permitted to come. Now, after all, the native American has some rights. Of course, he has not many, but he has some few. Fred Talbott used to tell a story about a convention held in some town. Somebody got up after a while and said, "Mr. Chairman, I want to nominate for alderman in the first ward the great German-American citizen, Mr. Fritz Heffner." Fritz Heffner was nominated. Somebody else said, "Mr. Chairman, I want to put in nomination for alderman in the second ward Mr. O'Kelley." Mr. O'Kelley was Mr. O'Kelley was nominated. Then somebody got up and said, "Mr. Chairman, it affords me ze great plaisir to put in nomination for alderman in the third ward Mr. Jean Crole, a prominent French-American." Another man got up and said, "Mr. Chairman, I want to nominate for alderman in the fourth ward Mr. John Smith. I am sorry I can not say he is an Irish-American or a German-American- or a Swiss-American or an Italian-American. He would have been if he could have been, but it is his misfortune to have been born here, and it is his misfortune that his grandfather and his father even were born here." with a foreign accent holloed out from the back benches, "The know-nothing son of a sea cook, put him out!"

The old conditions were not like those now existing. Men could go out and rear their families on the farm. not doing it now; and when a man in those days went on a farm he was not competing directly with anybody, nor did he herd solely or frequently at all with anyone else of his old nation and language. Therefore, he did not form a part of an aggregated mass of ignorance, even if he himself was ignorant. There was not a body of ignorance of which he was part that formed the essence and spirit of the community by which he was immediately environed. The controlling spirit of the community was not his old-world spirit or ideas or ideals. That happens now, and we owe something to ourselves; we owe something to our children. We must not further permit this.

I was not astonished at all this morning, Mr. President, when the Senator from New Jersey said what he did; I know him so well. He is of sentiment and of big heartedness all compact; and if you will indicate to me upon any great public question on which side generous sentiment lies, self-sacrificing in appearance, at any rate, and in his own mind in reality, I will indicate the side upon which my friend the Senator from New Jersey will fall. I like that spirit in one's individual capacity, but it will not do as a spirit to be exercised in a legislative capacity. I admire the man who will cut off his right arm to help a friend, but I see no particularly great virtue in the man who will consent that the right arms of all his wife's relatives shall be sacrificed for his friend. The sacrifice, confined to the Senator himself, would be all right; but when it is the sacrifice of the entire people of the United States, their ideals and their traditions, I think generosity to the foreigner has gone too far.

My friend, the Senator from New York [Mr. O'Gorman] says there ought to be "a qualification of character" but not of intelligence. Oh, would to God there was some way whereby qualification for character could be defined and established! But how in the name of common sense could anybody write into

Mr. STONE. This bill writes it in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill does not, because it can not; but this bill does assume, everything else being equal, that a man's capacity for good is increased by information and knowledge, out of which may grow wisdom, and that his capacity for evil is not lessened by his ignorance. You can approximate a qualification of character by making a qualification of information, but you can not reach it.

The wisest man in the world may be the meanest, and some of the best men in the world may be very ignorant, but, as a rule, everything else being equal, a man is a better man for every ounce of additional knowledge and wisdom he possesses. dom is light; ignorance is darkness; and just in proportion as a man is in the light he has the capacity of seeing to do things in the light that are well to be done for himself and for his fellows, and just in proportion as he is in darkness he gropes helplessly, no matter what his intentions may be.

I do not see any other way; I do not see any other practical test whereby to eliminate the comparatively unfit from the comparatively fit. I acknowledge that a literacy test does not mathematically and altogether demark the unfit from the fit, but I do say that it is the nearest approximation to an accurate line of demarcation that you can prescribe and write in words and letters into a statute that men may be comprehendingly guided by.

If I had any way of determining how much better one man was than another, how much more nearly honest one man was than another, how much truer and more loyal to principle one man was than another, how much more unselfish one man was than another, how much more courageous one man was than another—if I had any way of ascertaining all that, I should gladly write it into a statute and let the literacy and all other tests go to the winds.

But what foolishness it is to talk to lawmakers about writing a character test in words and letters into a statute. How shall I can write a physical test, that the man must not be diseased; I can write a political test, a social test, that he must not be an anarchist, that he must not be an enemy of organized government; I can write an intellectual test, that he must be able to read and write in some language, so that he is not shut off from communication with current printed thought; but I can not write a character test. There is nobody but God who can look into a man's heart and tell what his character is.

I might be able to write a reputation test, if I could bring over the man's whole neighborhood in order to have them bear witness to what his reputation was. But all of us are standing demonstrations of the fact that reputation and character do not always go together.

I have heard much about this thing of admitting or refusing to admit men "on their character" and not on their informa-If any man is wise enough to tell me how to prescribe a character test, then, in my opinion, he is a wiser man-mere man-than ever lived on the surface of this earth. ward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual grace" or of character is a thing I defy any legislator to write into a statute, and when you go beyond that and want to write "the inward and spiritual grace" or character itself, there is nobody in the world who can write it except God, and He has been too merciful to mankind thus far to do it.

Now one word. Down South our people have been prevented thus far from trying to solve a great problem, which they could solve probably by bringing in members of the Caucasian race. But they were afraid to take the risk of bringing down a densely ignorant people, even though Caucasian, over 50 per cent of whom are not capable of reading and writing-a larger percentage of illiteracy than exists among the negroes of the State of Mississippi, considerably larger.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be defeated by Senators voting nay, and that the literacy test will remain in the bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to agree to let this measure go over until to-morrow, with the understanding that a vote shall be taken on all amendments and the bill during the legislative day.

Mr. LODGE. The calendar day. Mr. STONE.

The calendar day.

I am perfectly willing to agree to that—that Mr. LODGE. the vote shall be taken before adjournment on that calendar day.

Mr. STONE. That is, to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside.

Mr. BACON. Before it is laid aside, there is a very small matter to which I desire to call attention, and I do so now because I may not be present to call attention to it later. I think it is a grammatical error. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to it, because if the bill is to be laid aside by unanimous consent I may not be able later to call attention to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Massachusetts give his attention to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I simply want to call attention, as the matter is about to be laid aside and I may not be present, to what I think is a grammatical error. On line 20, page 7, the word "are" should be "is."

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is a grammatical error. Mr. BACON. It reads:

Whether said father or grandfather or son are able to read and write

Mr. LODGE. That is obviously a grammatical error, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be now laid aside, to be taken up immediately after the morning business to-morrow, and that before adjournment upon the calendar day to-morrow the bill, including all amendments offered or to be offered, be proceeded with to its final disposition. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to section 7. It is intended to prohibit transportation companies from soliciting or inviting or encouraging foreigners to emigrate.

Mr. LODGE. That is the intention.

Mr. POMERENE. It has seemed to me, from the reading of the section, that is somewhat indefinite, and I wish to suggest this amendment:

On page 14, line 14, strike out the word "or"; in line 15 strike out the word "and insert therefor the word "or"; and after the word "others," in line 15, insert a comma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent of the Senate the bill has just been laid aside until to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. If there is no objection, I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment. I do not think there will be any objection to it. I think it words it a little better than it is worded now. The purpose is to make it unlawful for anyone engaged in the work or business of transportation to do certain things afterwards described, and owing to the wording, "partnership or corporations," which was to distinguish between a partnership and a corporation, it reads a little as if they were divided from the rest; the "others" separates it from the rest, and it does not make it clear that it means only those in transportation. But that can be done to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate having just agreed by unanimous consent to lay the bill aside-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does that necessarily prevent notice of amendments to be offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no. Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I should like to give notice of a couple of amendments I propose to offer at the proper time. I ask the Clerk to take them down. In line 3, page 5, I wish to move to strike out the word "two" and substitute "one." It rends, "two or more attacks of insanity." I do not see why we need more than one to convince us that a man is unfit.

Mr. LODGE. We do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to move to strike that out.
On page S, line 9, after the words "persons of Chinese descent." I wish to insert the words "or persons of African descent, whether from Africa or the West Indies, except Porto Rico.'

In another portion of the bill, line 11, page 18, after the word "descent," I wish to move to insert the words "or of African descent, whether from Africa or the West Indies, except Porto Rico."

I shall not say anything about these amendments now, except that the negro immigration into the United States from the West Indies is growing very much. Cotton and sugar planters from self-interest may want to make it much larger. I want to stop it before it becomes more dangerous.

IRRIGATION DITCH ON ISLAND OF HAWAII.

Mr. CLAPP. Unless the Senate is going on with the calendar I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11628) authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico with an

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 15, page 9, line 16, after the word "semiannual," insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the aggregate of such bonds at par value shall not exceed the actual cost of construction of the ditch and other plant and appurtenences: And provided further, That the total issue of such bonds shall not be in excess of $3,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer the following amendment to come in on

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. Strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive, on page 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Fourth. Dividends at a rate not to exceed 8 per cent on the capital stock of said ditch company, which stock is hereby limited to the actual cost of said ditch and other plant and appurtenances, not to exceed $3,500,000 par value.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I notice that by the amendment which the Senator from Minnesota just offered the capital stock is limited to $3,500,000, the actual cost of the ditch.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator will remember that we agreed in the committee to limit the bill, but the chairman of the committee, in reporting the bill, failed to put in the proper limitation as to the stock. The amendment which I have just offered relates to the stock. The committee amendment on page 9 relates to the bonds.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The stock equals the cost of the ditch?

Not to exceed $3,500,000 par value. Mr. CLAPP.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the bonds are not to exceed the cost of the ditch?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the ditch is constructed with the amount of money raised on the stock, what is the occasion for fixing the amount of bonds at the cost of the ditch?

Mr. CLAPP. That matter was considered by the committee. It is recognized by all that in order to get private capital to build this ditch the opportunity should be given to duplicate the actual cost in the totalization of bonds and stock. That was thoroughly understood. Unless that can be done, from all the data the committee had, the charter might as well not be passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator of opinion that the surplus money, I suppose for promotion, is placed at too large a figure in the bill, equal to the entire cost of the enterprise?

Mr. CLAPP. The committee, of course, had to take the statement of those who were before it. The Delegate representing the islands favors this proposition, and the committee were of the opinion, from all that appeared before it, that if this enterprise was to be initiated it would be necessary to give them this opportunity. I want it thoroughly understood that, of course, the bill provides for the totalization of the capital and stock at $7,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The cost of the enterprise would be just one-half?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; just one-half that amount. Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like further time to look into this measure. For that reason I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (8, 5882) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The motion is not debatable. Mr. LODGE.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask a question. Does the Senator from Utah propose to take up the bill and make it the unfinished business?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can not make it the unfinished busi-There is already a bill on the calendar that is the unfinished business.

Mr. BACON. But if the Senator makes a motion and it is carried by the Senate it displaces that bill. Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think not, when that bill was laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. If this bill is taken up and made the unfinished business, it undoubtedly displaces it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. A motion has been made to take up the compensation act. I do not understand that that displaces the unfinished business, because the unfinished business has already been laid aside by unanimous consent. The VICE PRESIDENT. It was temporarily laid aside. The Chair sees no way by which there can be anything else made the unfinished business to-day. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Utah. Mr. BACON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BACON. I understood from the ruling of the Chair the Chair would rule that it would not be in order now to make Senate bill 5382 the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not make it the unfinished business to take it up now for consideration, is what the Chair intended to rule.

Mr. BACON. If the Chair rules that, I am content. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so rules.

Mr. BACON. But I want to say, in order that it may not be considered as a precedent, without a difference of opinion upon it, that it is an anomalous situation. I am very frank to confess that I do not think this precise question was ever before presented to the Senate where a bill was temporarily laid aside. The fact that a bill has been temporarily laid aside does not change the status of its being the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is precisely what the Chair rules.

Mr. BACON. Very well. What I mean to say is that the effect of taking up a measure is to displace any other measure which may be the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. Not if the unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not under circumstances such as exist now.

Mr. LODGE. Not if it has been laid aside by unanimous

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was simply temporarily laid aside, and the Chair thinks that that does not displace its right to continue as the unfinished business. Then, if something else is taken up, whether it is definitely disposed of before adjournment or not, the Chair thinks that automatically the other unfinished business would still be the unfinished business.

Mr. BACON. I make this suggestion to the Chair: I do not for a moment take issue with the proposition that the Senate can proceed to the consideration of another matter in the inter-I think that is evidently and necessarily true. But I do not think the motion ought to be made in the shape in which it is unless it was intended to displace the unfinished business. I think if the Senator would make a motion to take up the compensation bill temporarily for this afternoon it would be all right, but the motion to proceed to the consideration of business is a motion well known in the Senate, under unbroken precedents, as a motion which displaces other matter and makes that business the unfinished business. It is not with reference to the fact that the bill will be considered this afternoon that I am addressing the Chair, because I have no objection to that. It is only in the interest of what I consider to be correct procedure that I insist a motion to proceed to the consideration of another bill should not be made when there is on the calendar business which is unfinished.

Mr. President, if I may make a single suggestion in this connection, if the motion to take up a bill for consideration displaces the unfinished business, it, of course, substitutes the bill which it is moved to take up, but you can not displace that which is not before the Senate. There is now a vacant space, and the motion of the Senator from Utah merely comes in, and then the bill goes back automatically to the

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the motion of the Senator from Utah should prevail, what will be the status of this particular bill after to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would have no different status from what it had before the motion was carried.

Mr. LODGE. It goes back to the calendar. Mr. SIMMONS. It goes back to the calendar? The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. In this connection I want to say there is no rule to be found in the book, and I do not believe that a precedent can be found to the same effect. It may be true that it may be otherwise as to the latter. I only make the suggestion, to prevent complication, that the Senator modify his motion and accomplish his purpose the same, that the Senate for the afternoon will take up for consideration this bill, because I think a motion to proceed to the consideration of a certain bill is a motion well recognized in the Senate, and the effect of it has been so universally recognized that we ought not to com-plicate it by an exception. The motion ought to be retained as one having a distinct and significant purpose.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator from Georgia as to his statement, provided we had not already had unfinished business up for consideration. If the motion made by the junior Senator from Utah had been made without the unanimous consent of the Senate laying the unfinished business aside, then the position of the Senator from Georgia would be absolutely correct. But we had it up for discussion, it has been before the Senate, and by unanimous consent of the Senate it was temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BACON. When it is temporarily laid aside it is nevertheless still the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, but it can not be displaced that day by another motion of the Senate, after it had been temporarily laid aside by the Senate.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly the question at issue; it is whether it can be displaced or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that is the issue. I know it has been done in the Senate many times.

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator, if it has ever been done I have never known it to have been done. Of course a great many things have happened that I have not had called specially to my attention; but if that distinct motion has ever been made while a certain matter is the unfinished business it escaped my attention at the time, because I certainly would have had the same criticism to make upon it then I make now.

I will repeat, I am not taking this position in any spirit of opposition to the purpose the Senator from Utah has in view. I am simply trying to preserve what I conceive to be the proper procedure of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I simply want to make single observation. If the position of the Senator from Georgia were correct, then, after the unfinished business had been temporarily laid aside, the Senate would be unable to do any business except by unanimous consent.

Oh, not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly no such result as that ought to have been contemplated.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is in error in that. For instance, if the Senator were to ask for unanimous consent that we should proceed to the consideration of this bill, that would be one way, or if we had the calendar up, which is always in order when the Senate is not otherwise occupied, that would be still another way. There are many ways in which the considera-tion of a bill can be reached when the Senate desires to reach it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia a question right there. Suppose I should ask unanimous con-

Mr. BACON. There is so much conversation that I can not hear the Senator

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose I should ask unanimous consent and some Senator should object, then would the Senator say that I was powerless to move that the bill be taken up?

Mr. BACON. I did not catch what the Senator said. is so much talking going on I really could not hear what the

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I say—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senate please be in order. The Senator will wait a moment. The Senator from Georgia has twice asked that Senators refrain from conversation so that he can hear and be heard. Will Senators please comply with the request of a fellow Senator?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is the question I submitted to the Senator from Georgia. Suppose we took up the calendar, as he suggested, and I had asked unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of this bill and some Senator objected, would the Senator say then that I could not move to take it up notwithstanding the objection?

Mr. BACON. Certainly not, because that is provided for specifically by the rule.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the result would follow, I suggested, that we could do nothing except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. Not at all, for the reason stated by me; that the particular form of question adopted by the Senator is a form of question recognized in the Senate as having a specific office to perform, and one which performs the office of making a certain matter the unfinished business. That is the reason why I make the objection. It is because the particular motion that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of a certain measure is one of the most drastic motions that can be made in the Senate, one which is sometimes used upon very momentous occasions for the purpose of accomplishing a most radical result; and I did not wish that that practice of the Senate and that understanding of the meaning of that question should be complicated by exceptions in any way.

I think there is no trouble whatever about getting up the bill. I simply objected to the Senator making a motion which has that particular signification and which has so universally had recognition on the part of the Senate that it makes the matter thus called up the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland].

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to a precedent in the Sixty-first Congress in regard to the status of unfinished business. status of unfinished business. A measure pending was the unfinished business. It was temporarily laid aside. I left the Chamber, thinking that that would dispose of it and I might be free to do other things. Some one called for the regular order. It was held that that call was proper and that the unfinished business again recurred.

I made some contest over it, and my recollection now is that the Chair maintained that a call for the regular order would bring back the unfinished business as the matter having precedence notwithstanding it had been laid aside previously on the same day. I raised the question that having been temporarily laid aside on that day it could not be again called up on that day, and the ruling of the Chair was, if my memory serves me correctly—and I think it does—that it might be called up notwithstanding the fact that it had been temporarily laid aside, and I had gone out under the impression that I might leave. I think that states the status of the unfinished business. It is now subject to be called to the attention of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Utah whether he desires to call up this bill for the purpose of allowing Senators to speak upon it, or whether he desires to call it up with a view of proceeding to a vote upon any portion of the bill this afternoon?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I intend to ask to have the bill laid before the Senate so that the Senate may proceed with its consideration. If any Senator is ready to speak upon it, all right; if not, I shall ask to have the bill read and that its consideration be proceeded with.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the regular order. Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is the regular order, Mr. Presi-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the regular order. My understanding it that that brings up the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the motion of the Senator from Utah, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill, that motion having been made, and it is not debatable, although there has been much debate upon it, seemingly by unanimous consent. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Bacon Borah Bourne Bristow Brown Bryan Burnham Burton Catron Clapp Clark, Wyo.	du Pont Fall Fletcher Gallinger Gronna Heyburn Johnson, Me. Jones Lodge Martine, N. J. Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. Martin of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. I will make that announcement for the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is out of the city on business of the Senate.

VICE PRESIDENT, Fifty-three Senators swered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 38,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senate has already consented that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

I ask that the bill be now read for committee amendments.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be read for committee amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The formal reading of the bill has already been dispensed with by unanimous consent on a former

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that the bill should be read section by section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; that is what the Secretary was about to do—to read the bill for committee amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not understand that the reading had been dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has advised the Chair that on a former day when the bill was up for considera-tion the Senate agreed to dispense with the formal reading of the bill as in Committee of the Whole and decided that the bill should be read for committee amendments.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the fact that the Senate dispensed with the rending on that occasion does not amount to manimous consent: it simply meant that at that time the Senate did not require it. It is not a unanimous-consent agreement of a character so sacred that it could not be changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary was about to read the bill. Does the Senator desire the bill read through before any amendments are offered?

any amendments are offered?

Mr. BACON. I understand my colleague desires that. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do, Mr. President, if I have a right to ask, desire that the bill be read through before that is done

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks, when the Senate has once dispensed with the formal reading of the bill as in Committee of the Whole, that it is dispensed with.

Mr. BACON. Why, Mr. President, each meeting of the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, is a separate and independent proceeding. That was simply a method agreed to by the committee at that time for its procedure upon that occasion. That order was not carried into effect; the Senate did not proceed to have the bill read for committee amendments. On the contrary, the discussion proceeded. The bill never has on the contrary, the discussion proceeded. The bill never has been read for amendment or read for any other purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been read for amendment, but it is about to be read for amendment now.

Mr. BACON. Yes; but, Mr. President, the point I make is that under the rules of the Senate the bill will have to be read. The fact that the Senate, when it proceeded heretofore to the consideration of this bill, did not then require it to be read, does not deprive a Senator of his right, or the Senate of its right to have the bill read under the rules, whenever such reading is called for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary

will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that is done I want to enter an objection to the position the Senator from Georgia When the Senate has agreed that the formal readhas taken. ing of a bill shall be dispensed with it seems to me that that settles the matter, and that then the bill is to be read section by section for amendment. If the Chair rules differently, of course I shall be satisfied; but it seems to me as though that is a precedent that we ought not to establish, for I have never known an instance where, the formal reading having been dispensed with, it has ever been insisted upon afterwards.

Mr. LODGE. It is a unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not otherwise rule; but the Chair has asked unanimous consent that the bill now be read to avoid any such ruling, so that no precedent may be established one way or the other. The Chair announced that, without objection, the Secretary would read the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not claim for a moment that if there had been a request submitted to the Senate that by unanimous consent the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with it would not have been binding; but the position I take is simply this—and I only state it in order that I may not be misunderstood—that where in Committee of the Whole there is a proposition that a bill be proceeded with and be read section by section for the purpose of amendment, there being no formal consent, which is a sacred thing in the Senate, that does not amount to the dignity of a consent agreement. It was simply dispensing at that time with what the Senate could require or not require, as it saw fit. It can require it at any time. Mr. President, the rule is that a bill shall be read three times in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But not in Committee of the Whole, if the Chair may interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, we do not have in this Chamber the same formal distinction between the Committee of the Whole and the Senate that in other parliamentary bodies they have between the committee of the whole and the body at large. In other bodies there is a distinct organization of the committee of the whole. The presiding officer leaves the chair and the body does in fact, as well as nominally, organize itself as a committee of the whole. The rules which obtain in the Committee of the Whole in the House of Representatives, for instance, do not obtain here. I have never served in the other House, but, if my impression is correct, they do not call the yeas and nays in Committee of the Whole in that House. Am I correct in that?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely. Mr. BACON. Well, we do here, and the two things are not analogous at all; they are entirely different. procedure in the Senate which apply when the Senate is sitting as the Senate, apply to the body when sitting as in Committee of the Whole. There is no distinction that I have ever known as to the application of a single rule. It is altogether different in the other House from what it is here.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator if he so desires. I did not desire the Senator to yield at all. Mr. LODGE. The Senator kept on addressing the Chair. Mr. BACON.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. BACON. I was in full headway and current, and the Senator kept on addressing the Chair. I will yield to him with the greatest pleasure if he so desires.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. I was not present at the time, but is it or is it not a fact that the formal reading of the bill was formally dispensed with by unanimous consent at a previous meeting of the Senate?

Mr. BACON. That is exactly the point—
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My understanding is that the formal request was made that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BACON. I have expressed myself upon that matter; but I will repeat that I do not think there was ever any suggestion that there should be unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the question of fact to which my inquiry was directed. I understand it differently which by inquiry was directed. I understand it differently from the Senator, and I should like to know what the fact is.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I had endeavored to state what my understanding of the fact was, and that is this—

Mr. SUTHERIAND. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator True VICE.

yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I distinctly and formally asked unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and the RECORD will show that fact.

Mr. BACON. If the RECORD shows that, then I am in error; but the point I make, Mr. President, is that in the ordinary procedure where an informal statement is made that the formal reading of a bill will be dispensed with, it does not rise to the dignity and has not the effect of a unanimous-consent agreement, because a unanimous-consent agreement, because a unanimous-consent agreement in the Senate is something most carefully guarded. If, however, the Senator made his request in that way, I grant it is a unanimous-consent agreement and is binding through the entire proceeding on the bill: but if the Senator simply moved that it be dispensed with, that is another matter altogether.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had been proceeding upon the assumption that it was a fact, as stated to him by the Secretary, that the formal reading had been dispensed with by order of the Senate, by unanimous consent, and the Journal clerk advises the Chair that the Journal so shows.

Mr. BACON. That it was by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Very well. If so, it is binding; but if it was simply an order of the Senate it is not binding, except upon that session of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Secretary reading the bill in full now?

Mr. WATSON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will therefore read the bill for amendment, the committee amendments, without objection, to be first considered. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Curtis Dillingham du Pont Fall Fletcher Ashurst Nixon O'Gorman Smith, Ariz. Smith, Ga. Smoot Stephenson Sutherland O'Gor Bacon Bristow Brown Overman Page Penrose Bryan Burnbam Burton Percy Perkins Poindexter Pomerene Gallinger Swanson Warren Gronna Heyburn Johnson, Me. Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I desire simply to put into the Record the following quotation from the RECORD of April 16, page 5092:

Mr. SUTHERLAND, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Secretary will read the bill for action on the committee amendments.

That is an absolute unanimous-consent agreement, the same as we have on every appropriation bill and the same as is made all the time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will not continue the discussion; but, as I have said before, a unanimous-consent agreement is something extremely formal and absolutely sacred in the Senate. It is never given by implication; and what the Senator has read amounted to an order of the Senate and not to unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. If that is not a unanimous-consent agreement, I do not know what is a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BACON. I differ from the honorable Senator.
The VICE PRESIDENT, The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say that it is not my wish to waste the time of the Senate, but we are not ready to consider this bill. I have been unable to prepare certain amendments, which I gave notice last Monday I intended to prepare. I was compelled to leave the city immediately after the adjournment of the Senate on that day, and I only was able to return to-day. At that time we had a fixed unfinished business on the calendar. There are Senators who are preparing speeches which they desire to deliver upon this It is one of the more recent bills that have been reported to the Senate, the report to the Senate from the Judiciary Committee having been made only on April 3, two weeks ago. We simply have not had time to prepare the amendments we wish to submit, and Senators who desire to speak upon the subject I know are not present and have not yet completed their preparation for it. I simply feel that, when the effort is made to force this bill upon us with such undue haste, anything that we are compelled to do to give ourselves the time that we want for consideration does not occupy the usual attithat we want for consideration does not occupy the usual atti-tude of a purpose to delay, but simply a purpose to delay that we may have the time we wish. By the end of two weeks every Senator, I think, who desires to take any part in this discussion will be ready, and then I for one would be ready to proceed with the discussion and in due form to a conclusion of this measure; but for the present, without my amendments having been prepared, I will simply be compelled almost absolutely to waste the time of the Senate if the measure is pressed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as I have stated several times, I have no desire to press this bill unduly; but, as we all know, there are important matters coming before the Senate very soon, large appropriation bills, tariff bills, and matters of that kind, and unless we proceed with the consideration of this measure I fear it may be crowded out. Now, Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, April 25, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill, and that before adjournment upon that legislative day a vote be taken upon the bill and all amendments then pending or to be offered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a week from to-day? Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; one week from to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not consent to that; the time is not sufficient, but if the Senator will make it two weeks from to-day I will not object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well, Mr. President, I will make that suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that two weeks from to-day, immediately following the disposal of the routine morning business, the bill in question, Senate bill 5382, be taken up by the Senate, and that prior to adjournment upon that legislative day a vote be taken upon all pending amendments and amendments to be offered and upon the bill to its final disposition. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will that be subject to a motion to postpone until next December?

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair could not hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will that be subject to a motion to postpone?

The VICE PRESIDENT. "Final disposition," as the Chair understands, means final disposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I understand by it, but I want to know what is the disposition of the Senate. I have some constituents who want this bill put over until their national convention is held, which will be, I think, on the 20th of May, So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of the principle of this bill; but, in obedience to the wishes of those people and their desire to get tegether in their national convention—and they have not held one since this bill has been considered—I should like very much to have it go over until after the 20th of May. I do not like to object to the request, but I do not desire to be put in the position of not making that motion at some time, and I would be precluded from doing so if I agreed to the request for unanimous consent. As I have said, I do not like to object; but I am afraid I am forced to do so, because I want the Senate to consider whether or not some of the testimony that has been taken

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair used the term "final disposition" without the Senator from Utah having used it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason I raised the point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah may have had in mind a disposition which should not be final.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason I raised the point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah may prefer to put it in that form.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Utah will put it in that form I think it will be agreed to. The Vice President used the word "final," and so I thought I would raise the question, so that I would not be precluded from making the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would imagine that with the word "final" omitted, simply leaving it "the disposi-tion of the bill," a postponement of action thereon until next December or any other time would be a disposal of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would still give us the right at that time to move to postpone to the next session, and we could come to a vote on it, if we saw fit.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will include in my request for unanimous consent the further provision that it shall be subject to the right to move to postpone the further consideration of the bill to a day certain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Add as a proviso to the request, then, as heretofore stated by the Chair, the words "Provided, That a motion shall be in order to either definitely or in-definitely postpone the further consideration of the bill."

Mr. WILLIAMS. To postpone it to a definite day.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. To postpone to a definite day.
The VICE PRESIDENT. To postpone to a definite day further action thereon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none, and it is therefore ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Presi-ent. I suppose that will not prevent the consideration of the bill in the meantime and the disposition of any amendments before the day fixed for the final vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would think that the intent of the Senate was that no amendment should be voted on prior to that day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I simply wanted to understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would be the opinion of the

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the joint resolution be read. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Are we now proceeding by unanimous consent?

Mr. JONES. or the Washington, to Washington, to Washington-Oregon Corporation, its successors and assigns.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby granted to the Washington-Oregon Corporation, a corporation organized under the law of the State of Washington, under the conditions and restrictions in this act contained, the right to extend, maintain, and operate its electric railway across the Vancouver Military Reservation, in the county of Clarke, in the State of Washington, with the right to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph, telephone, and electric-power transmission lines, the said grant to remain in force during the pleasure of Congress.

SEC. 2. That the works herein authorized shall be constructed upon such location as may be fixed by the Secretary of War, and in such manner, of such character, and with such spurs, switches, and crossings as he may prescribe; and said works shall be maintained and operated subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War or the commander at the said post may from time to time prescribe; Provided, That before beginning construction the said corporation shall furnish a bond to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, conditioned for the completion of the said railroad and other works mentioned herein across said reservation within one year from the approval of said bond by the Secretary of War.

Mr. JONES. There is a committee amendment to the amendment I desire to present.

The VICE PRESIDENT, The Senator from Washington offers a committee amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 4, line 22, after the word "use," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

And provided further. That the said corporation shall surface the said roadway for a width of 24 feet alongside and exclusive of the said railway tracks for the entire distance occupied by said tracks within the reservation with crushed rock of suitable size, the said roadway to be properly olled and rolled, and shall maintain the same, including the space between the tracks, at all times in good condition for vehicle traffic; shall keep the said track or roadway within the reservation limits properly lighted by satisfactory electric light without expense to the United States; and shall construct and maintain a suitable drainage ditch along said track.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the Washington-Oregon Corporation a right for an electric railroad, and for telephone, telegraph, and electric-transmission lines across the Vancouver Military Reservation, in the State of Washington."

HOMESTEADS UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5545) providing for the issuing of patent to entrymen for homesteads upon reclamation projects.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read in full, as in Committee of the Whole, and amended.

Mr. SMOOT. I have an amendment to offer to the bill. After the word "act," on page 1, line 11, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 11, after the word "act," insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no patent shall be issued unless at least one-half of the total irrigable area of the entry has been reclaimed for agricultural purposes, and all charges then due to the Government for building, operation, and maintenance, including drainage, have been paid: Provided further, That the amounts so paid on account of building charges shall aggregate not less than 40 per cent of the total building charge.

I am not going to interpose an objection to the Mr. BORAH. amendment. But I do want to say, before it is voted upon, that while I am not going to object to it, I do not object largely for the reason that I do not want to jeopardize the passage of A good many seem to think the amendment is necesthe bill. sary. I do not think the amendment necessary or desirable, but it is not vital and I shall not urge action one way or the other, but with this single suggestion, permit the Senate to vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that I have as much interest in the bill's passing as he, and would do nothing to jeopardize it. The amendment simply provides for the reclaiming of one-half of the agricultural lands in the entry upon the reclamation project, as the law provides now, and of course hereafter, under the bill, the entries under the reclamation project will be made the same as all homestead entries. We have the three-year homestead bill before the conferces of the two Houses, and in the bill as it passed the House there is no cultivation required. The amendment simply provides that the lands shall be cultivated as they are required to be cultivated under the reclamation project.

Mr. BORAH. I did not mean to say that the Senator from Utah himself is not in favor of the bill, but those who are in favor of the amendment particularly seem to think it is necessary, and would doubtless feel the necessity of halting the bill if the amendment was not in. I am not criticizing the Senator or anyone else. I simply desired to state my view.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BORAH. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.
The Secretary. On page 1, line 10, after the word "two," insert:

And also to persons who have made or shall make homestead entries under irrigation projects of the United States for surplus Indian lands within former Indian reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the amendment, but I want to call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers] to the amendment. I will say that if the bill passes the House with the amendment just offered I shall ask that the bill (8, 5957) providing for the issuance of patents to entrymen for homesteads in the so-called Flathead irrigation project be indefinitely postponed. I ask the Senator from Montana not to call that bill up for consideration until this is finally disposed of, because it refers to the same subject, and therefore if the amendment is now included in the bill and it becomes a law I shall ask that Senate bill 5957 be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MYERS. As I understand the Senator from Utah, if the amendment which is now offered is adopted it will render unnecessary the other bill pending on the same subject.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it, because Mr. Newell, of the Reclamation Service, tells me that the only lands affected by the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho are the Indian lands on the former Flathead Indian Reservation.

Mr. MYERS. That is agreeable to me, Mr. SMOOT. Of course I would not like to have both measures passed, because they affect the same lands.

Mr. MYERS. From what the Senator from Utah says, I am satisfied with either one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18336) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 23, after the word "receiving," to insert "Provided, That in the event of the death of Louisa V. John, helpless and dependent child of said Abia C. John, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Kate L. John the name of the said Louisa V. John shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 from and after the date of death of said Kate L. John," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Kate L. John, widow of Abia C. John, late of Company A and hospital steward, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Louisa V. John, helpless and dependent child of said Abia C. John, the additional pension herein granted shall cesse and determine: And provided further. That in the event of the death of Kate L. John the name of the said Louisa V. John shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 from and after the date of death of said Kate L. John.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Thomas Stubbs, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 19, to strike out:

The name of Louisa De Volve, former widow of Warren Collins, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 19, to strike

The name of Edward Blanchard, late of Company L, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty" and insert "thirty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Irvin Patrick, late of Company H, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of James E. Cothern, late of Company H, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 5, to strike

The name of Charles H. Dutton, late of Third Battery Vermont Vol-unteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 9, to strike

The name of Benjamin B. D. Derickson, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Samuel Cobean, late of Company C, Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I will ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public utilities commission.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I make an inquiry? Will the notice just given conflict with the unanimous-consent agreement made this afternoon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it does, the unanimous-consent agreement will hold.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not aware of an agreement for tomorrow. I will therefore change the notice to Saturday.

PRESERVATION OF FORT M'HENRY.

Mr. DU PONT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6354) to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War and to authorize its partial use as a museum of historic relics, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this fort has been abandoned.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I understand it is not now occupied by troops, and the War Department has approved the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it a part of the policy of the Government to give the use of abandoned forts for public purposes disconnected somewhat from the War Department?

Mr. DU PONT. I am not aware of any such policy.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator will recall that there were several measures to that general effect in the appropriation bill which came from the House and passed the Senate. I will be along that general line.

ask if this separate bill is along that general line.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I am not aware that the War Department has formulated any general policy in regard to forts which may be discontinued as military stations. This bill relates to Fort McHenry, which is associated with historical events, and the bill has been considered, I imagine, on its own merits apart from any general public policy.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask that the last paragraph of the bill be again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That said fort proper and appurtenant grounds may, with the assent and under the control of the Secretary of War, be occupied as a military museum under such rules and regulations as he, in his discretion, may prescribe.

Mr. RAYNER. If I may say a word about the bill, there is no objection to it at all. The fort is now a military reserva-The object is to use a part of it for a military museum if it is so desired. The War Department has approved this bill.

I have had two or three bills before the Senate of similar import, and this is about the only one that I could get the War Department to approve of. There has been an effort to use the grounds for other purposes. It being the place where the British were repulsed in 1812 and the scene where the Star Spangled Banner was composed, it is the desire that it shall remain as it is for military purposes and not be used for any purpose that would desecrate it. It is a perfectly unobjection-

Mr. SMOOT. It carries no appropriation?

Mr. RAYNER. It carries not a cent of appropriation, and this is done with the consent of the War Department.

Mr. DU PONT. There is not a cent of appropriation in the

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I notice that the bill designates officially the national anthem without naming it. is a controversy in this country as to whether or not My Coun-Tis of Thee is the national anthem or the Star Spangled anner. Would it not be well to name it?
Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator wants to change that he can call it the Star Spangled Banner, and that will be accepted as the national authem until some other is adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think the Senator's suggestion is entirely applicable to my inquiry. The bill should be definite. If you are going to use the term at all you should name the anthem.

Mr. RAYNER. There is no objection to naming it.
Mr. HEYBURN. Which will you name?
Mr. RAYNER. We can not name any other. It was the Star Spangled Banner that was composed there.

Mr. HEYBURN. When was the Star Spangled Banner made the national anthem?

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator can put in "The Star Spangled Banner." It was composed at that place.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I will not take that responsibility. was merely calling attention to the fact that it is a question whether the Star Spangled Banner or My County 'Tis of Thee is the national anthem. It is hardly worth while to be careless about a thing of this kind. If it is worth doing, it is worth doing correctly.

Mr. RAYNER. The bill does not make anything a national anthem. It simply says that the national anthem was composed

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair suggest that after the bill is passed the preamble may be stricken out?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to hear the statement in the preamble read, and let us see what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the preamble.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas Fort McHenry, the birthplace of our national anthem and made memorable by the repulse of the British fleet—

Mr. HEYBURN. That is sufficient for my purpose. I wish to know what evidence there is that Fort McHenry was the birthplace of the national anthem.

Mr. DU PONT. I shall move to strike out the preamble.
Mr. HEYBURN. There should be no reference to it whatever.
Mr. SMOOT. That is in the preamble, and by moving to strike it out it will do away with that question.
The VICE PRESIDENT. That can be done only after the bill is passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that; but a motion had not been made to strike it out until after I had called attention to I suppose it will be stricken out.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DU PONT. I move to strike out the preamble. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

WIND RIVER RESERVATION LANDS, WYO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16101) providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that any person who, prior to December 16, 1911, made homestead entry on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, and has not abandoned the same, and who has been unable to secure water for the irrigation of the lands covered by his entry, may secure title to the same upon the submission of satisfactory proof that he has established and maintained actual bona fide residence upon his land for a period of not less than eight months and upon payment of all sums remaining due on said land as provided for by the act of March 3, 1905.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREFERENCE RIGHT OF ENTRY.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (8.5309) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880—Twenty-first Statutes at Large, page 140.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

And provided further, That this act shall apply to all claims, locations, or entries made under the above-mentioned acts, where no adverse claims have intervened.

So as to make the bill read:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That any settler upon lands theretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to the provisions of section 1 to 5 of the enlarged homestead acts of February 19, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 639), and June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 531), shall be entitled to the preference right of entry accorded by this section, provided he shall have plainly marked the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed as his homestead: And provided further, That after the designation by the Secretary of the Interior of public lands for entry under the nonresidence provisions of the enlarged homestead acts of February 19, 1909, and June 17, 1910, any person who shall have plainly marked the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed under said provisions of law and made valuable improvements thereon shall have a preference right to enter the lands so claimed and improved at any time within three months after the date on which such lands become subject to entry; but such right shall forfeit unless the settler or claimant under the provisions of the enlarged homestead acts shall annually cultivate and improve the lands in the form and manner and to the extent therein required following date of initiation of his claim hereunder: And provided further, That this act shall apply to all claims, locations, or entries made under the above-mentioned acts, where no adverse claims have intervened."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In line 9, page 1, the word "section" should be "sections," so as to read "sections 1 to 5."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask a question of the Senator. Is this intended to cover some special emergency or is it intended for general legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. It is intended for general legislation. It is giving the entryman under an enlarged homestead, where lands are unsurveyed, the same preference right the regular homesteader has on 160 acres, or, in other words, the Senator's State and the State of Utah have so much unsurveyed land, and a great deal of the land has been designated to be taken up under the enlarged-homestead act. As long as it is unsurveyed they go and enter the land and they have no preference right under the enlarged-homestead act. This simply gives them that preference right on unsurveyed lands, the same as the entryman has upon the lands entered under the general homestead act.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will just leave a comment in the Record on this bill. It permits a man to mortgage that which he has no right to under the existing law, at the time he does it, for the purpose of keeping off legitimate settlers who might want that land.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President—— Mr. HEYBURN. He takes first his homestead, then he takes an additional homestead, and then he takes the preferential right to enter an area of land adjoining it. I merely desired to leave this tag on this legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that is not—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to that.
Mr. BRISTOW. And that it be voted upon on that day.
Mr. HEYBURN. I object.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho objects.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that I recognize that there are not a great many Senators here this afternoon and there are a number present who have bills that are not contested which they are very anxious to have considered by the Senate. I will not make the motion which I have in mind, to proceed to the consideration of the bill, as I did when the bill was called up the other day, because I know Senators desire to dispose of some uncontested measures. But I want to say now that, if I am able, I shall insist upon this measure being taken up and disposed of by a vote of the Senate, and I shall not be content to have it put aside as it has been by a filibuster, as it was the other day. It is a measure that has merit and it ought to be considered now.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know who filibustered.
Mr. BRISTOW. I shall not insist on its consideration this

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has been recognized.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Baisrow] referred to having the bill laid aside by a fillbuster. I had no intention whatever of a filibuster. There were a great many Senators on both sides of the Chamber who asked that the calendar, under Rule VIII, be taken up that bills to which there was no objection might be passed; and it was in carrying out their request and doing what I thought was proper that I felt like the calendar ought to go on regularly. I do not want the Senator to think that I had any intention whatever of engaging in any filibuster.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to say, in regard to the statement made by the Senator from Utah, that the Senate by a very decided vote expressed its desire to take up the measure and consider it, and it was the persistent manner by which the quorum was broken that prevented it from being considered. Now, the purpose of the Senator from Utah might not have been to filibuster, but the action of the Senate was a filibuster that prevented the consideration of the bill at that time.

Mr. SMOOT. There was no filibuster about it, Mr. President.

MARSHAL'S SALARY IN DISTRICT OF NEVADA.

Mr. NIXON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3925) providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Nevada.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand" "three thousand five hundred," so as to make the and insert bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States marshal for the district of Nevada shall be at the rate of $3,500 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CAPE CHARLES, VA.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5668) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Cape Charles, in the State of Virginia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty-five," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erccted thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and ap-proaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices in the town of Cape Charles, State of Virginia, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN FLORIDA.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2346) to establish a fish hatchery and biological station in the third congressional district

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the words "station in," to strike out "the third congressional district of," and in line 8, after the word "point," to strike out "in said district," so as to read:

That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a fish-cultural and biological station in the State of Florida, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the United States Fish Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, after line 9, at the end of the bill, to add the following proviso:

of the bill, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this bill, the State of Florida, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Florida."

FREDERICK BECKSTEIN AND OTHERS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4599) for the relief of Frederick Beckstein and others.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the personal or legal representatives of the following estates, which paid taxes in the New York internal-revenue districts, namely, estates of Frederick Beckstein, James Dundon, Henry Gade, Juan A. Guerra, Hugh Higgin, Eugene A. Hoffman, George Hubbel, Joseph F. Ismay, Isaac G. Johnson, Jane Kelley, Louis Manges, Anna M. Merritt, Henry C. Miner, John Murtha, Theresa Nathan, Jacob D. Nordlinger, Augustus F. Pearce, Louise B. Quackenbos, Margaret S. Salisbury, Gouverneur M. Smith, Charles E. Tilford, John H. Wadsworth, Caroline A. Wadsworth, Margaret M. Bilderback, Cord Gerken, Charles P. Haughian, Lydia A. Oakley, and Arthur S. C. Wurtele, such sums of money as have been in any manner collected from those estates as internal-revenue taxes paid on legacies and distributive shares of personal property to the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, the sums to be refunded in accordance with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Knowlton v. Moore (reported in United States Supreme Court Reports, vol. 178, p. 41), any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

and passed.

ASSISTANCE AND SALVAGE AT SEA.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4930) to carry into effect the provisions of a convention for the unification of certain rules with respect to assistance and salvage at sea.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to offer two amendments to the billone in section 2, page 2, line 1, to strike out the words "fine of not to exceed five" and to insert "penalty of not exceeding

The object of that amendment is to make the bill conform to a statute already in force, passed in 1890, relating to the penalty for failing to aid in case of collision. It seems desirable that the penalty in the two cases be the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 2, page 2, line 1, after the words "to a," it is proposed to strike out "fine of not to exceed five" and insert "penalty of not exceeding one," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the master or person in charge of a vessel shall, so far as he can do so without serious danger to his own vessel, crew, or passengers, render assistance to every person who is found at sea in danger of being lost; and if he fails to do so, he shall, upon conviction, be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. In the next line I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Secretary. In the same section, page 2, line 2, after the words "for a," it is proposed to strike out "period not to exceed five" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "term not exceeding two," so as to read: "or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Burton, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to harmonize the national law of salvage to the provisions of an international convention for the unification of certain rules with respect to assistance and salvage at sea, and for other purposes.

SYSTEM OF RURAL COOPERATIVE CREDIT.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions in other countries.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "appoint," to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; in line 4, after the word "commission," to insert "of three members, 4, after the word "commission," to insert "of three members, not more than two of whom shall be of one political party"; in line 8, after the word "countries," to strike out "and to fix the"; in line 9, after the word "commission," to insert "shall be $5,000 each"; on page 2, line 9, after the words "sum of," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty"; in line 10, after the word "than," to strike out "January 1, 1913," and insert "one year after appointment"; and in line 15, after the name "United States," to insert "and at that date this commission shall coase to exist" so as to make the joint resolution read. shall cease to exist," so as to make the joint resolution read:

shall cease to exist," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved*, etc.. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of three members, not more than two of whom shall be of one political party, to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and of cooperative rural credit unions in other countries; compensation of the members of the commission shall be $5,000 each. Said commission is hereby authorized to employ such clerks, stenggraphers, and other assistants as may be necessary, which employées shall be paid such compensation as the commission may deem just and reasonable, upon a certificate to be issued by the chairman of the commission. For the purposes of its investigations the commission shall be authorized to incur, and have paid upon the certificate of its chairman, such expenses as the commission shall deem necessary: Provided, however*, That the total expenses authorized or incurred for compensation, employees, and otherwise shall not exceed the sum of $30,000. Said commission shall, not later than one year after appointment, submit a report to Congress, embodying therein recommendations as to how the systems of such land-mortgage banks and rural credit unions may best be adapted to the needs and requirements of the people of the United States, and at that date this commission shall cease to exist.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 8, after the word "countries," it is proposed to insert "as well as other organizations or institutions for the lending of money on land."

Mr. BURTON. I do not desire in any way to prejudice this joint resolution; I thoroughly believe in it; but I thought while the resolution as introduced here they might also investigate other large general institutions in France and in other countries which have to do with the lending of money on land.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I believe that the joint resolution as originally drawn and amended by the committee includes all those institutions. I ask that the Secretary read the joint resolution as amended, so that we may see just how it reads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary

will read as requested.

The Secretary read the joint resolution as amended.
Mr. BURTON. I will state that the joint resolution referred originally merely to cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions. In addition to those mentioned there are institutions of larger scope, general in their nature, for the lending of money on land.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron].

The Secretary. On page 1, line 8, after the word "coun-les," it is proposed to insert "as well as other organizations or institutions for the lending of money on land," so as to rend .

To investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and of cooperative rural credit unions in other countries, as well as other organizations or institutions for the lending of money on land.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to that amendment. Mr. SMOOT. That will open the door, will it not, for a very wide investigation, for I take it for granted—

Mr BURTON. I do not think so. Those institutions are

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so. Those institutions are comparatively few in number, and the investigation to be conducted with reference to them will not occupy any considerable

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, practically there is only one institution of that kind, and it operates in France and its cololes. That is the Credit Foncier, as it is called.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose that is the mother institution, as it is called, but it has branches all over France.

Mr. DU PONT. It has branches, of course, but the one central institution deals with the branches in the colonies.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, what the Senator from North Dakota desires to have investigated is the cooperative plan in Germany and in France, so as to ascertain whether that cooperative plan in those countries can be applied to this country.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that was the purpose.
Mr. SMOOT. It was the purpose to ascertain if such cooperative institutions could be established in this country for the purpose of lending money.

Mr. GRONNA. My intention in offering the resolution, as introduced, was to provide for an investigation of cooperative unions.

I should like to ask if all this information can not be found in publications which now exist? Why should we be sending commissions around the world? If they are matters of any importance, I am sure they have already been set out in a way that we can avail ourselves of the information.

Mr. GALLINGER. The information can be obtained through our consuls and the State Department.

Mr. BACON. Yes: the information might be obtained through our consuls. We are complaining about unnecessary expenses, but it looks to me as if we are going far out of the way in this instance. It is a comparatively small matter, but, as the saying goes, "many a mickle makes a muckle."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator. Mr. HEYBURN. I was only led to a

I was only led to acquiesce in the report on this measure in the committee upon the understanding that it was confined to these two classes of institutions in Germany. It was not considered by the committee that the scope would be extended in any way whatever, otherwise it would probably have met with a very different reception.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator if the committee, when they passed upon this joint resolution, looked into the question as to whether all this information was not to be had in existing publications?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I suggested, if I may go that far, that every bit of the information sought to be ascertained under this joint resolution is now available, and, so far joint resolution; I thoroughly believe in it; but I thought while as I am concerned, I have no difficulty whatever in getting at it, this commission was making the investigation provided for in nor would any other Senator. But this joint resolution provides for a commission limited to one year, and by a stretch of conscience and the addition of some imagination as to what good might be accomplished I was led to acquiesce; otherwise I should have made some more determined resistance. Now, if this measure is to be amended so as to widen its scope I shall object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President— The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is now being considered by unanimous consent, which has already been

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it had only been read for informa-

The VICE PRESIDENT. But since then amendments have

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, if the rule goes that far-of course I had it in mind that if any attempt should be made to widen the scope of the joint resolution I would object to its consideration—I may have waited too long.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair fears that the Senator waived his right by not stating so at the time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was not present when Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was not present when the joint resolution was read, but since coming into the Cham-ber I am impressed with the feeling that we are running pretty nearly mad on the matter of appointing commissions for all sorts of things. I recall the fact that a few years ago there was a great desire to obtain information regarding the pension laws of the several countries of the world. It was suggested to me that a commission would be the right thing, and that I might possibly get the chairmanship of that commission, as I was then chairman of the Committee on Pensions. I thought there was an easier way and a less expensive way, and so I addressed a letter to the Secretary of State, asking him if that could not be done by or through the consuls of the United States. He very promptly responded that he would undertake the work. The result was that in a comparatively short time every pension law of every civilized nation on the face of the earth was in my possession, and it did not cost many dollars to accomplish that object.

I do not know how desirable this information may be. think it likely when we get it we will do nothing with it; but it does occur to me that if it is necessary to get this information, it can be obtained through the State Department without the expense of another commission. I have been away for three or four days, but I think I have noticed that one or two commissions have been created since I left, and pretty soon, if this thing goes on, I think we had better turn over the work of the Government to commissions, and relieve ourselves of a great deal of unnecessary labor.

If I were permitted to object to the consideration of the joint resolution I would do so; but I understand that I came in too late to do that. I shall, however, want the privilege of voting against it when it is submitted to the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I regard this investigation as of extreme importance. We all recognize the fact that it is necessary for the farmers, in order to increase the productive power of their farms, to make investments along certain lines which have not thus far been regarded as profitable. The farmer in many portions of the country has cultivated fertile, virgin land. Much of this land, while not exhausted, is dimin-ished in productive capacity. Now, if the farmer proposes to increase this productive capacity by drainage or fertilizing or any other improvement essential for bettering the quality of his fand and for promoting the development of the agricultural resources of the country he must expend a larger amount of He is now under a very great disadvantage in that capital. rates of interest upon farm loans, generally speaking, as compared with rates upon loans on other kinds of realty and investments in numerous bonds are high. Yet many very necessary betterments on farming property will not give assurance of a large return. These betterments will not be made on borrowed capital unless rates of interest are comparatively low.

I do not think this investigation with reference to cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions merely will disclose the most desirable means of obtaining loans upon farms. I think some central institution, with the necessary branches, would better serve the purpose, such as the one mentioned by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]-the

The Monetary Commission in its report recognizes the desirability of loans upon farms, as well as upon other landed property, by recommending an amendment to the national banking law to the effect that 30 per cent of time deposits may be loaned upon land. One advantage of great central institutions is that they tend to equalize rates of interest in different portions of the information in the Encyclopedia Brittanica.

the country. The census report of 1890 contained a statement of the rates charged farmers in the different States of the Union. My recollection is these rates at that time ranged from about 5 per cent to 12 per cent. There is no reason why there should be this disparity; and it was my desire in offering the amendment to cause an investigation to be made of larger institutions organized for the business of lending money to farmers on a very large scale. Such an investigation can very readily be made in connection with an examination of cooperative land-mortgage banks and the cooperative rural credit unions.

However, as I understand that the amendment provokes some opposition, and I am unwilling to see the joint resolution defeated, I am inclined to withdraw the amendment. I think, however, it points toward the obtaining of information which will tend to improve present conditions and make it possible to obtain loans on farms more readily than by the cooperative institutions which, useful as they may be, must be rather local than general or national in their character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the inclination of the Senator from Ohio lead him to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. BURTON. I withdraw it.
Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. President, I first objected to the joint resolution because I did not exactly understand it, but I withdrew my objection in order that it might have consideration.

It does seem to me that there is too much money provided for the purpose, unless it is intended to make a junketing trip for a commission into France and Germany. I do not see that those commissions which travel all over the world do very much good. We had the Monetary Commission, which spent a large amount of money. We had the River and Harbor Commission, which of money. went to Europe and spent forty or fifty thousand dollars. Other commissions have gone abroad.

The joint resolution provides a salary of $5,000 for three men, which is $15,000. It seems to me they ought to get a pretty good clerk at $3,000. That would leave $2,000 for incidental expenses. I believe they could do the work just as well here as to go over there. They could get the data here. By communicating with our consuls they could get the data from abroad. They could get the data here from the books in the Library as to all they want to know about. They can get it from books which here here published. I have the fall they want to know about. which have been published. I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Scherary. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment, on page 2, line 9, by striking out "thirty" and inserting "twenty," so as to read "twenty thousand dollars."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think $20,000 is very much less objectionable than $30,000, but I believe any sum is objectionable, and consequently I shall vote against the amendment, not that I prefer the $30,000, but because I am opposed to any appropriation. Why should we have this commission, especially when there is no Senator here who can stand up in his place and say that he knows definitely the fact that right across the square in the Congressional Library there can not be found books which will give every particle of information that the commission would seek?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that there is no such complete information to be had in the Congressional Library.

Mr. BACON. Of course I must take the Senator's statement to that effect. I suppose he has been over to the Library and made an exhaustive examination and has failed to find it.

Mr. GRONNA. I have not been able to get such information. Mr. BACON. Has the Senator made a diligent examination to see whether or not this information is in the Congressional Library

Mr. GRONNA. There is certainly no complete report— Mr. BACON. I can not hear the Senator from North Dakota.

There is certainly no report made by a commission completely covering the subject.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of that. I am speaking of the question whether there are any publications. I am asking the Senator whether or not he has made diligent inquiry at the Congressional Library to find out whether there are any publications giving a description of these banks and their method of proceeding and the kind of work they do. I think it is a remarkable fact if they are not there. I believe he can find

Mr. GRONNA. There are some publications that touch on this particular question; but there is not, at least I have not been able to find one, any document that will give full information regarding this question. I believe the subject is of sufficient importance to expend $30,000 to get the information. The joint resolution simply provides for the appointment of a com-mission to get facts. The farming communities of this country are certainly entitled to that much.

Mr. BACON. I want the farmers to have it, but I do not want to go to any unnecessary expense to get it. I think it can be found in books already in existence which are available, and if not the information can all be gotten through United States consuls without any additional expense.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to ask a question. Could not all the information the Senator desires to get be secured through our consular agencies?

Mr. GRONNA. I have not been able to Mr. CURTIS. Has the Senator tried? I have not been able to get such information.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. And they refused to give it to him? Mr. GRONNA. Refused to give it? Oh, no; not at all. I have been unable to find any document that will give the desired information regarding this question. It is no small question.

I fully realize it is no small question, but I do realize that all over the world we have consular agents who, if properly applied to, would furnish all the information desired on this question.

I remember also that some years ago when the financial question was agitating the people of the country there were plenty of documents printed, giving the plans followed in France and every other plan you could think of. I think with a few hours digging in the library for the period covering the years 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897 one could find all the information desired on this subject. Probably by going to the Monetary Commission one could get a lot of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the fact that these are corporations, and their terms or conditions of association are published facts, and their annual reports, or reports made even more frequently than that, give all the information in regard to these loans and the rates of interest. Then there is, I think, in the possession of some Senators here, at least I have had in my possession, and I think I could put my hands on it without much delay, a complete discussion of this question sent out by those who are advocating it. But being corporations, you can get the official statements. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. GRONNA. It is true there are publications. I have in my hand one, printed in Rome, giving information about rural banks and rural credit unions; but I do say there is no complete information showing the benefits to be derived, not only financially, but socially, from a thorough system of cooperative unions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CURTIS. What is the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty," so as to read "$20,000." [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is manifest a quorum could not be secured this evening, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

secured this evening, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 19, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. Shinn has been employed for about four years in this work and has received compensation at the rate of $150 per month, excepting during the time he was in the employ of the House, when his service was rendered without compensation.

Mrs. Grey was employed less than a year ago and has received a salary of $75 per month. She has spent much time in gathering information for the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, of which Mr. Graham, of Illinois, is chairman.

Neither Mr. Shinn nor Mrs. Grey has received any money from me, or from any other source so far as I have knowledge, excepting that which has been paid them by the Democratic congressional committee.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16306) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment. The only change in the House bill made by the Senate was to strike out the preamble in the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I request that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 19212), with the Senate amendments duly numbered, be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, be printed. Is there objection? Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman not the right to have this printed without unanimous consent?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly. I did not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. Then, why ask unanimous consent? Mr. SULZER. The Chair misunderstood me. I did not ask unanimous consent; I merely requested to have it done.

Mr. GARNER. It is not necessary to ask the House to have it done.

Mr. SULZER. I thought so; but the clerk was in doubt about it

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the bill has not been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If it had been referred to the committee, then the gentleman from Texas would be right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it has always been customary to have these appropriation bills printed when they were taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and the conference agreed to. The bill was then printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, that was my understanding of the practice of the House, but the clerk of the committee in-forms me that he would like to have this request made, as there is some doubt whether he had the right to do the printing.

think he has the right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall make no objection; but if the practice of the past was without warrant of rule, then the rules ought to be changed so as to give the warrant for the printing of appropriation bills with Senate amendments, although they have not been referred to the committee of the House.

Mr. SULZER. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to agree with the gentleman from Illinois, as a matter of practice, and it will be done hereafter, without any further order or ceremony. The Chair thinks the practice that the gentleman suggests is correct.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives. had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. Nelson, and Mr. Culberson as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5333) to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 4552. An act for the relief of the estate of Benjamin B. Cox, and others.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4552. An act for the relief of the estate of Benjamin B. Cox, and others; to the Committee on Claims.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 444) to change the rules of the House temporarily for the consideration of H. R. 21279, have considered the same and report the following substitute with the recommendation that it be adopted (H. Rept.

lowing substitute with the formula of this rule it shall be in order 570):
"Resolved, That after the adoption of this rule it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 21279, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, to consider the new legislation on said bill hereinafter mentioned notwithstanding the general rules of the House."

That it shall be the duty of the President on the 1st day of July, 1913, to take charge and possession of all the property of such express companies condemned and appropriated by this act, in the name of and by the authority of the United States of America; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to employ said property and facilities in conjunction with the postal service, and to henceforth conduct said express service.

"POWERS OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to make and promulgate such rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be subject to review and revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the courts in like manner and with like effect as if said rules and regulations had been made and promulgated by a railway company or other common carrier.

"Compensation for railroad transportation."

"Sec. 4. That during the months of August and December, 1912, and April, 1913, the weights of matter carried over the respective railroads, under contracts with the express companies during the pendency thereof, shall be taken for each railroad company in respect to such contract, under regulations to be provided by the Post Office Department; and the amount of money paid for the carriage thereof to the railroad shall be divided by the mileage of such railroad over which such matter is carried; and thereafter the Postmaster General shall, if the railroad company consent thereto, cause to be paid to such railroad company the amount per mile owing to such railroad under such contract as thus computed; and thereafter annually at such times as may be determined upon by the Postmaster General such matter shall be weighed, and the railroad company shall be paid monthly for the excess weight carried by it, over the first weighing herein provided, such sums as may be agreed upon for such excess weight; but if such Postmaster General and such railroad company shall fall to agree upon a basis of compensation for such excess weights, then the same shall be paid for according to the terms and provisions of the contract condemned in such case. demned in such case.

"ENEWAL OF TRANSPORTATION CONTRACTS.

"Sec. 5. That at the expiration or termination of any contract between an express company and a railroad condemned by this act (or at any time before, if such railroad company shall consent thereto) the Postmaster General may contract with such railroad company for the transportation of postal express matter; and if deemed advantageous, upon cars provided by the postal department, which may be transferred without unloading onto the lines of other railroad companies, at such rates of compensation and upon such principles of computation thereof as may be agreed upon, with the right of review and revision of the same by the Interstate Commerce Commission as hereinafter provided. And in case the Postmaster General and such railroad company, after the expiration or termination of the contract with an express company, shall fail to agree upon the terms and provisions of the renewal thereof, they shall submit their respective contentions with reference thereto to the said Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall thereupon have plenary power to declare the terms and provisions which said contract shall contain; but from any determination with respect to any such contract the terms and provisions of which have been so declared by the said Interstate Commerce Commission an appeal shall lie to the Court of Commerce, which shall enjoy like power to amend and revise the same.

"APPRAISEMENT OF EXPRESS COMPANIES.

"Sec. 6. That immediately after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to appraise the value of the property condemned and appropriated by the United States of America in section 1 of this act and award to the respective express companies just compensation therefor. Each commissioner shall take oath to justly perform such duties before some judge of the courts of the United States. The said Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty to summon witnesses, with books and papers, before it, for either of the parties, and require such witnesses to testify, and it shall give to each party a full hearing; and it shall be the duty of such commission, on or before the 7th day of May, 1913, to file a separate award of appraisement for each express company condemned under this act, with respect to the property condemned, and give notice of the filing of such award to the Postmaster General and to such express company. And if either party shall be dissatisfied with the amount of said award, the same may, upon appeal by either party, be reviewed and revised by the Court of Commerce, sitting as a court of review, with respect thereto; and from its determination a further appeal may be taken by either of the parties to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Second. On page 25, at the end of line 8 of H. R. 21279, the following:

"That for the purposes of this act certain highways of the several States, and the civil subdivisions thereof, are classified as follows:

"Class A shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide composed of shells, vitrified brick, or macadam, graded, crowned, compacted, and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a firm, smooth surface, and all other roads having a road track not less than 9 feet wide of a construction equally smooth, firm, durable, and expensive, and continuously kept in proper repair. Class B shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide composed of burnt clay, gravel, or a proper combination of sand and clay, sand and gravel, or rock and gravel, constructed and maintained in such manner as to have continuously a firm, smooth surface. Class C shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, so constructed and crowned as to shed water quickly into the side ditches, continuously kept well compacted and with a firm, smooth surface by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times. That whenever the United States shall use any highways of any State, or civil subdivision thereof, which falls within classes A, B, and C, for the purpose of transporting rural mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rate of $25 per annum per mile for highways of class B, and $15 per annum per mile for hi of the respective highways entitled to compensation under this act.

"The provisions of this paragraph shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913."

Third. After line 15, page 28, of H. R. 21270 the following:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, or association or corporation, to enter or to have entered into the malis of the United States any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical of like kind, unless such publication shall have plainly printed in a conspicuous place therein the name or names of the managing editor or managing editors, the name or names of the publisher or publishers, and the name or names of the owner or owners, including all stockholders owning stock of the par value of $500 or more, of such periodical publication. Any person, association, or corporation who shall violate any provision of this act shall be punished, for each violation of any provision thereof, by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000."

On the subject of parcel post and postal express, when reached in order, there shall be 15 hours of general debate, and on the other subjects included in this resolution there shall be 5 hours of general debate, to follow immediately on the adoption of this resolution.

During the reading of the foregoing the following occurred:

During the reading of the foregoing the following occurred: Mr. CANNON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, those of us who have not seen this rule can not follow the rapid and unusual reading of the Clerk.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that 500 copies of this rule have been printed and placed before Members.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but I suppose the rule is to be considered at once, and for one, not having seen it until this morning, I would like to follow the reading of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Clerk will read slowly and distinctly.

The Clerk then concluded the reading of the resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have corrected a clerical error which appears in the report which has just been read. On page 7 of the report, in the first line at the top of the page, the figure "8," after the word "line," should be "7," and I ask unanimous consent to have that correction made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to substitute for the figure "8," after the word "line" in the first line on page 7 of the report, the figure "7." Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much time he thinks he or his side would desire for debate on the rule?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman that we have 45 minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, we would want more than that. Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I should think several hours on a side should be granted. Many of us have read this rule for the first time

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman understands that this is merely a rule to consider certain matters, and four days of general debate are provided under its provisions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we better have a few hours of general debate on the rule and less time for speaking to empty benches in general debate on the bill afterwards.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How much time would the gentleman from Illinois suggest?

Mr. MANN. We ought to have at least several hours on a side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman seems to want more time than is actually necessary. It strikes me that an hour on a side would be sufficient.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, here is a rule providing that there shall be in order on the Post Office appropriation bill the substance of another bill that has never even been reported to the House by any committee-

Mr. DALZELL. Two other bills.

Mr. MANN. Another provision making in order on the Post Office appropriation bill a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Agriculture to the House; another provision making in order on the Post Office bill a provision I think that never has been introduced into the House, certainly never has been reported to the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Pennsylvania were not so wide apart, it seems we might agree. One says 45 minutes and the other several hours.

Mr. DALZELL. I spoke simply from the requests that have been made to me for time on this side.

Mr. MANN. Well, nobody could get a copy of this bill, unless members of the Committee on Rules, until this morning. I en-deavored to get a copy yesterday and was unable to do so. I sent to the document room this morning and endeavored to get a copy and was unable to do so, and I could not get a copy a copy and was unable to do so, and I could not get a copy until the House met to-day.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It could not be made available until this morning; it was printed last night.

Mr. MANN. It could have been printed a week ago.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It was not reported until yesterday.

Mr. MANN. I know; but it was acted upon by the committee longer ago than yesterday.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken; we acted yesterday afternoon and it was printed as soon as possible, and we were ready to furnish a copy at any time.

Mr. MANN. I knew several days ago what the Committee on Rules had done, and I supposed it was acted upon but I did not know whether the Committee on Rules had acted upon it, but with the matter as now printed it would be impossible for me with convenience to read it, because I do not undertake to read brevier type.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, would the gentleman be satisfied with an hour and a quarter to a side?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think we ought to have longer time. Mr. HENRY of Texas. How much would the gentleman like to have?

Mr. MANN. Why not see how much the House wants? Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am trying to do that now.

Mr. MANN. Why not proceed and see? Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to come to an agreement about time if I can.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Michigan? Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I would like to ask this question: Why can not we proceed to-day with the other portions of the Post Office bill and then bring this rule up to-morrow when we all would have an opportunity to read the rule and think and talk about it in the meantime?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There are other important matters to-morrow, and they will have to come up.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then let it come up on Saturday,

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There are also important matters for

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then on Monday. Mr. HENRY of Texas. You will have four days for general debate after this rule is adopted to discuss the merits of it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley]? Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas to yield to me to submit a parliamentary inquiry, which is whether it is in order to offer an amendment to this rule to return to a section of the bill upon which the committee has already passed; and if so, when that amendment will be in order?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order, if it is germane, until after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I shall offer such an amendment to that section

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Texas if he is going to move the previous question on the rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not like to, but probably shall have to do it. I would like for the House to have at least an hour and a quarter or an hour and a half to a side, if the gentleman will agree, to discuss this rule.

Mr. MANN. I am speaking of the previous question as applied to amendments to the rule, whether it is the intention of the gentleman to permit the House to pass upon propositions affecting the different propositions in the bill by amendment, to strike out anything in the rule, or to insert additional matter in the rule by way of amendment?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; it is my intention to move the previous question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had not finished when I was interrupted. I was going to say that it is my purpose to offer at the proper time an amendment proposing to return to that section that was amended by the adoption of a proviso abolishing Sunday service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have that privilege unless the previous question was ordered and providing his amendment was germane to anything in the proposed rule.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to make it germane.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will my colleague on the Committee on Rules let the debate run for a time, and see about how much will be required?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would prefer not to do that if we can come to an agreement. I am willing to agree to 3 hours discussion on this rule, 1 hour and 30 minutes on a side. In addition, there will be 4 days general debate on all propositions in here, and then a discussion under the 5-minute rule, and that will give abundance of time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In making the suggestion, I was thinking that it would not consume as much as three hours under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And that is twice as much as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], who has been always conservative as to granting time, has asked for.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hardly think that three hours will be consumed in this debate.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that three hours of discussion be devoted to the rule, and that at the end of that time the chairman be recognized for the purpose of moving the previous question on the rule, and that the time be equally divided between this side and the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this rule be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], at the end of which time the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] will be recognized to move the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state it.
Mr. MANN. If three hours of general debate should be allowed-an hour and a half on a side-would not the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] be entitled to the floor at the end of three hours and have the right to move the previous question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so; but the gentleman put it in his request and the Chair did not see any particular harm in stating the request as made.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman would have the right, an objection to it would not make any difference.

The SPEAKER. At the end of three hours the gentleman in charge of the resolution can move the previous question.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield for a question.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of propositions involved in this rule, some coming from one committee and some from another committee. On the parcel-post and postal-express proposition there are to be 15 hours of general debate, and on other propositions involved in the bill, including the road proposition, coming from the Agricultural Committee, there are to be five hours of general debate. I would like to ask the gentleman who will control the time on each proposition?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. As I understand it, an agreement has already been reached by which the time is to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] on one side and the senior Republican [Mr. DALZELL] on the other side of the

Mr. LEVER. I had in mind that inasmuch as the propositions came from different committees, the time might be controlled by the members of the committees from which the propositions came

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think there will be no trouble about an agreement as to division. The gentleman from Tennessee

[Mr. Moon] is fair.

Mr. LEVER. We all concede that; but I thought the gentleman had something in his mind as to the matter about which have spoken.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK]?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to ask a question about this rule. The first paragraph says:

Resolved, That after the adoption of this rule it shall be in order, in the consideration of H. R. 21279, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, to consider the new legislation on said bill hereinafter mentioned notwithstanding the general rules of the House.

Now, my understanding is that the gentleman and the Committee on Rules were trying to save these provisions from a point of order as to their being new legislation. Now, does not the language of the resolution here also save these provisions from all other points of order? Would it be possible under this rule, if adopted, to make a point of order under the Holman rule against certain amendments?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, I think that the rule preserves those matters, so that they may be considered by the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is pretty broad, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; it is very broad. It was intended to be broad, so that the House might consider these matters of legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the request be submitted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand from a hasty hearing of the reading of the rule, this rule, if adopted, makes in order any general legislation touching matters referred to by way of amendments that are germane.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the request be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] asks unanimous consent that debate on this proposed rule be limited to three hours, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], and that at the end of the three hours he be recognized to move the previous question. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, that means that I will not have the privilege of offering the amendment which I indicated a while ago. It has not yet been prepared. I am working on it now, and I do not want to be cut off.

The SPEAKER. That means, if the previous question is sustained, that the gentleman will be cut out. If it is voted down, anybody can offer an amendment that is germane.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; I know that. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] if he will not agree that at the close of the general debate, before he moves the previous question,

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not hear what the gentleman says

Mr. LANGLEY. I was explaining that I have not yet had an opportunity to prepare the amendment to which I referred a moment ago, but that I am getting it ready, and I want consent to offer it before you are recognized to move the previous

Mr. HENRY of Texas. What is the gentleman's amend-

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to propose an amendment which will provide that a motion will be in order to return to the paragraph of the bill to which an amendment was adopted by the committee the other day abolishing Sunday post-office service.

Mr. FINLEY. That is in the Post Office bill?
Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have no objection to the gentleman's getting unanimous consent to return to that part of the bill and offering an amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker— Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; but somebody else might have objec-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do. Mr. FINLEY. It will be in order to move to return to that, I take it, if it is the will of the House. There will be no trouble

Mr. LANGLEY. My understanding of the rule is different, if the gentleman means it can be done by a majority vote: I understand that it will require unanimous consent to return to that paragraph.

Mr. FINLEY. The rule under consideration does not apply to the provisions of the bill that have been passed over.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course not. That is just what I am driving at. I want to amend it so that it will apply.

Mr. FINLEY. The rule under consideration here has no reference to the body of the bill, which has been read under the five-minute rule. It has no reference at all to it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Everybody knows that, I take it, unless it is the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Of course, I understand the gentleman from Kentucky has another idea about it; otherwise he would not be attempting to amend the rule here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Kentucky will consult me privately about it, I can tell him how that can be done. [Laughter.] Mr. LANGLEY.

I know the gentleman from New York thinks he can tell me, and doubtless he can to his satisfaction,

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the bill is in the House the gentleman can demand a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course, I understand that; but there will be no opportunity for debate then, and I have secured some important data since the amendment was adopted that I want to bring to the attention of the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield for a question.

Mr. RAKER. A question, that is all, on the first part of the rule, which provides, following the word "Resolved"—

That after the adoption of this rule it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 21279-

And then it goes on to say that the new legislation shall be considered. I want to ask the gentleman a question, Whether or not, in considering this new legislation, or any part of it, Members will be permitted to add amendments to the proposed new legislation set out in the rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Undoubtedly, if they are germane.
Mr. RAKER. Just one more question. Would the subject of star routes be germane to the bill where it provides for parcelpost on rural-delivery routes?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman would have to ask the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to make that ruling. I do not happen to be in touch with him, and do not

Mr. RAKER. I would like to get a little information on that matter, as I think the question of star routes ought to be con- Dyer sidered with reference to parcel post when applied to rural

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think probably the gentleman will have no difficulty when he gets to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] will consent that I may have the opportunity of offering this amendment before the previous question is put, I shall not object.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Texas does consent, will object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. LANGLEY. I object.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "aye," those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

'The question was taken; and there were-yeas 164, nays 114, answered "present" 13, not voting 100, as follows:

From April 18 to April 21:

Mr. Gregg of Texas with Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL,

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from New York, Mr. FAIRCHILD, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.
Mr. HOBSON. I voted "aye." I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. Hobson, and he answered present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. Further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Texas has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, recognizing the importance of the matters embraced in the proposed rule, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that there be two hours devoted to the discussion of the rule, one hour to be controlled by myself and one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dal-ZELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this rule be confined to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Pennylvania. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that I have been assured by the chairman of the committee and others that an understanding has been reached that the provision in the section to which I have referred, abolishing Sunday service, will be modified so as to satisfy those who are opposed to the amendment, and for that reason I no longer desire to interpose any objection to the gentleman's request.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to ob-

Mr. MANN. I will object. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the matter he is interested in will be attended to later.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object to the request for two hours' debate?

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois was objecting to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

I was not making any request. I was ex-Mr. LANGLEY. I was not making any request. I was explaining why I no longer objected to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revoke the action of the House in ordering the previous question.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. That is not necessary. The SPEAKER. It is not necessary. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Texas is entitled to one hour and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELLI to one hour.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to devote much time to a discussion of the proposed rule. A careful reading of the same will give sufficient explanation of its terms. This rule makes it in order to consider certain matters that are on the Post Office appropriation bill as proposed items of legislation. After it is adopted these matters will be made in order for the consideration of this House. They are most important items of legislation, and for several years there has been a cry pervading the country that the capacity of this body to deliberate on important issues which the people have considered and settled has been weakened. This rule simply brings before the American Congress some of the great issues settled by the American people in order that their Representatives may cast their votes and decide whether or not the legislation shall be enacted into law.

First, the rule makes in order a proposition to consider legislation touching the establishment of the parcel post and the parcel express. These issues have been discussed by voters throughout the length and breadth of this country. We understand pretty thoroughly the temper of the American people, and the time has come when this body should consider whether or not it will pass this bill.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. I want to ask the gentleman if these several propositions to which he refers have been referred to the committees of the House, have been considered by those committees, and if those committees have reported upon them before they were brought in by the Committee on Rules?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. All except two; and those two, as I understand it, will shortly be reported to the House; but those can only be offered as amendments, which will be in order when the matter is reached in the bill.

Then, I want to ask the gentleman this question: What information can the ordinary layman in this House have if matters are precipitated upon the House which have not been referred to or considered or reported upon by the various committees of the House appointed for that purpose?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. They have all been reported except two, and those two will be reported and be in order as amendments; and I say to the gentleman that no Representative of the people should consider it an issue precipitated upon this House, but should be ready to meet such questions as the parcel post whenever the Rules Committee brings it before this body in order that it may consider it. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HENRY of Texas. I can not yield further, for I have not the time.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman said all but one proposition had been considered by committees of the House. there not two propositions that have not been reported by any

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, the Barnhart proposition respecting the ownership of newspapers has not been reported by a committee. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I simply rose to call that to the attention of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have not the time and can not yield.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague will not do me the injustice to leave it where it is, with what he has said respecting the question of the parcel post. There is no contention about that; but is not the gentleman's proposition one for a parcel express? That has not been reported by a committee.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. My colleague is correct. true, but will be reported, as I understand it; and this only gives consideration.

Mr. Speaker, there is no use in all of this agitation about the consideration of these questions. If you are for a parcel post, you can vote for it; if you are opposed to it, you can vote against it; if you are for the parcel express, you can vote for it, or you may vote against it if you are against it, whenever it is reached.

As I was proceeding to say, there have been some criticisms that this body has lost its capacity for deliberation. humble agent and instrument of the membership of this House, let me say that I conceive it to be the duty of the Committee on Rules, whenever it is thoroughly understood that the membership desires to consider any important proposition, that we, as their agents and representatives, should bring those matters before the Congress and let them be considered in an orderly fashion. What does this rule propose? To make the parcel post and the parcel express in order to be considered, and only to be considered, when they are reached in regular order, and that there shall be devoted to their consideration 15 hours of general debate, 3 days or more; that after the general debate upon those subjects is exhausted, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union then shall proceed to consider them under the 5-minute rule, and may consider them just as long as they wish. I shall not undertake to specify the various items embraced within the provisions of the rule. Most of them have been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, as provided for in resolution 444, introduced by the chairman of that committee. The parcel post is not the only one included in the provisions of this resolution. There are others of serious import, and most of them ought to become law.

And the only way to make them effective as the law of this country is to make them in order on this bill, so that when the Post Office appropriation bill goes through the routine of another body and comes back to this House it will have been considered, will not have been pigeonholed, and the right of the people to have consideration lost at this session and perhaps during both sessions of Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is all. Gentlemen talk about legislation by riders not being a desirable way to legislate. Why, gentlemen, if you have a meritorious proposition that you can defend, that is just, that is in the interest of the American people, I undertake to say that there is no better time to consider it than the first opportunity when you can get it before the legislative body. plause on the Democratic side.] Now, let us meet the questions as they are presented. They are set out at length in the proposed rule. There will be plenty of time for the membership to read and carefully consider them, and when we have finished our work here no one can say that this House has suppressed legislation on matters of tremendous importance to the people, no one can claim that they have been sent to a committee and there pigeonholed, nor can they charge that the Committee on Rules has been recreant to the trust reposed in them. But on each and every occasion, whenever there is a demand by the membership of this House that they be given the right to consider legislation, then the committee has willingly brought it before this body to make whatever disposition is desired. There are other matters here of great importance. There is a proposal making it in order to require the owners of newspapers, magazines, and periodicals to print in a conspicuous place the names of the editors, the owners, and their stockholders, in order that the American people may see the men who stand behind the guns trained against public officials. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Sims). Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; I will yield for just one question.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I desire to ask the gentleman why he limits this simply to the owner of $500 worth of stock?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Because we thought that when we can reach those who own as much as $500 worth of stock we could reach all worth considering to rectify the evils, and if we went below $500 worth of stock and take them in the names would be too numerous, because there would be too many stockholders. However, it is a matter of detail, and amendment can be offered when it comes before the House.

Mr. BURLESON. May I ask why the gentleman did not provide that the statement should also show the indebtedness of the newspapers and who controlled that indebtedness?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If it is desirable to have that, then an amendment should certainly be offered, and I would gladly vote for it. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment establishes a principle that hereafter the newspapers and the periodicals and the journals that form public opinion are not authorized to and the journals that form public opinion are not authorized to give expression of their views unless the American people know the ownership of those weapons of public expression. Therefore I say this is an amendment that should be offered, should be in order, and made law. And I have no doubt that when we reach it Congress will place it on the Post Office appropriation bill. When it goes to the other body I predict that because it is on this appropriation bill as a rider it will remain there, come back here, and will go to the Executive of the United States and will be signed by him and become a law. Then we will know the ownership of these newspapers, magazines, journals, and so forth, before they can enter the mails of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that covers about all the features of this special rule that I desire to now discuss

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the adoption of this rule [applause on the Democratic side], although there are some provisions in it that I regret are found there. The gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, has given a very accurate summary of the different provisions of this rule and of the matters that will be in order if this rule be adopted. The matter that I regret that is contained in the rule is the one relating to the condemnation of the property of express companies. A bill that is not before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, a bill that is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Companies. merce, a bill that has not been reported upon by that com-mittee, a bill that bristles with legal questions of the gravest nature and of the most far-reaching importance, ought not, in my judgment, be considered in this appropriation bill. But, Mr. Speaker, because I am opposed to that provision is not a reason for voting against this rule, for the reason that the good things in this rule so far outweigh the importance of those which, in my judgment, are bad that I think that every Member of this House ought to vote for the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt that if I demand, as shall, a separate vote on the substantive proposition of this rule that we will have a right to vote upon these propositions?

Mr. LENROOT. I hope we will have.

Mr. MANN. We will, if the rules are observed.

Mr. LENROOT. If that is true, then I want to spend a moment or two further upon the question of the condemnation of the property of express companies.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, before the gentlem in gets on to that subject I would like to ask him if he does not think in any legislation of this moment the House ought to take it up as separate bills, have it reported from the committee, and have consideration of each of the bills separately; let them go to the Senate and be considered there, and then let the President have his chance?

Mr. LENROOT. So far as this matter is concerned-of legislation of this particular nature. But I draw this distinction, Mr. Speaker, that with reference to most of the provisions in this rule they relate to matters that are directly affected by the appropriation, or, in other words, the matters affect the appropriation, and I would draw this line, that I will favor any amendment to remove a point of order, provided that amendment or that subject matter would be germane to the matter contained in the bill itself except for the fact that it is new legislation. Mr. MURDOCK.

Would the gentleman carry that form of legislation to the point that he would suspend the point of order that that legislation was new legislation if all legislation offered were germane?

Mr. LENROOT. Not necessarily; but if the matter of appropriation is so connected with that matter of legislation that they ought to be considered together, then I would be in favor of considering them together.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to ask a question. I would like to call attention to the last four lines of this rule, and ask why it was decided that 15 hours of general debate should be allowed when we reach section 8 of the bill, the question of parcel and postal express legislation, but as to other legislation in the bill there shall be but five hours immediately on the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. LENROOT. Because on the question of parcel post and express it is of such tremendous importance it could not be handled under the five-minute rule; that as to all other matters contained in the bill, they can be handled under the ordinary rules of the House.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. According to the way this reads, this is not under the five-minute rule. We are to have five hours of general debate when this rule is adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. And on that all the other rules apply when other matters are reached under the five-minute rule. So it enlarges the scope of debate rather than limits it, so far as that is concerned.

But, Mr. Speaker, to get back again to the question of express companies, I hope the gentleman is right that we may have a separate vote on that. I am not ready to say whether I favor the condemnation of the property of express companies or not. I wish to investigate that question further, but I am ready to say that that great question ought not to be considered in this appropriation bill, and, in reference to the bill itself, we do not know what this Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will report. They may report a substitute. If they report the bill at all, undoubtedly they will report a large number of amendments, and yet with this rule adopted the bill as reported from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will not be in order as an amendment, but the bill as introduced and referred to the committee will be the bill that is offered as an amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will. Mr. LONGWORTH. When the gentleman refers to the acquisition of the property of the express company, to how much of this rule does it refer?

Mr. LENROOT. Beginning at the bottom of page 4, page 5, and all of page 6.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Thank you.
Mr. LENROOT. Here is a bill, Mr. Speaker, containing nine sections, and something that is unheard of is injecting a bill that is foreign to the committee from which this appropriation bill comes into this appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. What does the gentleman say as to the propriety of incorporating in this rule a provision touching the good-roads movement, reported by a different committee-the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to answer that question. As a member of the Committee on Rules I was opposed to incorporating that proposition in this bill, for the reason that the gentleman suggests; but the Committee on Rules was presented with a petition signed by 235 Members of this House asking for the inclusion and consideration of that question in this bill, and I believe that whenever a majority of this House, and especially so large a majority as that, makes a request of that kind of the Committee on Rules it is the duty of the members of that committee to accede to that request, no matter how they might individually feel about it. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me further, it is in the power of the Committee on Rules to make in order the consideration of that measure as a separate proposition. As I understand it, the gentleman's position is that when a majority of the House, by petition, indicate their desire he should report a rule.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; on any question as to the order in Mr. LENROOT. Yes; on any question as to the order in which matters are to be considered by this House I say "yes" to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman, by the way, understands that that is making the majority of this House suspend the rules?

Mr. LENROOT. It may. If it be so, I am for that. So far as this committee is concerned, if the majority of this House at any time desires the Committee on Rules to report a special rule I am going to vote to report that special rule and give the House an opportunity to consider the matters it wants to consider. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, again getting back to this bill for the condemnation of express companies, I want to say this: That as the bill reads it is a questionable proposition as to whether without amendment it would not require the condemnation of many of the railroads in the United States. I wonder if that has been considered, so far as the phraseology of the bill is concerned? Further, I find a provision in the bill that gives to the Commerce Court-to abolish which Commerce Court a majority has brought in a bill to this House, a thing which I am in favor of doing—the same power over these questions, with reference to rates, that the Interstate Commerce Commission has. Are you in favor of that kind of a proposition? And do you think questions of that character should be considered in this appropriation bill?

And so I might go on, if I had the time, Mr. Speaker, and point out provision after provision with reference to this bill that ought to be considered by itself.

Furthermore, it curtails the right of amendment with reference to these propositions, and in this way: That if this express bill were here as an independent proposition an amendment would be in order, and an amendment to the amendment would be in order, while if it is brought in as provided in this bill the bill itself must be offered as an amendment, and only one amendment will then be in order to the bill instead of two, as would be the case if the bill were brought in as an independent proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman understand that as to this provision for the taking over of the express companies the bill is amendable?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; but only one amendment would be in order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Only one amendment would be in order at one time. Later another amendment could be presented.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman does not understand me.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was because I did not that I interrupted the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. One amendment would be in order; but if it were an independent proposition on the floor of the House an amendment would be in order and an amendment to the amend-ment would be in order.

Mr. SHERLEY. The difference is simply a matter of time. You vote down one amendment, and after it is voted down you offer another. Mr. LENROOT. That is true. But if one could vote on the amendment to the amendment he might vote for the amendment itself, but no opportunity is given to perfect it.

Mr. SHERLEY. You can perfect it by offering another amend-

Mr. LENROOT. That may be true; but it does away with the privileges of the Members of the House as to the independent proposition.

I am in favor of a parcel post—a parcel post that will protect the rights of the country merchant as well as the rights of the farmer and others who are to be benefited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired

Mr. LENROOT. Can I have five minutes more?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LENROOT. I am in favor of a parcel post with zone rates in it. I am in favor of putting on the statute books a parcel-post law to be followed, if necessary, afterwards by the condemnation of the property of the express companies. But I am not in favor, so far as I now understand the matter—and I want to say frankly that I reserve the right to change my mind after further investigation—I am not in favor of paying $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 for the property of the express companies now existing and their contracts and leases and franchises, only a tithe of which may perhaps be of any value whatever to this Government.

We owe nothing to the express companies of this country. No equitable considerations ought to prevail with reference to them, for they have been paying exorbitant dividends and have been exacting exorbitant rates. Whenever we do legislate upon this question I am in favor of standing strictly upon our legal rights with reference to them, without considering any matter of what otherwise they might be entitled to from an equitable consideration. [Applause.] So, Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of paying them for their contracts, I am not in favor of paying them for their franchises. I am not in favor of condemning and paying them for their leases. If they are of any value to them afterwards, let them have them; but if this Government has any right to go into this at all, it seems to me it has a right to go into this business regardless of the express companies, and do it without paying several million dollars for property that is of no value. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this provision will be voted out of the rule if an opportunity is offered.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] vield some of his time?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. Hardy].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this rule, because my experience shows me that skillful obstructionists, by the use of parliamentary devices, can and have in the past made the enactment of laws of the very highest importance, and almost universally demanded, a matter of tedious delay, like the decisions of our courts, stretching over years, until the heart grows weary and hope grows sick.

This rule does not prevent ample and free discussion. suppresses no right to have every measure proposed under it weighed and approved or disapproved by the representatives of the people. It simply cuts the Gordian knot of obstruction. It strips privilege of its armor of technicalities in which it has wrapped itself, so that the spear of right and justice may reach it. I shall vote for this rule because I believe that the people ought to rule and to have their judgment and their demands, as evidenced by their Representatives' votes, brought to a focus and enacted into legislation. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time. Mr. HARDWICK. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Georgia [Mr. Bartlett].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this rule.
I am sorry that this side of the House has made it necessary to consider a rule of this character, and that we are returning to the old Republican methods.

In rare instances in the history of legislation has any party ever offered for the action of the House a rule of this kind, providing for the enactment, upon bills of this character, of special legislation not otherwise in order, but which is specifically prohibited by the rules. It is only in rare instances that the House has passed resolutions authorizing legislation upon appropriation bills, contrary to the rule which we ourselves have adopted and to the precedents of this House for a hundred years. I have hurriedly looked up the instances, and I Bonds of Navy Mail Clerks.

Sec. 3. That every Navy mail clerk and assistant Navy mail clerk shall give bond to the United States in such penal sum as the Postmass pecial resolution. During the past 20 years I can find but 12 instances when it has been done. Those instances were to provide for the better administration of the Government, as it was claimed in each instance, and not for wholesale legislation on a variety of subjects, as this resolution authorizes. The Democratic Party during the last election went before the country and proclaimed that if we were given control of the House we would find a way to legislate, by reporting bills from the proper committees and by considering bills in the House, and we denounced in unmeasured terms the code of Cannon rules, and proclaimed we would not follow them. We have now rules of our own making, made in pursuance of the demands of the people. We have amended the rules and we find that since the provision was placed in the rules prohibit-have Calendar Wednesday and two Mondays for suspension days and unanimous-consent days.

We went before the country protesting against the Cannon rules. We owe our majority, in a great measure, to that issue. But Cannon, in his palmiest days of czarism, and Dalzell, for years at the head of the Republican Rules Committee, never yet brought into this House a rule so far-reaching and revolutionary as this. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am opposed to the rule, because the Democrats are in the majority on all these committees and if they really favor legislation along these lines, let the majority of Democrats on the committees report these bills. If they can not get sufficient time on Wednesdays and these other days provided for consideration of bills, then let the Committee on Rules bring in a special rule making such bills in order and let us act on them properly, decently, and in order.

Here we have the remarkable spectacle of an appropriation bill carrying the largest amount of money of any of our appropriation bills halted when we are endeavoring to hasten the time when we shall complete our business here; halted and stopped to consider bills, some of which have but recently been reported by a committee and some of which have not been acted on or reported by any committee. Can it be that the committees of this Democratic House are smothering in committee legislation that the people demand?

Mr. Chairman, I shall not vote for this rule, because I do not think the propositions submitted ought to be considered upon this appropriation bill. I am not for some of the propositions submitted in the rule and can not vote for them now, nor do I think the House should be called upon to consider them and act upon them in this "hodgepodge" method. I shall not vote to turn over to this Government the transportation business of the express companies, nor shall I vote for this proposition, which would bring a great burden and deficit upon the Post Office Department, by which it shall be turned from being a carrier of letters into being a carrier of the freight of the country, a first step in the direction that ultimately and almost inevitably leads to Government ownership and operation of railroads, express companies, and all the other agencies of public utility by which the people are served.

I am willing to vote for the propositions embraced in the bill reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and if necessary to provide for their consideration in the pending bill by special rule, I will vote for such a rule. If this rule only provided for the consideration of the legislation proposed in the pending bill, I would not feel impelled to oppose it, but should support these provisions. I shall support the provision providing for the use of steel postal cars and the other provisions of the pending bill contained in sections 2 to 12, inclusive. To be more specific, I shall vote for the consideration of the following provisions of the pending bill, and if it be necessary to have a rule making their consideration in order, I would not protest against that rule.

The following are the parts of the bill I refer to:

The following are the parts of the bill I refer to:

Provided further, That after the 1st of July, 1917, the Postmaster General shall not approve or allow to be used or pay for any full railway post-office car not constructed of steel, steel underframe, or equally indestructible material, and not less than 20 per cent of the new equipment shall be put into operation annually after July, 1912; and after the passage of this act no contract shall be entered into for the construction of steel underframe cars.

SEC. 2. No contract for furnishing supplies to the Post Office Department or the postal service shall be made with any person who has entered, or proposed to enter, finto any combination to prevent the making of any bild for furnishing such supplies, or to fix a price or prices therefor, or who has made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person not to bid for any such contract, or to bid at a specified price or prices thereon; and if any person so offending is a contractor for furnishing such supplies, his contract may be annulled, and the person so offending shall be liable to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and may be further punished, in the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than one year.

BONDS OF NAVY MAIL CLERKS.

That in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require; letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices can be required to work in excess of eight hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be paid extra in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law.

That should the needs of the service require the employment on Sunday of letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices, the employees who are required and ordered to perform Sunday work shall be allowed compensatory time on one of the six days following the Sunday on which they perform such service.

Sec. 6. That no person in the classified civil service of the United States employed in the postal servica shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing; and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; and affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal; and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the proper department or office, as shall also the reasons for reduction in rank or compensation; and copies of the same shall be annually reported to Congress and furnished to the person affected upon request, and the Civil Service Commission also shall, upon request, be furnished copies of the same or the originals thereof: Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, ciub, or other form of organization of postal employees having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons from s

Grade 10, at not exceeding $1,700.

Grade 10, at not exceeding $1,500.

Chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,000.

The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salarles of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and of establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows: Class A, $900 to $1,200; class B, $900 to $1,300; and class C, $900 to $1,500.

He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices.

After June 30, 1913, clerks in class A shall be promoted successively to grade 4, and clerks in class C shall be promoted successively to grade 5 at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's satisfactory service in the next lower grade. Promotions above these grades within the maximum grades of the classification may be made in the discretion of the Fostmaster General for meritorious service. No promotion shall be made exceept upon evidence satisfactory to the Post office permater of the employee during the preceding year.

That for the purpose of a full and complete inquiry and investigation into the feasibility and propriety of the establishment of a general parcel-post commission of six persons, three of whom shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three by the President of the Senate, is constituted with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcel post by Senate and House committees and take such other testimony as they deem desirable. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this commission the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 9. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,074 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $44.75 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, a corresponding reduction of compensation per mile per annum shall be paid; on routes carrying the mail three days of each week of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided.

SEC. 10. That after June 30, 1912, experimental mail delivery may be established, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class that are not by law now entitled to free-delivery service, and the amount to be expended at any office shall not exceed $1,800 a year.

But, Mr. Speaker, I shall not vote for a proposition which will take the first step toward authorizing the Government of the United States to take sole management and control of every public road in my State over which a rural route may be established. I shall not in this instance, as I have not in the past, nor do I expect to in the future, vote for any measure that will lay on the General Government all the burdens of government which the several States and local bodies should I shall not vote for a measure that will commit this great Government, composed of 48 States-I shall not vote to concentrate it into one and make it a paternalistic and socialistic government. I shall vote in this instance, as I have voted on all occasions, according to the Constitution as I understand it. This is a Government in which duties devolve upon it by the Constitution with limited and restricted powers. There are 48 separate and distinct governments that make up this one National Government, and they have some great duties to per-form. I shall not in the vote I may cast on this rule forget that my State and the several States of this Union owe some duties to themselves and to their citizens. I shall not vote for that proposition which would advance them further and further in the direction of the destruction of the duties and the rights of the States and the concentration and federalization of all the powers of government in Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time did the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] use?

The SPEAKER. He used 13 minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I have always believed in the propriety of having the Committee on Rules report a special rule for the consideration of some special measure of importance that could not be reached in ordinary course upon the calendar. Many gentlemen of the House have been opposed to that power in the Committee on Rules. But I never have been in favor, and I am not in favor now, of the proposition to combine a number of diverse measures pending before different committees and logroll through the House a rule for their consideration.

There is one proposition here which may illustrate what I have said. It is proposed in this bill to require the Government to pay a toll for the use of local roads by its carriers. It provides a toll that I venture to say, in the case of some roads in this country, will amount to more than is spent by the town or the district in the maintenance of the road. If the Government should pay for the real wear and tear of the road caused by the carrier, it would not be a fraction of what it is proposed it shall pay. I do not believe that the people of the country care to be put in a position of receiving a gratuity, a vote from the National Treasury. A proposition like that makes this whole measure reek with graft from one end to the other. It means nothing less than that the Government is to take control in the end of the local roads in the country, to build them, to pay for them, and, of course, if it does that it should have jurisdiction over them. It is the wildest measure of centralization I have ever seen presented to the Congress and it is presented by the party that stands for local self-government. I can not give any rule which has a proposition of that kind in it my [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Speek].

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this rule, because I am in favor of some of the legislation which the adoption of this rule will enable us to enact. I am in favor of a general parcel-post system so devised as to be beneficial to all of the people of this country. It is pretty well established now that unless something of this kind can be adopted in this Post Office appropriation bill it will not be adopted at all. I would prefer to vote separately on a proposition of this kind, but should we do so there is very little prospect that it would pass the Senate. Therefore, if we are to have any legislation on the subject during this session we must have it by virtue of this rule. wise it will be objected to and eliminated by a point of order from the provision of the Post Office appropriation bill. Therefore I favor the adoption of this rule.

This does not mean that I favor the provisions of the Post Office appropriation bill. I do not think they are adequate; I do not think they are sufficient, but it will give us an opportunity when the discussion of them comes up to amend them and to adopt such provisions upon these subjects as we may deem proper and right. Without this rule we are bound hand and foot and can do nothing. I do not favor some of the wild propositions that are in this measure about paying toll for local roads, nor do I favor the condemnation of the express companies, because I believe that this Government has the right to institute a parcel-post system of its own and run it independently, as is done in many other civilized countries, and that the competition of the express companies will be beneficial to us in reducing rates.

There are other things in this rule which I favor. This rule will permit us to enact legislation to limit the time of employment of carriers to eight hours a day. Unless this rule is adopted that will be subject to a point of order and eliminated from the Post Office appropriation bill. It will permit an infrom the Post Office appropriation bill. It was properly crease of the salaries of the carriers and clerks. Unless this rule be adopted, that can be objected out of your Post Office rule be adopted, that can be objected out of your Post Office rule bill. Make no mistake, gentlemen. The objection bill make no mistake, gentlemen. appropriation bill. Make no mistake, gentlemen. The objections to this rule upon the ground that it is violating the rules and precedents of the House, upon the ground that it is bringing in matters here that ought to be voted upon separately, are ing in matters here that ought to be voted upon separately, are being made by those who want to kill this legislation in the end, and who are raising these objections now to prevent the House from acting upon the matters at all. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule will make in order 23 substantive propositions that otherwise would be out of order upon the Post Office appropriation bill. Many of these propositions are of minor importance. It is doubtful if there would be any opposition to probably one-half of these propositions if they were to come up in the ordinary way. There are other important propositions here, propositions of the greatest possible importance. The propositions that ought to be agreed to without any extended debate and without serious opposition relate to the growth of the postal service, to the increase of the salaries of the postal employees, to the reduction of hours of laborers in the postal service. It makes in order the reclassification of the rural-route carriers, raising the salaries of the rural-route carriers-propositions that would be subject to a point of order if it were not for this rule. Without desiring to commit the House to every proposition covered in the rule and to make them in order on this bill, I favor the rule as it is now before the House. I shall reserve the right, when the time comes, in passing upon the questions made in order, to vote either for or against them as my judgment at that time dictates. I shall favor the increase in pay to clerks and carriers, and the provision making it proper for employees to or-Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this matter, contained on page 1 of

Is this matter, contained on page 1 of the report, down to the bottom of page 4, one bill or is it a series of bills?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a series of propositions in the Post Office appropriation bill. They have been numbered in the rule for the sake of convenience. They are substantive propositions which are offered at different places in the Post Office appropriation bill. Each one of them would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As to the parcel post only, is that covered in section 8 of this rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The question of a parcel post is covered in section 8

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not referring to the parcel express. Mr. CAMPBELL. The parcel post is what is known as section 8.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that what the present bill contains substantially, or is there a difference there of a commission

Mr. CAMPBELL. The commission is covered in the bill, which would also be out of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then this section 8 of the rule is the bill as it stands to-day exactly, is it?
Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far as it relates to the parcel post? Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Do I understand the adoption of this rule will permit an amendment increasing the salaries of the rural-route carriers?

Mr. CAMPBELL. This rule makes in order a proposition raising the pay of the carriers.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I have not had time as yet to read the rule or to read fully the Goeke bill. I would like to ask if the Goeke bill is inserted word for word in the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is. There are propositions about which we all agree, and to which probably no Member of the House would object, and yet under the rules of the House they would not be in order on the Post Office appropriation bill without the adoption of this rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On page 7 of the Rules report is a paragraph relating to the use of the mails for newspapers. requiring that the names of the publishers, editors, and stock-Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that provision in the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is an entirely new proposition?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a new proposition which has never been referred to a committee of this House and appears for the first time in this rule.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has it as a bill ever been introduced?
Mr. CAMPBELL. A bill for that purpose has never been introduced, as I understand it. The matter was brought before the Committee on Rules by Members of the House, who asked that it be made in order on the Post Office appropriation bill by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it was not a part of the Post Office bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, may I ask the gentleman if this is his understanding of that provision—that the New York Herald, a large paper; the Philadelphia North American-

Or the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Or the Detroit Free Press, or any other newspaper of the country having a large circulation, would be obliged under the provision of this rule, brought in in this hurried way, to publish conspicuously every day the names of its proprietors, its editors, and of all its stockholders having stock valued above $500 in order to obtain the use of the mails?

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that in violation of that provision it would be forbidden the use of the mails?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; that is the proposition this part of the rule will make in order to the Post Office appropriation bill; and I will say to the gentleman-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And those papers throughout the United States owned by corporations not publishing the names of all their stockholders holding more than $500 worth of stock would be forbidden the use of the mails utterly under this provision?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the language of the provision; and I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the proposition was proposed by one of the leading newspaper men of this House, a Member of Congress who is a newspaper man, and knows something of the influences that are back of some of the newspapers of this country

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I trespass upon the gentleman long enough to say

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Mr. Chairman— Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to have some of my own time to discuss some other matters of this rule; and I can not yield but to one gentleman at a time in an orderly way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are getting to a very interesting point, and I think it would be well worth while having a little more light on the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Spe Have I consumed 10 minutes? Mr. Speaker, I was given 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Chair was mistaken; the gentleman from Kansas has two minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield the two minutes back to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I have taken my seat and cooled off. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was looking at another gentleman's figures rather than those of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the rule of the House that prohibits legislation on an appropriation bill is perhaps a wise one ordinarily, but, in my opinion, this House yielded more of its power and more of its dignity as a part of the legislative branch of this Government when it made that rule than on any other occasion. The truth is when a thing ought to be done it ought to be done now, and the way it ought to be done is the best way and the quickest way you can do it. Now, everybody knows that the legislation proposed by this ruleand when I refer to the rule I refer primarily to resolution 444, which I introduced by direction of the committee—is legisla-tion pertaining to the Post Office Department of the utmost value to this country. It could not be enacted except as a rider upon the Post Office appropriation bill, for the very reason that a dozen separate bills covering all of these 12 questions here presented could not possibly be gotten through this House with the other business which is before it, and if they did they would find their graveyard at the other end of the Capitol; but when placed as a rider upon this bill, not only the House is forced to respond but the Senate must respond to each and all of these propositions. Therefore, the wisdom of legislation along these lines. Who is it in this House who opposes the protection of the railway mail clerks of the United States by forcing the construction of steel cars for that purpose? Who is it who is not willing to check the collusion between contractors and officials Government, and who is it that is not willing to see competition in mail pay? Who is it that is willing longer for a gag law depriving the officials of the department of the right of free speech? Who is it who opposes the eight-hour laws and compensatory pay for overtime? Who is it who is not willing to have a just reclassification of the clerks? Who is it who does not want to respond in some measure to the demand of the people for a parcel post? Who is it who does not want to see this Government extricate itself, if possible from the position it is in with reference to the postal savings bank, a proposition that has already added several hundred and will add over 20,000 officials to the Government, one that is not paying the Government, but one with which you must deal today by provisions that will enable this department to make it efficient if it be possible to do so, and it can not be done except by this measure? Who is it who opposes this measure? the gentlemen who are opposed to these post-office provisions, essential and necessary for the protection of this Government, vote against this rule

Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Just one minute. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it not have been possible for the Post Office Committee to have brought in a bill on any of these important subjects at any time?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Of course it would; and one-half of them would have been killed. That is the reason we put them on here as riders. We are going to make you respond to these questions that some want to dodge. [Applause.] I have no time to discuss these measures, but I do want to say that the parcel-post proposition has been considered thor-oughly by this committee. We know this Government can not go into a general parcel post now without an immense addition of perhaps 40,000 officials and immense loss. Therefore we have recommended a commission for the general consideration of the proposition, and the experiment will cost nothing, because of the rural post. And I will ask that this parcel-post proposition, except the one proposed by the committee, be voted down, in order that this House may act intelligently and know the facts we ought to know before we enter upon this legislation finally; that we may know what is just and best for all.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].
Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, the proposition that because a thing has been done in a certain way for a long period of time, we should therefore continue to do it in that way, for all time to come is not one that appeals to me very strongly. overthrow of Cannonism was due to dissatisfaction with the old way of doing things. One outcome of our protest against the established order of stand-pat-ism, is the present Democratic House. The whole system of rules is a purely artificial creation designed to enable a legislative body to do business. When a change in these rules, is necessary to enable this body to do public business more efficiently, that change should be effected, whether it comes about through a rule from the Rules Committee, or not. The test should be, whether it is in aid of the public business. The fact that it is an innovation need arouse no antagonism. If riders to the pending, or any other bill are required to enable the House to meet public expectations in respect of needed legislation, then riders should be utilized, and the required legislation thereby afforded. All of us know the condition of legislation in this body. We also know the difficulty of securing consideration for ordinary legislation at the other end of this Capitol, and we further know with respect to the legislation that is embodied in this report of the Committee on Rules, that if we wish affective action on this legislation. on Rules, that if we wish effective action on this legislation it is necessary to attach it to the pending bill, as we have the right to do. in due and orderly course, by adopting this rule.

Talk about rules! The system of rules that formerly prevailed in this House muzzled, and shackled the Members. This rule gives to this body, which is above all its committees, the opportunity to deal with questions of transcendent importance which are agitating the country to-day from one end of it to the other—the parcel post, steel cars for the railway mail clerks, and national aid to roads in the States. If it is not possible to secure adequate consideration of these matters, other than by a rule, and it is not, then the rule is the proper parliamentary agency for us to employ. Some gentlemen in arguing the proposition of national aid to roads, as embodied in the rule have insisted that the proposed legislation would interfere with or trench upon the functions of the States. To a bill to this effect I would be unalterably opposed. I would favor no measure that would disturb, or derange these functions, but the gentlemen who make this criticism of the proposed measure, are simply unacquainted with its terms. One participant in this debate asserted that the road bill was a form of centralization. Not at all. The proposition as to national aid to reads which is found in the report from the Committee on Rules, and which is made in order that it may be considered by this House, has no sort of relation to centralization, and in no wise interferes with local and domestic affairs in the States.

One element of merit in the particular proposition relating to roads is that we have eliminated from it every feature of national control over local concerns, or domestic highways. that the rule under consideration proposes to do with relation to this, and the other propositions embodied therein, is to give this supreme legislative body an opportunity to deal with them fairly and squarely. Who challenges the propriety of this action, or questions that such a course is at once safe and sound? It is the policy of meeting an issue, in lieu of shirking, or

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Do I understand that the adoption of this rule will permit the consideration of the Lloyd bill, eliminating the gag rule?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

I ask the gentlemen in opposition to take issue on the merits of this proposition. Announce to the country at large, if you will, that you are opposed to the policy of allowing this body to deal effectively with the questions carried in this rule. Say to the country, if you will, that the Democratic attitude of freedom of opportunity is wrong, and that when the Committee on Rules seeks to aid us to arrive at the consideration of these great questions, to which its rule relates, its aid should be re-Avow frankly that you are opposed to any opportunity of consideration being afforded preferring to go on, in what you call the old way, a way which consisted in submerging propositions of national interests, and keeping them from legislative contemplation. This is what Cannonism did, and on this account Cannonism was rejected by the country. This rule, Mr. Speaker, merely makes in order a number of germane propositions of great importance, and gives to this body the opportunity to consider them. If that be treason, I say, make the most of it. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, the majority of this House has not proposed new legislation, so far, that has met with my approval. But I do want to be fair enough to say that the present Post Office appropriation bill reflects credit on the majority of this House. [Applause.]

I shall vote, as long as I am in this House, for any proposition that I believe is for the general interests of the people, regardless of its authorship. I am going to vote for this rule, and I also intend to vote for the appropriation bill-the Post Office appropriation bill. I feel proud of the fact that the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is a colleague of mine, and represents an adjoining district in Tennessee, and I hope he will be returned here as long as he de-[Applause.]

I believe in the protection of the postal employees and in the earliest possible substitution of all-steel cars for wooden cars for the protection of their lives. I believe in a definite and fixed 8-hour day for post-office clerks and city carriers, and also an increase of pay for the rural carriers. I favor a reclassification of the railway postal clerks.

I have made two campaigns-successful campaigns-and advocated in each of those campaigns national aid for public roads, and I intend to stand on that proposition in this House.

I am opposed to what has been denominated the "gag law" or civil-service rule that prevents a Government employee from appealing to his Representative in Congress to look after any grievance that the employee may have with the department with which he is connected.

There are a number of other very just and wise provisions in this bill, and I regret that the limited time yielded to me will not permit me to go more fully into them. But I regret exceedingly that the Republican Party in the Sixty-first Congress did not pass the bills which you intend to include in this Post Office appropriation bill by this special rule, and I hope my Republican colleagues on this side of the House will prove to the country that the Democratic Party shall not have all of the credit for this legislation, for it is in the interests of the people, and should become a law at the earliest possible time, and no technicality or rule of this House should stand in the way. It affects the interest of every class of our constituencies, and it ought to appeal to every Member of this House, regardless of which side of the Chamber he sits upon. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. BARNHART] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this rule. I am in favor of it for the 23 varieties of reasons to which my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] called attention awhile ago; but I am especially in favor of it because, in addition to being a Member of this House, I hope I still represent the great and glorious profession of journalism in this country. When I went before the Committee on Rules yesterday I gathered up from the desks in this House 10 of the greatest newspaper publications of this country. Two of them carried the names of the editors; 1 of them carried the name of the The other 7 were circulated by the thousands and hundreds of thousands as anonymous publications. who reads them only knows the authorship or inspiration of those publications and their editorials. If the amendment in this rule prevails and this provision becomes a law, the country will know who controls or directs editorial opinions of the day. It will bring the honest editor out from under the anfair suspicion that he is controlled by evil influences.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], if he offers it, that the names of the bondholders shall also be published?

Mr. BARNHART. I certainly will. I want to make the act as broad and effective as possible. We have heard it said, and we have accepted the sweet philosophy for years, that the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world; and I believe that the hand that writes the editorials is the hand that guides the world. And we ought to have that hand as clean and righteous as it is possible to make it.

For these and many other reasons I hope the rule will be

[Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] to use some of his time.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is the most remarkable rule, filled with curiosities as it is, that has come before this House during my service of now a little more than 15 years in the

I do not understand how the Committee on Rules managed to escape including in this rule some other propositions that are pending before the House. Why, for instance, does the Committee on Rules include a proposition to take possession of the express companies practically at once, a proposition which has not been reported by any committee of this House, and fail to include in the rule a proposition to make in order the consideration of the substance of the bill already reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, regulating the rates which express companies may charge? Upon what theory has the Committee on Rules proceeded to pay no attention to the bills which have been considered by committees of the House, charged with consideration of the subject matter, and reported a rule to make in order a proposition which has not been considered by any committee of the House, unless it be the Committee on Rules, which knows nothing about the matter, and if it did has given no consideration to the subject?

Why does the committee, in reporting the rule, make in order the Shackleford bill and not make in order the Underwood resolution? Why did the Committee on Rules turn down the majority leader of the House in the resolution which he introduced concerning the study of the subject of highways, and the relation of the public funds thereto, and report the Shackleford resolution, which had never been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which has this subject under consideration, and propose to consider only the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MANN. I do not yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wanted to answer the gentleman's ques-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not anticipate the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the gentleman asked a question. Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not answer the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. MANN. No one can give a reason for it. There is no reason for it. This is blind groping in the dark by men with-

The Underwood resolution has already Mr. CAMPBELL.

been favorably reported by the Committee on Rules

But it is not in order; is not a privileged bill; Mr. MANN. can not be offered as an amendment to this bill. The gentleman's committee proposes to make in order as an amendment on the Post Office appropriation bill another bill standing on an equal footing in the House. Why did they not make the Underwood bill in order as an amendment on the Post Office bill? The gentleman's answer shows that he, at least, on the committee knew nothing about the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. MANN. In his own time, which I did not restrict. The gentleman from Texas has reported a resolution involving almost everything under the sun, and perhaps some things beyond our sun in other skies, and himself declined to yield to questions, alleging that he did not have the time, although he had made the motion which shut off the time.

It is the first time I ever have seen in this House a proposition involving so much where the gentleman in charge refused to explain, refused to answer questions, declined to yield, because he did not have the time which he himself had restricted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I took the floor in the main for the purpose of saying that if we have to vote on this rule as a whole, I shall vote against it. I have no criticism of those who desire to vote for the proposition in the bill. I believe it is always within the power and the right of the majority of a legislative body to enact legislation which it favors, and, having that right, they have the right to bring in a rule providing that it shall be in order on a bill to take it up by itself and providing for its consideration in any manner. I do not criticize that. My criticism is directed against reporting a proposition into the House involving important matters, concerning which no one in the House knows anything, and concerning which there has been no consideration before the country, before the House, or before the committees of the House. It is my purpose, when the debate shall be closed, to demand a separate vote on the various propositions involved in this resolution, and unless the Speaker, which I do not think he will do, shall propose that he is a greater czar and more defiant of the House than Czar CANNON in his day, we will have a separate vote on the substantive propositions in the rule.

I shall ask for a separate vote on the parcel-post proposition in the bill, which, if I can not obtain anything better, I shall vote for. I hope if it is made in order it will be made of more value than the provisions in the bill, but I shall vote against the propositions which are not in the original Post Office bill if I can have a separate vote on this rule as to the different propositions.

Mr. Speaker, there are times when I have the highest respect for this body as a whole and for its individual Members. But there are times when I can see more cowards in the House of Representatives in the same number of men than can be found in an equal number anywhere else in this country. [Applause.]

I prefer when I go out of public life to be turned out because

I have had the moral courage to vote according to my own convictions, rather than to be chasing to know the popular sentiment of this proposition to-day, guessing what it shall be to-morrow, and hoping that my turn may go with the turn of the wind. If this House votes according to its own sentiment, according to what it believes, according to what it knows, according to its real judgment, it will not go far astray upon any of these propositions, but if it votes out of cowardly fear it loses its own self-respect. It may retain its membership, but it will not be as well off as if it had lost a large portion of it. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall not vote for this ale. It contemplates the consideration on the Post Office appropriation bill of certain legislative provisions. They may be generally divided into two classes: One, a class of provisions that have been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the committee which, under the rules of the House, has jurisdiction of the provisions in the bill and which it has reported for the consideration of the House; and the other, certain provisions which have not been reported from that committee. One of the latter provisions, contemplating legislation of the most comprehensive and important character, has not been reported from any committee, and one which, although reported from a committee, has received slight if any consideration whatever.

I am not opposed as a universal thing to legislation on appropriation bills, but I believe there is a clear line of demarcation that should be observed in order to obtain beneficial results. Legislation that is designed to remedy legislative abuses or to advance the interests of good administration may properly and wisely be included in these bills. But legislation that proposes to initiate new and untried and poorly considered schemes of governmental activity, in my judgment, unwisely are placed in these bills. My recollection is that back early in the seventies it was a Republican Congress that enacted the Federal supervisors' election law as a part of an appropriation bill.

I have no desire to provoke retaliation from that side of the House when eventually the Republicans come into power by the adoption of such rules as will permit a repetition of such legislation. I do not believe it wise to attempt to legislate on these matters in this way. I am heartily in favor of most of the provisions reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and incorporated by the committee in this bill. I should welcome an opportunity to support such provisions. But if the price to be paid to obtain the consideration of them is to support a rule which permits consideration of these other two provisions-one for the condemnation of the express companies and the other for the initiation of a policy of giving Federal aid to State and local roads—then I shall not support the rule. The disadvantages that will follow far outweigh the benefits to accrue from the provisions which I favor.

The adoption of this good-roads policy would end any hope that the Democratic Party may have to make a record for economy in this session. According to the reports, as I have been able to gather them, the least that will be taken under this provision, if it be adopted, is $15,000,000 a year, and it may run up to thirty or forty millions a year. No one who favors aid from the Federal Government for State roads will pretend for a moment that the payment of $30 per annum per mile for the upkeep for macadamized roads would be of any advantage whatever in the maintenance of such roads. I do not believe the Federal Government should enter upon that policy. I am unwilling to have considered this so-called compromise scheme, which was hurriedly put together by the advo-cates of some 38 different propositions, if I recall correctly, and overnight reported by the committee which was supposed to be giving deliberate, careful consideration to legislation of this character

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. I only have five minutes, and I have no time to yield.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But the gentleman is making statements with respect to this bill and its preparation and consideration about which he is absolutely in error.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia will pardon me. That question can be discussed by the gentleman in his own time. I decline to yield further. I am entitled to make my own statement, and my statement is based upon the reports contained in the press of this city, which are usually pretty accurate in detailing such matters.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But here is—

Mr. SAUNDERS. But here is—
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further.
Members, like myself, a great many, the vast majority of the House, are busily engaged in committee work. Since the 4th day of December, the Christmas holidays, with the exception of five days, I have been engaged every day in considering estimates submitted by the various departments. They necessitate the investigation of every conceivable governmental question. Such work occupies all of my time. It is important, difficult work, and can not be shirked or neglected. Therefore, I must rely, as many others must rely, very largely for information upon the reports of committees upon important legislation not originating in the committee of which I am a member. I am unable to be in the position that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] says Members should occupy, namely, prepared at any moment to consider these important matters. I think it is unfair to Members of the House to inject in this way legislation of such character for their consideration. It is not my desire nor the desire of others who believe as I do to obstruct or prevent legislation, but we desire honestly to consider legislation properly, and should not be put in the position where it is impossible to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this House of Representatives adopted a code of rules agreed to in caucus. One of those rules prohibits general legislation upon appropriation bills. For over two generations general legislation, especially of a non-administrative character, has been substantially prohibited upon general appropriation bills. And why? Under the Constitution the money must be appropriated from the Treasury in order that the public service may be carried on. It has been found if you place a condition upon the voting of money from the Treasury certain legislation that one body may not approve or that the other body may not approve, which is ordinarily crude and ill digested, is not good legislation. Therefore the rule.

I quite agree with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] said, that at times matters of administration are by unanimous consent proper to be placed upon appropriation bills, and sometimes by special rule. I think it would have been entirely apt and proper that the paragraph in the Post Office appropriation bill touching parcel post should have been covered and made in order for consideration by a special rule. That is a matter which has been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. But what does this resolu-tion propose to do? How many Members desire to consider as a rider of the Post Office appropriation bill the question of ownership of railways by the Government-

A MEMBER. Express companies.
Mr. CANNON. Oh, railways.
Mr. MANN. That would be an amendment in order.

Mr. CANNON. Probably an amendment in order, and there are people who believe if you take over express companies under this power as proposed, that it would lead to Government ownership. How many of you touching that matter like that proposition? How many of you like one of a half dozen propositions here? And yet the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and gentlemen on this side of the House who are going to vote for this rule say that those who are opposed to it are opposed to the parcel post-are against the will of the people-anathema maranatha. Why, gentlemen in their enthusiasm will not be offended if I say this is pure, rank demagoguery. Now, I am perfectly willing to vote for a special rule to consider every proposition that was reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, including parcel post, increase of salaries, and so forth; but, says the gentleman, all times are proper, and this is the place to give righteous legislation. Look here, Why, did not you make it in order by this rule on this other bill to change the law touching conspiracy? Why did not you, in making and reporting this rule, make it in order to amend this bill to try contempt cases by jury? Your last national platform declares for such legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Or repeal the oleomargarine bill?
Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; and 40 other things. Why did not you report this rule and let this House, the greatest legislative body on earth, acting for 90,000,000 people, put on all of the good legislation, especially that which you pledged in your national platform, upon an appropriation bill to make sure that the Government will starve unless the Senate agrees to the bill? Why did not you do it? I will tell you why, because you are sweating great drops of blood, figuratively speaking, for fear you will have to vote on some of these questions. What answer are you going to make to Samuel Gompers

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield there? Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman did not yield. Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois asked me to yield.

Mr. CANNON. Why, certainly; if the gentleman will yield me enough time to answer one question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will do that. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman speaks of a rule in case of indirect contempt and injunction. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to him that the Judiciary Committee has authorized a report on those bills, and he will have an opportunity surely of voting on them before this session is at an end. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Why did not you put it on an appropriation bill [applause on the Republican side], this appropriation bill where the gentleman says the Government shall not go on unless the Senate agrees to your legislation?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We intend to put it on the statutes. Mr. CANNON. I have answered the gentleman's question—oh, put it on the statutes. Suppose the Senate will not have it? Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then the people will defeat the balance of them. Mr. CANNON.

Oh, the gentleman is not candid-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like a minute more to

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Texas owes him a minute.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman one minute, Mr. CANNON. That makes three minutes. [Laughter and applause.] Now, unless this rule is voted upon and amended, the gentleman, my colleague from Illinois, having given notice that he would ask a separate vote upon every substantive proposition, I will vote against the rule. I will vote for the consideration of many of the propositions in the rule, especially that which pertains to the postal service, but I will not go beyond that.

Oh, let the people rule [laughter], said the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenboot]. He would vote to report anything from the Committee on Rules for which the majority of the members would sign a petition. Why, every member of the Illinois Legislature—and I have no doubt it would be possible here where we sign petitions pro forma—every member of the Illinois Legislature some years ago signed a petition that the governor should be hanged and drawn and quartered. [Laughter.] You get petitions from Members of this House, and you find people who are asked to sign, do sign all the petitions substantially. Let the House act here, not upon petitions of Members of the House of Representatives, but let it act officially. So much for that. I wish and I hope I may get a little time in the event this rule is adopted to address the House further, and if perchance the rule should not be adopted I hope that the opportunity will be given to perfect this Post Office appropriation bill, which we have before us, touching the postal service. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] wish to use any more of his time?
Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand the gentleman has only one speech now?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Only one speech in conclusion.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss the merits of the various legislative propositions in this rule. wish to discuss simply the methods by which these propositions are sought to be enacted, and I venture to say, without fear of contradiction, that no such proposition has ever before been presented by a Committee on Rules to any House.

What is this proposition? The rules of the House prescribe that no general legislation shall be permissible upon a general appropriation bill. This proposition is that we shall make in order 12 substantive legislative provisions that are reported in the Post Office appropriation bill and that, under the rules of the House, are not in order. It proposes, in addition to that, that we shall make in order for consideration by the House at this time a bill which comes from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a bill over which the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has no jurisdiction, a bill which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has had under consideration for some considerable time, but up to this time has not found itself prepared to report. It proposes that we shall make in order on this Post Office appropriation bill a bill that comes from the Committee on Agriculture, over which the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has no jurisdiction. It proposes we shall make in order on this Post Office appropriation bill an amendment not sent to any committee, not originating with any committee, but originating with individual Members of this House and formulated for the first time in a hearing before the Committee on Rules.

It seems to me, gentlemen, that without much argument it is clear that if we indulge in this method of legislation we might rs well abolish entirely this particular rule of the House with respect to general legislation on appropriation bills.

Now, what is it that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads proposes to have made legitimate by this rule? The new legislation that they propose is as follows: •
They provide for new equipment of railway postal cars.

For the prevention of combinations among bidders for postal contracts.

For bonding in the naval-postal service.

For a readjustment of compensation in certain cases after weighing.

For an extension of the eight-hour law.

For the amendment of civil-sevice rules, and the legalizing of labor unions in the postal service.

For the grading and compensation of railway postal clerks by the Postmaster General.

For a limited parcel post and the appointment of a commission to report on a general parcel post.

For a change in the compensation of rural letter carriers.

For free delivery in villages.

For the establishment, maintenance, and extension of postal savings depositories.

For the designation of naval clerks in the Marine Corps.

Each and every one of these is a substantive proposition, which is prohibited by the rules from being in a general appropriation bill. As legislation they are entitled to a separate report by that committee, to separate consideration by this House to be voted upon, under the penalty that if they are not, the appropriations to carry on the business of the Government shall fail.

Now, it is said that this is the only opportunity that we will have to vote upon these measures. If that be so, then the responsibility rests with the majority of this House. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was appointed on the first day of the first session of this Congress, more than a year It has never reported any of these substantive propositions. Nothing prevents it reporting each and every one of them in a separate bill within 24 hours of this time, and nothing prevents their consideration under the regular rules of the House. But if consideration under the regular rules of the House should prevent such consideration, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has a good case to appeal to the Committee on Rules for a rule for their consideration.

Now, then, what more does this rule propose by way of setting aside the rules of the House? It proposes that on a post-office appropriation bill you shall consider a bill to regulate commerce with foreign countries and between the States and to increase the facilities and the efficiency of the postal service, a bill that, as I have said, has been before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee for a long time and upon which testimony has been taken, about which that committee has not yet made up its mind, about which it has not reported, and which will involve, if adopted, an expenditure upon the part of this Government of some $34,000,000 to $40,000,000. You are asked to consider that out of its order by virtue of a rule in connection with legislation on a general appropriation bill from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

And that is not all. It is proposed that on this general appropriation bill you shall consider a resolution which went to the Committee on Agriculture and which means the opening wedge toward the initiation of Federal legislation for the building of good roads in this country. That is a measure that deserves separate consideration. That is a measure that deserves to go to the Senate for its approval, unaffected by any danger of cutting off an appropriation. That is a matter that the President of the United States has the right to consider, when he comes to sign or refuse to sign the bill, unembarrassed by any consideration relating to an appropriation.

And that is not all. We are asked to consider under this rule in connection with the general appropriation bill from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a provision which makes it incumbent upon the editors and managers and owners of every newspaper, periodical, and magazine in this country to spread upon their front pages the names of substantially all the parties connected therewith. That has not gone to any committee, has never been considered by any committee, and has never been urged, save by individual Members appearing before the Committee on Rules at a private hearing.

Now, without taking up the time of the House further, what I protest against is the inauguration of legislation by any such method as this. Why, this Chamber has rung, year in and year out, with denunciations of the Committee on Rules for compelling the House to consider measures arbitrarily at the instance of the Committee on Rules, fixing the method by which those measures should be considered; and yet in all the history of all the Congresses no Committee on Rules ever undertook to introduce and ask favor for a resolution of such a character as this. [Applause on the Republican side.]
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] charges the Committee on Rules and the House of Representatives with cowardice because of the presentation of this special rule. If I had to draw the indictment, it seems to me the charge would be different. I am not sure but that I would put it "foolhardy courage." No man on earth can justly say that the party or the committee which proposes to throw open to all amendments questions upon which the people of every congressional district in the United States are so much divided can justly be charged with cowardice or unwillingness to face issues. [Applause on the Democratic side. I

The proposition upon which the greatest assault has been made in connection with this rule is the proposition to give Federal aid to the post roads of this country. The statement was made by a distinguished gentleman on this side of the Chamber that that proposition had not received consideration from any committee of this House. Upon authority of numbers of gentlemen who are members of the committee that did consider it, I wish to state to that gentleman, as well as to the House, that for weeks this matter received intelligent and careful consideration by the Committee on Agriculture, by whom it was reported with scarcely a dissenting vote, if any, on either side of the Chamber.

Not only that, but, gentlemen of the House, your Committee on Rules was confronted by a petition signed by 225 Members of this body asking that the House of Representatives be allowed to vote on this proposition in connection with the Post Office appropriation bill, to which it is germane.

Gentlemen may scout the idea that the Committee on Rules should pay any attention to the wishes of the majority of this House. Ah, they have scouted that idea in the past. I remember another occasion, not many years ago, when the control of this House was in different hands, when the Committee on Rules did deny to nine-tenths of its membership a proper and legitimate petition.

But the American people repudiated such leadership, and they sent us here to-day because they believed the Democratic Party at least would pay attention to what the majority of the Members want, and would give effect to what the majority of the people of this country demand. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There are things in this rule that no gentleman will oppose. We propose to make in order, by this rule, provisions for better and safer cars for the railway mail clerks of the country. What gentleman will oppose it?

We propose to make in order-and it could not be in order but for the adoption of this rule-protection of civil-service employees from unjust discharge for political or personal reasons. What gentleman on either side of this Chamber will oppose it?

We propose to make in order an equitable and fair regrading of the railway mail clerks of this country. What Member, Democrat or Republican, dares oppose it?

We propose to prevent combination among bidders who are seeking to furnish the Post Office Department with supplies, so that the Government may be saved from extortion and robbery. What gentleman on either side of this House opposes it?

Mr. BARTLETT. If that be true, as doubtless it is, was a rule necessary in order to have these propositions put upon the

Mr. HARDWICK. A point of order might be insisted upon, and my colleague knows full well that if insisted upon it would be good.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman that these propositions ought to go on the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Those propositions ought to stay in, and this rule was the only way in which we could secure absolute safety on each one of those propositions.

We have also proposed to open up to the widest extent the parcel-post question, so that the Representatives of the American people may voice their convictions upon this floor, and so that the majority of the people of America shall have what the majority of the elected Representatives of the people declare they desire. Is that cowardice? Is that dodging? Is that shunning the question? Is that avoiding the issue?

The gentleman criticizes us for sending in here, to be voted on in connection with this parcel-post question, what is called the parcel-express question. Yet no gentleman will deny that there can be no intelligent consideration of the parcel-post question as a whole unless the Goeke bill be considered and settled.

Gentlemen insist that this rule is drastic; that it goes too Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, my reply is that the rule does nothing except let the House consider and vote upon each one of these questions and do whatever each Member thinks is right with each one of these questions.

Now, gentlemen, we have heard a good deal to-day about the details of this rule. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asked why we did not include the proposition of my colleague [Mr. Adamson] to regulate express rates. We did not do that simply because it was not germane to the question as to whether we shall have a parcel-post system or not.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will if my colleague will make it short.

Mr. MANN. It is germane to the question of taking possession of and purchasing the express companies.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all; because if we are to purchase them and operate them as a parcel-post system there will be no necessity whatever to regulate the rates they charge, because the Government will run the system and fix the rates by law.

Mr. MANN. No; but it is germane to have the right to vote on the alternative proposition, which you decline to give.

Mr. HARDWICK. We are to vote on the parcel post, and not on the regulation of express rates.

Now, what else? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] raised the point that we ought to have considered the Underwood resolution, simply providing for a commission to investigate the good-roads question. My answer to him is twofold: First, we felt bound to report what is known as the Shackleford proposition, because 225 Members of this House insisted that it was their desire to have a vote upon that question, and no demand whatever was made on the committee to report, in connection with this bill, the Underwood proposition. We do not submit the Underwood proposition in connection with the Shackleford proposition, because if the House of Representatives is to adopt the Shackleford proposition at all, there is no need to have a commission at all, because we will go much further than that at the first step. If the proposition should be beaten, the Committee on Rules have already reported favorably the Underwood resolution, and we can get a separate vote on the Underwood proposition afterwards.

Now, gentleman, a great deal of objection is raised to this rule, because they say it involves legislation in connection with an appropriation bill.

Let me say now what I said when this Congress was first organized, that it is my deliberate judgment that in 1837, when a coalition of Whigs and Independents forced this House, the Democrats being in the minority, to pass this rule which provided against legislation in connection with appropriation bills, they absolutely destroyed to a large extent the power, importance, and influence of the House of Representatives in comparison with other branches of our Government. The power over the purse, the power to deny appropriations unless legislation is granted, has always been the great power of the com-mons in every parliamentary body on this earth.

It was the power that forced right and justice from the Eng-It was the power that in the Constituent Assembly that secured the liberty and rights of Frenchmen. And to-day, my friends, it is the one thing that is needed to restore the American House of Representatives to that power, that influence, that dignity, that importance to which it is so justly entitled and of which it has been deprived by its cowardly surrender of its rights in 1837 and failure to resume them since.

[Applause.]

So far as the Democratic Party is concerned, we are willing to trust the people. So far as the Democratic Party is conwe believe that the Representatives who come fresh from the people every two years, who are accountable at frequent periods to the people who send them here, who have a practical recall constantly staring them in the face, can be trusted to protect the popular rights and to promote the interests of all the people. I believe that anything that enhances the power of the popular branch of Congress, anything which tends to increase its dignity and its importance, is a long step forward in the march of popular government.

So we present this rule, confident that the people of America will understand that so long as the Democratic Party is in control of this House, in this historic Chamber, the House of Representatives is going to assert itself; that we are going to legislate whenever the people demand it, and legislate in connection with appropriation bills; that the House in reclaiming to some extent its ancient prerogatives is taking a long step forward in the fight for popular government. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a division of the question on the substantive propositions.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's request is not in order.

Mr. MANN. Upon that I desire to be heard.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And I desire also to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois exactly what his proposition is.

Mr. MANN. I demand a separate vote on various substantive propositions in the resolution. I refer to the printed report. ask for a separate vote on the proposition on page 3, under the heading of section 8, providing for a rural parcel post, and under the same section, toward the top of page 4, providing for a commission; and also a separate vote on the three proposia commission; and also a separate vote on the three proposi-tions, following the language at the bottom of page 4, one a con-demnation of express companies, one the roads proposition, at the top of page 7, and the other the Barnhart proposition, at the end of page 7.

As to the others I have no desire for a separate vote, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Chair understands that I make a point of order that the request is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood and the Chair will hear the gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, paragraph 6 of Rule XVI reads as follows:

On the demand of any Member before the question is put, the question shall be divided if it includes propositions so distinct in substance that if one be taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

And the question is whether after the previous question has been ordered on the report from the Committee on Rules, or a resolution providing that certain things shall be in order, the substantive propositions in that resolution shall be separated and voted upon separately.

The matter is not without precedents in the House. The Speaker will remember that at the first session of the Sixtieth Congress the Democratic side of the House, under the able leadership of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, was conducting an open and avowed filibuster.

The Committee on Rules, on April 8, 1908, page 4505 of the RECORD, reported this rule as a privileged report, the report being made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]:

ing made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]:

Resolved, That on this day and on Thursday of this week the House shall take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 11:30 a. m. of the next calendar day; that on Friday, April 10, at 11:30 a. m., the Speaker shall declare the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill; that at 5 o'clock p. m. on Friday, April 10, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall declare the committee in recess until 11:30 a. m. on Saturday, April 11; that at 5 o'clock p. m. Saturday, April 11, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall declare the committee in recess until 11:30 o'clock a. m. on Monday, April 13.

That general debate on the naval appropriation bill shall close not later than at 5 o'clock p. m., Saturday, April 11; the time to be equally divided between the majority and minority and controlled by the chairman of the Naval Committee and by the senior member of the minority:
Provided, That if general debate shall be concluded prior to 5 p. m. on Saturday the 11th, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole shall at once declare the committee in recess until Monday, April 13, at 11:30 a. m.

On that report the gentleman from Pennsylvania demanded the previous question. The previous question was ordered. Twenty minutes' debate was had upon a side, precisely as has been the case in the present instance, with the exception that here the debate, by unanimous consent, has been a little longer, and the Speaker will notice that that entire resolution which I have just read related to the same general subject matter, namely, the meeting of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. When debate had concluded under the twenty-minutes-a-side rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD], the most distinguished parliamentarian upon that side of the House, if not in the country, rose and said:

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the resolution.

And he called attention to the rule which I have just read. He was asked by the Speaker to state the different substantive propositions, which he proceeded to do. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made this statement:

The resolution is nothing more nor less than a program of legislative proceeding, and it is absolutely impossible to make any distinction and take away a part of it.

But the Speaker, Mr. Cannon, who has at different times in the country, by different people, been accused of being a czar and of not giving the minority that fair treatment which they sometimes insisted they should have—and I think I have heard the gentleman from Texas make such remarks-said:

The Chair is prepared to rule. On a careful examination of this rule the Chair finds that there are five substantive propositions, and five only, so that if the gentleman demands a separate vote upon either or all of them a separate vote will be taken.

And a separate vote was taken.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the matter here is embraced in one substantive legislative proposition, and that is, Shall this resolution containing certain things, with one resolving clause, be adopted by the House? I freely concede that if there were several resolving clauses in the resolution, then the precedents are overwhelming that a division could be demanded upon each one of them. Let me call the attention of the Chair to this language in the notes to the Rules of the House of Representatives, at page 384 of the Digest, Sixty-second Congress, second session:

rate vote on each rule. In voting on the engrossment or passage of a bill or joint resolution a separate vote on the various portions may not be demanded or on the preamble of a bill.

If the Chair will permit me, I desire now to call attention to this precedent, which is found in volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, on page 599:

on page 599:

On December 2, 1901, the question was on agreeing to the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress, with the following modifications:

"1. That the special orders adopted March 8 and March 14, 1900, providing a method for the consideration of pension bills, claim bills, and other private bills, shall be continued during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

"2. That the place of the Select Committee on the Twelfth Census in the rules of the Fifty-sixth Congress shall be filled in the rules of the Fifty-seventh Congress by a standing committee on the census, to consist of 13 members, and have jurisdiction of all proposed legislation concerning the census and the apportionment of Representatives.

"Resolved further, That there shall be appointed to serve during the Fifty-seventh Congress a select committee on industrial arts and expositions, to consist of nine members, which shall have jurisdiction of all matters (excepting those relating to the revenue and appropriations) referring to the centennial of the Louisiana purchase and to proposed expositions."

Mr. CLAUDE A. SWANSON, of Virginia, demanded a division of the question.

Mr. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, urged that the first resolution with its modifications was not divisible.

The Speaker [Mr. David B. Henderson] said:

"The first branch of the resolution, as just recited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is not capable of division; the Chair so holds; but the Chair is of opinion that each resolve is a separate proposition, and a separate vote may be demanded upon it."

So, Mr. Speaker, in this proposed rule there is a single, simple proposition containing these matters with one resolving clause, that this resolution be adopted.

Therefore, if by a single resolution we could adopt the rules of the House, containing at that time 45 separate and distinct rules with a half dozen different modifications, and they were not subject to division upon the demand by a Member, for a much stronger reason there is nothing in this resolution that is susceptible of division. Now, let me go a little further. If there is anything in precedents, this one is directly in point. I quote from Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 600:

quote from Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 600:

On a resolution for the adoption of a series of rules which were not presented as a part of the resolution, it was held not in order to demand a separate vote on each rule.

On December 2, 1901, at the time of the organization of the House, the question was on agreeing to the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be adopted as the rules of the Fifty-seventh Congress," and so forth.

Mr. CLAUDE A. SWANSON, of Virginia, said:

"The resolution contains the proposition that we adopt all the rules of the last House, and therefore each rule is made a part of it."

So he demanded a vote on each rule.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair is clearly of the opinion that such a demand can not be entertained."

So there is another precedent, Mr. Speaker, directly in point. But, aside from these precedents, let us apply the rule of common sense. When you bring in a simple resolution as this embracing a number of propositions it should not be subject to division, otherwise when you bring in a bill under any such circumstances, by the same parity of reasoning, the gentleman from Illinois might demand a division of every section and line and sentence of such bill. Here is a plain proposition that gentlemen can decide whether they will adopt this resolution embracing all of these things or not. This is one substantive legislative proposition, and that is whether this resolution shall be adopted or not, and it is submitted to the House for that purpose alone.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas first claimed that a division of this question is not in order, because on the final passage of a bill or resolution a division is not in order. No one on this side, I think, is so simple-minded as to suppose that you can divide a bill into different parts on the final passage of the bill on a roll call. The gentleman then says that the proposition we now make is not applicable because it can only be applied when there are various resolving clauses in the resolution, and that if there were different resolving clauses in the resolution, then each of those resolving clauses would have a separate vote. First, Mr. Speaker, in the case which I have cited to you where the rule was made by Mr. Speaker Cannon there was but one resolving clause: second, if the gentleman from Texas were familiar with the provisions of the Revised Statutes which are applicable to this subject he would know that a resolution which has more than one resolving clause was out of order, because the statutes adopted by this House and Senate jointly provided:

No enacting or resolving words shall be used in any section of any act or resolution of Congress except in the first.

of it you have violated the statutes. Now, Mr. Speaker, the case which the gentleman stated does not bear out his contention. In the resolution which was offered referred to by the gentleman there was a proposition to adopt the rules of the previous Congress as the rules of the Fifty-sixth Congress. Mr. Speaker Henderson then held that the different propositions in that resolution were separable, and that one could have a separate vote upon each proposition involved, but he held, and held properly, that a resolution to adopt the rules of a previous Congress by itself was not subject to be considered as containing different substantive propositions and did not authorize a separate vote upon each of the rules of the previous Congress. No one seriously ever claimed that a proposition in this Congress to adopt the rules of previous Congresses would authorize a separate vote upon each rule, but when there was coupled with that proposition another resolution expressly providing another rule, the Speaker held that they were subject to separation, because each was a substantive proposition. I hope and I believe that the present Speaker of this House will without question on this subject follow the ruling of Mr. Speaker Cannon, made in fairness at a time when the House was under great stress of feeling and excitement on the request of the gentleman from New York, at that time representing the Democratic side of the House, in his request. Then the Speaker divided into substantive propositions a resolution wholly relating to the question of meeting and adjournment. There is the resolution, the different parts of which have no relation whatever to each other. I contend that the House is entitled, in voting, to vote upon the separate propositions, and is not compelled to carry out any bargain which may have been made by the supporters of the different propositions, of "you tickle me and I will tickle you," all at one time. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentle-man from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to say in discussing this proposition that it never was seriously insisted that a proposition to adopt a set of rules as a whole did involve a number of substantive propositions. On the contrary, if I heard the gentle-man from Texas [Mr. Henry] read aright, that contention was seriously made in this body during both the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Congresses by the gentleman from Virginia, Mr.

SWANSON.

Mr. MANN. I said no one now would seriously contend that.

Mr. HARDWICK. In the face of that ruling? Mr. MANN. In the face of any ruling. Mr. HENRY of Texas. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] resisted that argument and took the position I have now taken.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is refinement of reason, too fine for any ordinary man to follow, for the gentleman to say, when a proposition is brought into this House to adopt a set of 41 rules, every one of which is different, that that proposition does not substantially and on its merits involve a number of separate and distinct propositions, just as there are a number of separate and distinct rules of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. If a resolution were presented setting out each of the rules in 41 different places, does the gentleman doubt that would be subject to division?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not a bit in the world, nor do I doubt the other would.

Mr. MANN. How could you adopt a simple resolution to adopt a set of rules adopted by a previous Congress?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will allow me to answer the question, I can answer it. It does not matter whether you put it in one form or another. We are seeking matters of substance in questions of this kind, and if the motion is to adopt 43 separate and distinct rules there are 43 separate and distinct propositions involved in them, I do not care how many resolving clauses there are in them.

Now, it seems to me if the House of Representatives can adopt 43 rules on the first day of Congress as one substantive proposition, certainly, if we apply the principles of common sense to this proposition and not get into technical refinements like the gentleman wants to do, we could adopt 4 rules on the second day of the session or to-day as one substantive proposition. For the merits of the question are not different because we are approaching the end of the Congress instead of being at its beginning. Has common sense been altered because we are on April 18 of this year instead of April 4 of last year? If we could adopt 43 rules at the one time as one substantive proposition, it seems to me it is a matter of common sense that we can to-day adopt act or resolution of Congress except in the first.

The gentleman's proposition seems to be now that you can not have a separate vote upon anything unless in the preparation this decision is authority for the view he presents, but it is the only authority that he can lay his hand upon in all the realm of parliamentary law. It is without precedent and without parallel. Against that ruling we submit the ruling of Speaker Henderson on two separate occasions, of very much more importance than that to which the gentleman refers, when Democrats, standing on this side of the Chamber, were arguing exactly on the opposite side of the question. We say the precedents are two to one against the argument now urged by the gentleman from Illinois. And that was an order to adopt and fix a special rule coming from the Committee on Rules has special rights and privileges and is entirely different from what the situation would be if we were in the Committee of the Whole or in the House considering legislation. Common sense is on our side of this question; the precedents, by a majority of two to one, are on our side of the question; and we think the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] ought to be sustained.

Mr. MANN. In the case the gentleman cites did the Speaker, as a matter of fact, hold it was subject to division—the short decision by Speaker Henderson? The gentleman knows the resolution was never held by Speaker Henderson to be subject to a separate vote.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I did not so understand it. Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman did not.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the gentleman dispute the contention that Speaker Henderson twice held that a motion, no matter how it was framed, to adopt the rules of a preceding Congress, even if there were some 40 rules involved, was one question and indivisible? It does not matter at all, to my mind, whether there is one or two or three resolving clauses. It is a matter of substance, not a matter of technicality, that I am addressing my argument to.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me— Mr. HARDWICK. Yes— Mr. MANN. This resolution was offered:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Speaker Henderson held that that was not subject to division. Mr. HARDWICK. That is exactly what I thought, and what I stated to the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Speaker Henderson, however, held that a resolution to the same effect further on-

Resolved, That there be appointed, to serve during the Fifty-seventh Congress, a special Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions—

And so forth, all offered at the same time, was subject to division or a separate vote.

Mr. HARDWICK. I can see the reason for that. It is a different question.

Mr. MANN. Speaker Henderson said, "What will you divide?"

Mr. HARDWICK. The substantive propositions?

Mr. MANN. There was only one substantive proposition. Mr. HARDWICK. There is only one substantive proposition here, and that is to adopt this rule. [Applause.]
Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself knows that they have

Mr. MANN. The gentleman limited knows that they have added or collected up a variety of different propositions from different committees, all substantive propositions.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call to the attention of the Chair the phraseology of the rule. The rule begins with the declaration that certain legislation shall be in order, beginning with the resolving clause. If the Chair will turn, then, to the bottom of page 4, the Chair will see that a new and distinct proposition is then made, beginning with these

It shall also be in order, notwithstanding the general rules of the House, to consider in connection with said H. R. 21279—

That is, this bill-

the following-

Repeating substantially the language that is contained in the first paragraph of the rule; and it makes two propositions quite as cleary as if at the bottom of page 4 there had been another "resolved" put into the rule; and if the Chair has any question concerning the matter of the absence of the word "resolved" affecting the question, I call the attention of the Chair to volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, where it was held that merely formal words, such as "resolved," may be supplied by interpretation

Now, Mr. Chairman, it does not seem that there can be any question but that if this rule, up to the bottom of page 4, be voted out there is a substantive proposition remaining, or if the balance of 1, 2, 3, or 4 be voted out there are still substantive propositions remaining.

The SPEAKER. There are not very many precedents on this subject, one way or the other.

The two precedents cited from Speaker Henderson are really parts and parcels of one precedent. A division was demanded in a resolution. His first decision was that there should be a separate vote taken on each resolve. When that was through with, somebody undertook to divide the first resolve, and he held that could not be done.

The most elaborate precedent in the lot, and the last one, is that on page 4509, Congressional Record, first session of the Sixtieth Congress. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] reported a rule from the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] demanded a division, claiming that there were seven substantive propositions in the rule. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] took identically the same position then that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] takes to-day, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] took precisely the same position then that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] takes to-day. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] was himself mixed up in that debate. He seems to have agreed with the gentleman from New York on the proposition that a division could be had, but he differed from the gentleman from New York as to how many substantive propositions there were involved.

Mr. Speaker Cannon, after listening to the debate, decided that the division could be had.

So it seems to the Chair that the precedents are in favor of the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and against the point of order of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

In addition to that, it seems to the Chair that the reason of the thing is the same way. There are several substantive legislative propositions embraced in this rule that have no connection whatever with one another. A Member might, and most probably would, be in favor of some and against others. He has a right to vote his sentiments on each, which he can not do if they are bunched together. Therefore the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] is overruled, and the Clerk will report the first proposition. [Applause.]
Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. How many separate questions are involved, according to the ruling of the Chair—three or four?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going to pass on that, ecause the Chair thinks it is unnecessary. The first proposibecause the Chair thinks it is unnecessary. tion on which a separate vote is demanded is on page 3, section 8.

Including the first four lines on page 4. Mr. MANN.

The SPEAKER. Including the first four lines at the top of page 4, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of that part be dispensed with, as it has been read, and I think we all understand it. We can vote on it as the Speaker has designated it.

Mr. CARLIN. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call attention to the fact that the vote should be taken on that portion down to section 8, on page 3, before the vote is taken on section 8.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on agreeing to that part of the resolution extending down to section 8, on page 3.

The question being taken, the designated portion of the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first part, on which a separate vote is demanded. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] ask unanimous consent to waive the reading?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I believe I will withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the request. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 8. That hereafter postage shall be paid on matter of the fourth class at the rate of 12 cents per pound, except as herein provided.

That no article, package, or parcel shall be mailable as matter of the fourth class which exceeds 11 pounds in weight, except as herein pro-fourth class which exceeds 11 pounds in weight, except as herein provided.

That on each and all rural mail-delivery routes of the United States the postmaster at the starting point of such route shall, until June 30, 1914, receive and deliver to the carrier or carriers of said routes all articles, parcels, or packages not prohibited to the mails by law and falling under the definition of fourth-class matter and not weighing in excess of 11 pounds for transportation and delivery on said routes only; and the carriers shall receive at intermediate points on all rural routes such mail matter of the fourth class for delivery on their respective routes only.

That postage shall be paid on all articles, parcels, or packages entitled to transportation under the provisions of this act as matter of the fourth class on rural-mail delivery routes only at the following rates: One cent for each 2 ounces or less, 2 cents for more than 2 ounces but not more than 4 ounces, 3 cents for more than 4 ounces but not more than 8 ounces, 5 cents for more than 12 ounces but not more than a pound, and 2 cents per pound for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to and including a total of 11 pounds. That the Postmaster General shall make all rules and regulations necessary and not inconsistent with law to the proper execution of this act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before this matter comes to a vote I desire to ask whether this is the proper time to offer an amendment

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman can not move to amend it. The previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered. The question is on adopting that part of the resolution which has been read. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker. Mr. MANN.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 237, noes 0.

Accordingly the designated portion of the resolution was

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the balance of what is called section 8, providing for a general parcel-post commission.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for the purpose of a full and complete inquiry and investigation into the feasibility and propriety of the establishment of a general parcel-post commission of six persons, three of whem shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three by the President of the Senate, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcel post by Senate and House committees and take such other testimony as they deem desirable. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this commission the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that part of section 8. Those in favor of adopting as a part of the resolu-tion the paragraph just read will say "aye." Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 201, noes 6.

Accordingly the designated portion of the resolution was

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to taking a vote upon what is designated as sections 9 to 12, inclusive, on page 4.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that part of the resolution from 9 to 12, both inclusive.

The designated portion of the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a separate vote on the express condemnation provision, which, unless some one else desires a further separate vote, would include from the word "first," at the bottom of page 4, down to the bottom of page 6.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. It has already been read, and the only way anyone can get it read again is to request it and then have unanimous consent for it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understood the Speaker to direct the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did, but that was by inadvertence. Mr. HENRY of Texas. That was the reason I made the re-

The portion of the resolution referred to is as follows:

The portion of the resolution referred to is as follows:

First. In connection with section 8 of the bill the following:

"That in order to promote the postal service and more efficiently regulate commerce between the several States, the Territories of the United States, the District of Columbia, the possessions of the United States, and foreign nations the contracts and agreements and arrangements of the several express companies with the several railroad companies or other common carriers of the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia relating to the collecting, receiving, caring for, storing, dispatching, forwarding, and delivering by such railroad company or other common carriers of parcels, packets, and packages, and other express matter, as well as the franchises, operating equipment, cars, vehicles, horses, buildings, leases, as lessees, of buildings used in the conduct of the express business, and all other property or rights and privileges owned and used by such express companies as necessary and appropriate to such collecting, receiving, caring for, storing, dispatching, forwarding, and delivering of such parcels, packets, packages, and express matter, are hereby declared to be, and the same are hereby, condemned and appropriated to and for the United States of America, to be used by it for such public purposes as may be proper in its various functions. That the words "express company" as used in this act shall be construed to include any corporation, joint-stock company, association, partnership, and individual, as far as engaged in the collecting, receiving, caring for, storing, dispatching, forwarding, and delivering of parcels, packets, packages, and other express matter, by rail or water. And the words "railroad" or "railway company" shall be construed to include any transportation agency by rail or water as far as used as a post route or in carrying express matter. On and after July 1, 1913, any railroad, steamship, or other transportation agency having a contract with any e

"DUTY OF PRESIDENT AND POSTMASTER GENERAL,

"Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President on the 1st day of July, 1913, to take charge and possession of all the property of such express companies condemned and appropriated by this act, in the name of and by the authority of the United States of America; and therepon it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to employ said property and facilities in conjunction with the postal service, and to henceforth conduct said express service.

"POWERS OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

"Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to make and promulgate such rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall be subject to review and revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the courts in like manner and with like effect as if said rules and regulations had been made and promulgated by a railway company or other common carrier.

"COMPENSATION FOR BAILBOAD TRANSPORTATION.

"Sec. 4. That during the months of August and December, 1912, and April, 1913, the weights of matter carried over the respective railroads, under contracts with the express companies during the pendency thereof, shall be taken for each railroad company in respect to such contract, under regulations to be provided by the Post Office Department; and the amount of money paid for the carriage thereof to the railroad shall be divided by the mileage of such railroad over which such matter is carried; and thereafter the Postmaster General shall, if the railroad company consent thereto, cause to be paid to such railread company the amount per mile owing to such railroad under such contract as thus computed; and thereafter annually at such times as may be determined upon by the Postmaster General such matter shall be weighed, and the railroad company shall be paid monthly for the excess weight carried by it, over the first weighing herein provided, such sums as may be agreed upon for such excess weight; but if such Postmaster General and such railroad company shall fail to agree upon a basis of compensation for such excess weights, then the same shall he paid for according to the terms and provisions of the contract condemned in such case.

"RENEWAL OF TRANSPORTATION CONTRACTS.

"RENEWAL OF TRANSPORTATION CONTRACTS.

"Sec. 5. That at the expiration or termination of any contract between an express company and a railroad condemned by this act (or at any time before, if such railroad company shall consent thereto) the Postmaster General may contract with such railroad company for the transportation of postal express matter; and if deemed advantageous, upon cars provided by the postal department, which may be transferred without unloading onto the lines of other railroad companies, at such rates of compensation and upon such principles of computation thereof as may be agreed upon, with the right of review and revision of the same by the Interstate Commerce Commission as hereinafter provided. And in case the Postmaster General and such railroad company, after the expiration or termination of the contract with an express company, shall fail to agree upon the terms and provisions of the renewal thereof, they shall submit their respective contentions with reference thereto to the said Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall thereupon have plenary power to declare the terms and provisions which said contract shall contain; but from any determination with respect to any such contract the terms and provisions on which hall lie to the Court of Commerce, which shall enjoy like power to amend and revise the same.

"Appraisement of express companies."

"APPRAISEMENT OF EXPRESS COMPANIES.

"Sec. 6. That immediately after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to appraise the value of the property condemned and appropriated by the United States of America in section 1 of this act and award to the respective express companies just compensation therefor. Each commissioner shall take oath to justly perform such duties before some judge of the courts of the United States. The said Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to summon witnesses, with books and papers, before it, for either of the parties, and require such witnesses to testify, and it shall give to each party a full hearing; and it shall be the duty of such commission, on or before the 7th day of May, 1913, to file a separate award of appraisement for each express company condemned under this act, with respect to the property condemned, and give notice of the filing of such award to the Postmaster Geocral and 142 such express company. And if either party shall be dissatisfied with the amount of said award, the same may, upon appeal by either party, be reviewed and revised by the Court of Commerce, sitting as a court of review, with respect thereto; and from its determination a further appeal may be taken by either of the parties to the Supreme Court of the United States.

"PROVISIONS FOR COMPENSATION OF EXPRESS COMPANIES.

"Sec. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment to such express companies of the money adjudged to be due them, as aforesaid, out of the Treasury of the United States, and said express companies shall be entitled to payment of such final award as compensation from the Treasury of the United States and the Treasurer thereof, and the amounts of said award are hereby appropriated to the parties entitled thereto out of the Treasury of the United

"DUTIES OF COMMON CARRIERS.

"Sec. 8. That any willful failure or refusal by any railroad company or other common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to perform any service required by this act or by any lawful rule or regulation made and promulgated by the Postmaster General in pursuance of this act, or of any lawful ruling, finding, or determination of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or of any order, judgment, or decree of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction shall constitute a misdemennor, which, upon indictment and conviction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

" POWERS OF POSTMASTER GENERAL.

"Sec. 9. That the Postmaster General shall have power to rent, lease, or purchase real estate and personal property, supplies, cars, and equipment for use by his department for the purposes of this act. He shall have power to condemn in the name of the United States any property, real, personal, or mixed, which he may deem necessary for the efficient operation of the service, but the said Interstate Commerce Commission shall first value and file its award therefor as hereinbefore specified."

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of adopting this part of the resolution, beginning with "first," near the bottom of page 4, down to the bottom of page 6, the express-company provision, will say aye, those opposed no.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were 104 ayes and 89 noes. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LEWIS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. LEWIS. For the purpose of understanding the status of the motion. Is the House voting on the question as to whether the Goeke bill may be considered?

The SPEAKER. The House is voting on the question whether the designated part of the resolution concerning the express companies shall continue a part of it.

Mr. LEWIS. I wondered whether the House understood the proposition that it was voting upon.

The SPEAKER. The House is not adopting these propositions as a part of any law. It is simply voting as to whether certain things shall be made in order on the appropriation bill which otherwise would not be in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 99, answered "present" 8, not voting 106, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 19, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer O Lord our God, who committest unto us the swift and solemn charge of life, Thou hast made us to know how frail we are. In the midst of life we are indeed in death. And the sweet and joyous earth but mocks the hearts bowed down with grief unutterable and filled with sorrow too deep for tears. hearts are unspeakably pained for the homes made desolate and for those who on earth are to look in one another's faces no more. We breathe a sigh and a prayer for those who have been swallowed by the mighty deep. Take them, our Father, into Thy keeping, Thou who didst create us for Thyself ere into Thy keeping, Thou who didst create us for Thyself ere ever the earth or the sea was. May their souls rest in peace. If it be Thy holy will, restore to health and strength, we pray Thee, those who have been saved from the watery grave, and give unto them strength for the dark days to come. For those who gave their lives that these might live, we render Thee solemn thanks. Them we do not forget; their memory shall live forever.

And now, O Lord, where is our hope but in Thee, who art the God of all comfort? Though our flesh and our heart faileth, yet be Thou, O God, our strength and our portion forever. And unto Thee, who art able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; unto Thee, who art our God and our Father, be glory on earth and in heaven now and forever more. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Gallinger and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of the Woman's The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of the Woman's Missionary Society of Southern Utah; of the First Baptist Church of Montgomery, Ala.; of the Latter Day Saints' Relief Society of Ephraim, Utah; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Clio, Ala.; of the Fifth Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, of Montgomery, Ala.; of members of the Salvation Army, of Montgomery, Ala.; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mobile, Ala.; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Spencer, Mass.; and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Spencer Mass. Temperance Union of Spencer, Mass., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the East Washington Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against any increase being made in the salaries of officials of the District government receiving $2,000 and over, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Common Council of Nome. Alaska, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the incorporation act for the District of Alaska, providing for a more expeditious and economical method for the collection of taxes, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BROWN. I present for reference a petition in the nature of resolutions signed by a large number of citizens of Nebraska, members of the medical profession, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 1, known as the Owen medical bill, providing for a national bureau of health. that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD, omitting the signatures.

There being no objection, the body of the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, omitting the signatures, as follows: Hon. Nonnis Brown,

Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We, the undersigned citizens of Nebraska, practitioners and believers in various systems of healing, including allopathic, homeopathic, esteopathic, chiropractic, Christian Science, etc., wish to enter our protest against the passage of Senate file 1, known as the Owen bill, providing for a national bureau of health.

We consider that the older school of healing has shown, by its record of attempted legislation for more than 20 years, a desire to secure more power for its own special benefit, without advancing any reasons to show that the general public would profit thereby; they favor the Owen bill because it is in line with the legislation they have tried to secure.

We are opposed to the use of Government authority, funds, and other facilities in the interests of any particular school of healing, believing that any system which has merit can establish the same without the aid of Government authority. We claim the right to exercise our individual opinions in the selection of practitioners or systems of healing for our own use.

for our own use.

We believe that a national bureau of health means class legislation and is designed to deny to individuals the rights and liberties for which the citizens of these United States have contended from the beginning. Free government is measured by the liberty enjoyed by individuals, so long as those liberties do not encroach upon the rights of others, and any measures which might ever be enlarged upon or so construed that they would interfere with medical freedom strike at the very roots of free government.

We ask that you represent the rights of all Nebraska citizens and that you work and vote against this and any similar measures.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the East Washington Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation proposing to increase the salaries of the commissioners and other officials of the District government, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a petition from Ira B. Tice Lodge, No. 309, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Perth Amboy, N. J., praying for the passage of Senate bill 5382, the workmen's compensation bill. I have over 100 similar petitions from members of the same lodge, which I ask may be received with this petition and ordered to lie on the table

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. WORKS. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial, which I ask may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator John D. Works,

Washington, D. C.:

The Sacramento Branch of the National League for Medical Freedom, among whose members are many of Sacramento's prominent citizens, including lawyers, physicians (of other schools than allopathic), professional and business men and women, learning that the so-called Owen bill, to establish a national department of health, has been reported out of the committee, wish to authorize you in their behalf on the floor of the Senate to earnestly and emphatically protest against the passage of said bill as an insidious encroachment upon the sacred rights of individual and personal liberty and as a proposed step toward medical slavery through a system of state medicine which is as naturally abhorent to an American citizen as state religion would now be considered.

Jos. M. Anderson.

F. W. Richardson.

Mr. WORKS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Anaheim, Westminster, Santa Ana, Bay City, and Garden Grove, all in the State of California, remonstrating against any reduction of the duty on sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the First Presbyterian Church and of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to diminish the number of saloons in the District and for more stringent regulation of those now in existence, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES. I present various telegrams in the nature of memorials from citizens of the State of Washington, remonstrating against the passage of what is known as the Owen I ask that the signatures to the telegrams be medical bill. noted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and the signatures to be noted in the RECORD, as follows:

From Alex. Polson, of Hoquiam, Wash.; A. Lee Lewis, From Alex. Poison, of Hoddiam, Wash.; A. Lee Lewis, M. D., D. C., chiropractor, of Everett, Wash.; Senator E. M. Stephens, F. R. Pendleton, and W. REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 6221) for the relief of John W. Hagan, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which was agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 6156) to direct that Crittenden Street NW., between Iowa Avenue and Seventeenth Street NW., be stricken from the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia reported it. system of highways for the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 637) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnal D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them, reported it without amendment.

PROPOSED TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Mr. PENROSE. From the Committee on Finance, I report back, with a negative recommendation, the chemical schedule balk, with a negative recommendation, the chemical schedule bill, the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," and I submit a report (No. 636) thereon. I ask that the bill may go on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to inform the Senate that a report of the majority accompanies the bill.

of the majority accompanies the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the committee acted upon this bill yesterday morning and the report of the majority members of the committee has just been prepared. We have not had an opportunity to examine it. It is the purpose of the minority members of the committee to file a minority report in a few days, as soon as we have time to examine the majority report and prepare a minority report.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether it would be agreeable to the minority of the committee to have an effort made to have House bill 18642, what is called the metal bill, made the unfinished business of the Senate as soon as the present unfinished business is disposed of?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it is my purpose, and I announced that purpose one day this week, that as soon as a vote is taken upon the present unfinished business, the immigration bill, to move that the metal schedule bill be made the unfinished business of the Senate. I shall be very glad if at an early day the Senator will join us, and if we can get unanimous consent to fix a time when a vote shall be taken upon that bill with a view to facilitating as much as possible an early termination of it.

Mr. PENROSE. So far as I am advised by Senators who have informed me as to whether they will speak or not on the metal bill, I think it would be entirely possible to make a proposition to the Senate for a unanimous-consent agreement for an vote on the metal schedule, at the same time giving every Senator who has expressed a desire to speak full opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think at this stage we would be able to determine the length of time which will be required in order to give Senators a reasonable opportunity to discuss the I do not know of any disposition to prolong the discussion of the subject. However, there are quite a number of Senators who wish to be heard. After we have gotten into the bill and have ascertained by conference about how many Senators want to speak and how long it will take them to get through with the debate, we will be very glad to fix a day certain upon which the vote shall be taken.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) authorizing the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to occupy temporary structures erected by the American Red Cross and to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., and I submit a report (No. 638) thereon. As the measure is somewhat urgent and is brief, I ask for its present considera-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary. The amendment of the committee is to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the American Red Cross is hereby given permission to allow the temporary structure erected by it in Potomac Park under the provisions of the joint resolution approved May 11, 1911, to remain in position for a sufficient length of time to be used for exhibition purposes by the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at its meeting in 1912, and that authority is hereby given to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to grant permission to the responsible officers of the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to crect on the public grounds, on a site to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, such additional temporary structures as may be necessary for exhibition purposes: Provided, That the United States shall be put to no extra expense of any kind thereby, and that all the structures shall be promptly removed by the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at the close of the meeting and the site cleared of all débris and put in as good condition as before the erection of the structures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 6440) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to rights of way through certain parks, reservations, and other public lands," approved February 15, 1901; to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL (H. R. 21477).

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment providing that the appropriation for the development of a deep waterway in the Des Plaines and Illinois Rivers be made available for the improvement of the alluvial division of the Illinois River, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WORKS submitted an amendment providing for a survey of Redondo Harbor, Cal., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $40,000 for improving the entrance to Charlotte Harbor, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERCY (for Mr. WILLIAMS) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $180,000 for the improvement of Dog and Pascagoula Rivers, and Horn Island Pass, Miss., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

LOSS OF STEAMER "TITANIC."

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate upon a proposition that I think is of grave importance in connection with the appalling disaster upon the White Star Line. I read in one of the papers yesterday afternoon a state-ment that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is chairman of the Senate Committee, is supposed to have made in reference to this matter. I do not think that he made the statement; but I will read it, at any rate:

Senator Smith said that he feared his committee would be without jurisdiction to compel Mr. Ismay and other British subjects connected with the International Mercantile Marine to attend the hearing and give testimony.

"We may not have jurisdiction over the individual," said Mr. Smith, "but the American Congress is not without jurisdiction over the harbors of the United States. It is for these men who make use of the harbors to meet the public demand for information in regard to this terrible disaster, and to do it now."

Senator Smith said that he and several other members of this committee would present this argument to Mr. Ismay and others in the hope that they would be willing to accept subpenas from the Sergent at Arms of the Senate, who would accompany them.

Mr. President, I do not for a moment believe that the Senator from Michigan made any such statement as this. The Senator from Michigan is as thoroughly familiar with the rules and the procedure of the Senate as any Member of it, and is the proper man at the head of this investigation. I repeat, therefore, that I do not believe he made the statement that his committee was without jurisdiction in the premises, and that it depended entirely upon the voluntary acquiescence of Mr. Ismay to bring himself within the jurisdiction of the Senate.

In connection with this-which I consider a very important practical proposition-I want to read an interview with one of the passengers of this ship that has just been handed to me, published in the Washington Times of to-day, April 19:

ISMAY TOOK ONE OF FIRST BOATS, SAYS SURVIVOR—DAUGHTER OF CONGRESSMAN HUGHES TELLS OF HER EXPERIENCES AFTER WRECK.

NEW YORK, April 19, 1912.

New York, April 19, 1912.

Not only did J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star Line, get into one of the first lifeboats to be launched, but he was escorted and assisted by several seamen, while the women had to tumble in and take care of themselves, according to Mrs. Lucien P. Smith, daughter of Congressman Huones of West Virginia, and widowed bride of Lucien P. Smith.

Mrs. Smith told her experience through her uncle, Dr. J. H. Vincent, of Huntington, W. Va. "Capt. Smith was standing beside the boat when it was lowered. Mrs. Smith implored Capt. Smith, who was standing nearby, to permit her husband in the boat, but he refused. There were but 20 persons in the boat, having a capacity of 50 to 60, when it was lowered. Many more might have been saved in it. Mrs. John Jacob Astor was in this boat, and there was but one drunken sailor aboard to man it. The women had to row it as best they could. In the face of all this Capt. Smith refused the pleading of Mrs. Smith to let her husband in the boat.

"My niece saw Mr. Ismay leaving the boat. He was attended by several of the crew and every assistance was given him to get into the boat. And when the Carpathia came along and rescued the shipwrecked passengers, some of the crew of the Carpathia, together with men of the Titanic, actually carried Mr. Ismay to spacious rooms that had been set aside for him. As soon as Mr. Ismay was placed in his room a sign was placed on the door, 'Please do not knock.'"

Mr. President, the practical question is, What jurisdiction has the senatorial committee over the person of Mr. Ismay, the managing director of the White Star Line, who, in my judgment, 1 acted in a most cowardly manner in this disaster, and to whom I think it is largely attributable.

I want to say to the Senate that this entire question presents itself in three different aspects. The first aspect and the second aspect are ones with which we have no connection and over which we have no jurisdiction. The third is one over which I think we have complete jurisdiction.

In the first place, as to a civil suit against the owners of this line in the British courts. Under the English law the vessel is liable, but, of course, practically that liability can not attach. The passenger money is liable; the prepaid freight is liable; and under the law of England there is set apart, if I recall it rightly—and I think I am correct about that without having the time to examine into it closely—there is set apart £15 a ton for every registered ton of the vessel to compensate for losses.

Second, as to the criminal remedy. I apprehend, Mr. President, that there is no criminal remedy in the United States for the disaster. It occurred upon the high seas upon a foreign vessel, and the only criminal remedy is in the British courts. My own judgment is that this directorate of the company is liable to indictment and conviction in the courts of the country to which the vessel belonged. If this had happened upon an American vessel there would have been no question that indictment could have been found, and if the facts sustained the indictment, as I think they would, the directorate of this company, or rather the officers of the company, could be convicted of manslaughter, if not of murder, because it seems to me that the evidence is clear that this vessel was not properly equipped with efficient life-saving apparatus to accommodate its passengers.

Not only this, but another fact has come to light, it seems to me, without any contradiction, and that is that notwithstanding the repeated warnings the captain of this ship had, he nevertheless, rather than adopt the southern route, which would have brought him to New York perhaps a few hours later, took the northern route and encountered the dangers which were the cause of this appalling disaster.

I wish now to show the Senate that the jurisdiction here is in a committee of inquiry. I will now read merely a few lines upon the subject of whether there can be any criminal presentment or indictment in our courts. Speaking of crimes upon foreign-built vessel—I read from Moore's International Digest, page 264-it is said:

The crimes of murder and robbery, committed by foreigners on board of a foreign vessel on the high seas are not justiciable in the tribunals of another country than that to which the vessel belongs.

If an act of robbery or murder were committed upon one of the passengers or crew by another in a vessel at sea, the vessel being at the time and continuing under lawful authority, and the offender were secured and confined by the master of the vessel to be taken home for trial, this state of things would not authorize seizure and trial by any nation that chose to interfere, or within whose limits the offender might afterwards be found.

I will read just one more quotation.

Of offenses committed on the high seas on board of foreign vessels not being a piratical vessel, but belonging to persons under the acknowledged government of a foreign country, this court has no jurisdiction under the act of 1790.

We lay no stress on the fact that the deceased was a foreigner. Our judgment would be the same if he had been an American citizen. We decide the case wholly on the ground that the schooner was a foreign vessel, belonging to foreigners, and at the time under the acknowledged jurisdiction of a foreign Government.

These are Supreme Court decisions, from which I am reading.

Now, we come to the third proposition—and that is the reason I have risen—what jurisdiction has this committee?

Mr. President, in my judgment, there is not the slightest doubt about the proposition that this committee has absolute jurisdiction over Mr. Ismay, whether he is a British subject or not, not by his acquiescence, but for the purpose of compelling him to give testimony in relation to this matter. If he declines to give the company of the purpose of the purp declines to appear or declines to give testimony, then he can be committed for contempt and indicted in the courts of the District of Columbia. Therefore I do not suppose for a moment that the Senator from Michigan said:

We may not have jurisdiction over individuals, but the American Congress is not without jurisdiction over the harbors of the United States,

Of course, when a foreign ship gets into an American harbor, unquestionably our courts have jurisdiction over it for any offense that may be committed on it in the harbor. I will not trouble the Senate with reading the authorities on that point, because the authorities are uniform on that proposition. It matters not whether the persons who were in charge of the ship were foreigners or not; it matters not whether the vessel is a foreign vessel or not, when it once gets into an American harbor and a crime is committed in an American harbor, we have jurisdiction. This is criminal carelessness upon the part of the management of this company, for which the management of the company, however, is indictable in England for man-slaughter; but that is not the ground on which I stand. The ground I take is that under sections familiar, I suppose, to the Senate—sections 101, 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes it is provided—and as they are very brief, I will read them, because I think the committee ought to go to its full length and to the last degree in following up this case, as it is the only committee and this is the only body, with the exception of the House of Representatives, that has any jurisdiction over the matter at all:

Sec. 101. The President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or a chairman of a Committee of the Whole, or of any committee of either House of Congress, is empowered to administer oaths to witnesses in any case under their examination.

Sec. 102. Every person—

Now, it matters not, Mr. President, whether the person is a foreigner or not, because every foreigner, with the exception of foreign ambassadors and foreign ministers, is subject to the laws of the country if he is in the country. The place of his birth or the place of his residence has no connection with our jurisdiction over the matter under this act of Congress; jurisdiction over the matter under this act of Congress;

SEC. 102. Every person who having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jall for not less than 1 month nor more than 12 months.

SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact, or to produce any paper, respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 falls to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

These sections of the Revised Statutes have been before the

These sections of the Revised Statutes have been before the Their constitutionality was questioned by some of the ablest lawyers in the United States, but their constitutionality and the proceedings under them have been held to be valid and have been approved of by the court. I refer the Senate to a case that I will not read, in which the whole question was discussed-and it has been before the Senate several times beforethe case of Chapman v. United States (166 U. S., p. 211). will read one of the headnotes from the Appeal Cases, District of Columbia, page 302, where the whole subject was gone into and passed upon by the court, Justice Morris delivering the opinion of the court:

When a witness summoned to appear before a congressional investigating committee appears, and after consultation with counsel, refuses to answer questions propounded to him, and he is prosecuted under sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, it is not necessary for the prosecution to show that the defendant willfully refused to answer the questions, and that his refusal to do so was with bad faith and evil intent. His refusal itself is a deliberate and willful act.

Chapman refused to answer questions; he sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and the question came before the court. The court ruled against him, and he served his term of imprisonment under the sections that I have just read.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say that we have full jurisdiction in this matter and we ought to follow it to its bitter end; that is to say, the committee appointed by this body should not ask Mr. Ismay whether or not he will volunteer to testify, for it is not a gratuitous matter; it is not a matter that he can determine, but the committee have a right, with the Sergeant at Arms, to summon Mr. Ismay, and if he makes any attempt to leave, or if he fails to appear, or if he refuses to answer the questions, then, under the proper process of these sections, we have a right to ask the prosecuting attorney of the District of Columbia to indict him, and he is subject to imprisonment according to the decisions of the courts. We have a perfect right, Mr. President, to bring him here to the District of Columbia, and that ought to be done. He ought not to be examined in New York; he ought to be examined and appear right here, because this is a national disaster, and he ought to be made to give full explanation, and particularly an explanation why the managing director of the company, under whose orders evidently the captain of that boat was acting-it was not Mr. Ismay under the captain of the boat, but it was the captain of the boat under Mr. Ismay—why he permitted hundreds of passengers to perish and took, as he says himself, not the last lifeboat, but took the very first lifeboat for the purpose of escaping and making his way safely to American shores, I escaping and making his way safely to American shores, will not dwell, Mr. President, any further upon this, except to

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly. Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is chairman of the subcommittee, is not present; he is in New York; but, in view of the fact that the Senator has just said this investigation ought not to be made in the city of New York, but ought to be made in Washington, I will state to the Senator that at a metting of the subcommittee, of which I am a member, on yesterday evening it was the consensus of opinion of the committee that the investigation should be made here, as the Senator suggests, and the investigation will be made here.

The chairman of the subcommittee and one other member have gone to New York, not for the purpose of arranging or preparing for an investigation in that city, but simply for the purpose of getting some information that might aid us in beginning the investigation here in the city of Washington. I agree with the Senator. I do not think it would comport with the dignity of this Government for a senatorial committee to hold this sort of investigation anywhere else except at the Capitol.

I want to say to the Senator, with reference to his suggestion, that we have the power to subpæna Mr. Ismay and require his attendance—that I have no question about our power to do On the other hand, I have no question, Mr. President, that Mr. Ismay will come here and any other officer of that steamship line will come here, and be glad to come here, in order to answer any inquiry that this committee may see fit to make. I think any other course on the part of the officers and officials of that steamship line would be suicidal, and I think, if the Senator will consider the matter, he will take this view of it.

Mr. RAYNER. I am very glad of that, and the Senator and myself do not differ at all upon the method of procedure. I have absolute confidence in the chairman of the committee. do not think there is anyone more admirably qualified to conduct the investigation, and I do not believe one word of this publication; I am perfectly satisfied with the remarks the Senator from North Carolina made; and I know the Committee on Commerce and the chairman and all the members who compose the subcommittee will do their duty to the utmost degree.

Mr. Ismay is the managing director of the line. He was saved. Fifteen hundred human beings, including the captain and the crew, went down to their untimely deaths. Mr. Ismay claims, according to reports, that he took to the last lifeboat. I do not believe it, and if he did, it was cowardly for him to take to any lifeboat. As managing director of the line, to-gether with his board of directors, he is criminally responsible for this appalling tragedy. I have not the slightest doubt that the northern route was taken in obedience to his direct orders, and that with full warning he risked the life of his entire ship to make a speedy passage across the sea. No one can tell me that with the managing director of the line on board the captain did not act under his immediate orders. I care not what the rules of the English admiralty are. Here you have the spectacle of the managing director of the line failing to see that his ship was properly equipped with life-saving apparatus, heedless of the warnings that were sent to him that he was sailing in a dangerous sea, forsaking his vessel and permitting 1,500 of her passengers and crew to be swallowed by the sea. No pen can portray, no human tongue can describe the agonies of that chaotic night. There has hardly ever been a calamity upon the land or the sea, there has hardly ever been a battle fought between the nations of the world that equals it in the terrible details of sacrifice and suffering.

We must be prepared to meet death in whatever shape it comes to us, but the distraction, the martyrdom, and the agonies of separation that took place on board of the sinking ship are too fearful for the mind to dwell upon and contemplate, but Mr. Ismay, the officer primarily responsible for the whole disaster, has reached his destination in safety and unharmed.

No legislation can bring back to earth a single life lost upon that fatal night. What we can do is to help to fix the responsibility, if possible, and rely upon British justice to bring to bay the guilty directorate of this company.

Mr. President, this is where the trouble lies. We punish inferior officers and subordinate employees for neglect of duty, but the men at the head who give the orders and reap the profit we permit to escape. All the civilized nations of the world will applaud the criminal prosecution of the management of this line, and if they can be made to suffer, as they ought and should be, no sympathy will go out for them, and if it does it will be hushed and drowned and submerged in the overwhelming lamentation that to-day reechoes throughout every quarter and section of the civilized world, for the victims of their culpable carelessness, a recklessness that sent hundreds of their fellow beings into eternity, desolating homes and firesides, and turned this land into a house of mourning.

In this hour of our calamity we appeal to the God of the universe for strengthening faith, and we appeal to the majesty of the law to deal out retributive justice to this guilty company to the last degree.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Morning business is closed. The Secretary will report the unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that to-morrow, Friday, April 19, 1912, following the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to consider S. 3175, "To regulate the immigration of aliens to and residence of aliens in the United States," and will vote upon all amendments pending or that may be offered and upon the bill itself before adjournment on that calendar day.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consic ration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, which I wish the Secretary to read.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposet

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be read for information.

The Secretary. In section 3, page 9, at the end of line 18, after the word "labor," insert "if otherwise admissible," so that the proviso as amended would read:

Provided: That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in proof of the fact that skilled labor, under this bill without this amend-ment, may be admitted without any of the excluding tests provided for in the bill, section 5, in part, says:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the provisions of section 3.

Now, I want to state, Mr. President, that along with a majority of those who have spoken on this bill I am unalterably opposed to any legislation which does not, to the fullest capacity of this body, commensurate with the best interests of the United States, impose such restrictions in our immigration laws as will prohibit the continuance of the startling facts disclosed in the report of the immigration commission.

The immigration commission has summed up the facts as they were set forth yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham]. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that according to the last census the increase of population in the United States in the last 10 years is 15,997,691 for continental America. The aliens imported covering the same period nental America. The aliens imported covering the same period numbered 8,795,386, leaving the increase of native Americans 7,182,305, or less than half the increase in the census period of 10 years.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly

Mr. SHIVELY. Is the Senator certain that that means children of native birth? Does it not mean likewise children of foreign parents?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will come to that later and make that differentiation.

According to a report of the Bureau of Immigration, an average of 274,437 of the aliens coming in return abroad yearly. We had no law or provision to take a census of those returning until 1908, 1909, 1910. Therefore, the figures cover those three years and the average for those three years is, as I said, 274,437. It makes within the 10-year period a return of 2,744,370. That is, taking the 3-year average as an average for the 10-year period. The total number of immigrants for the 10-year period was 8,795,386.

Now, deducting 2.744,370 from the total number of foreigners brought into this country during this period, we have left as citizens, or as permanent residents, 6,051,016, not including, as the Senator from Indiana says, the children born of foreign parentage.

Taking into account the children born to parents of foreign birth, it will be seen that the increase in population in the last decade is more than half foreign born or born of foreign parents.

On page 103 of the commission's report they take in a period of 11 years. The total number of immigrants brought in during that period was 9,955,673. Of that total only 7,121,335 gave any evidence of having any money at all; that is, 7,121,335 had a total amount of money aggregating $206,145,738. In 1907 alone, according to figures calculated by the commission, which appear on page 103 of the report of the Immigration Commission, the total amount of money shown by all the immigrants arriving during the 11 years was estimated to be $206,145,738, while it is estimated that $275,000,000 was sent out of the country by these aliens in the year 1907 alone.

This year, 1907, is the high-water mark in the number of immigrants who came to this country in a single year. Deducting $75,000,000, for the reason that there were an unusual number for this year, and putting the average at $200,000,000 annually, they have sent out from this country in the decade from 1901 to 1910, $2,000,000,000 to foreign countries.

Mr. President, we have heard the argument made here that every time there is brought into this country a product of foreign labor it displaces a like amount of domestic production. That is availed of as an argument for the protection of American industry. Here we have foreign laborers to the number of 9,000,000, brought in in a decade, sending out of this country $2,000,000,000 within a decade, coming in competition with American labor, and taking from American workmen $2,000,000,000 within 10 years. Supplanting with this vast army of foreigners a like number of American laborers. These foreigners have no right in justice, and should have none in law, to be given the privilege to take such a stupendous amount of money from American laborers.

I call the attention of the Senate to the class who come here, because I am addressing myself not only to the amendment I sent to the desk but to the plea that we should retain in the bill the literacy test and every other test that is possible to restrict this immigration and to leave our American citizenship as nearly American as may be.

It is interesting to note the class that come here. to the same report of the Immigration Commission the number reported as to employment was 7,048,953. Of the skilled occupations there were 20 per cent; farm laborers, 23 per cent; laborers in other occupations, 19 per cent; and professionals, $1\frac{4}{10}$ per cent. According to the universal rule the professionals are those who are mentally and educationally prepared to enter into the higher divisions of our labor or of our institutions. They compose 14 per cent, while all the balance were common laborers. On page 100 of this report the acteal numbers are given and I will have them incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

article from the New York Herald of April 13, 1912:

TROUBLE AHEAD.

TROUBLE AHEAD.

We call attention in the news columns this morning to the flood of immigrants now pouring into the country through the port of New York. They are coming in larger numbers than ever before. In March 83,654, a record number for that month, passed inspection. So far in April 6,000 more have entered than for the first half of April last year. Some 3,000 a day, often more, have to be examined by the immigration inspectors. Almost needless to say, it is impossible to determine properly in the time that can be given each of them the fitness of any such number for entrance. At the very most 1,800 can be cared for with the quarters and the staff at the command of the Commissioner of Immigration.

Hence a large number of most undesirable persons are being necessarily admitted. We pointed out in the Herald months ago, with the warning that immigration would probably be higher than ever this year; that at the present time nearly two-thirds of the inmates of the public insane asylums of the metropolitan district are of foreign birth. The ratio will be even higher after this. Insanity is only one of the undesirable qualities in such a heterogeneous mass. It may be fairly taken as an index of what can be confidently expected from our short-sighted policy.

This must stop. We need better immigration laws but above all we policy.

This must stop. We need better immigration laws, but above all we need at once more inspectors to enforce our existing laws properly. We are laying up physical, mental, and moral trouble for our people. Who is to blame?

Mr. President, there is a point I have not heard touched upon by any of those who have discussed this question and I invite the attention of Senators present to it particularly. The per cent of males who come to this country is 65. Sixty-five per cent of all those who come into this country are males and there were during this decade something like 5,000,000 adult males brought into America of foreign birth and added to our population.

Taking into account the fact that the native increase must of necessity be infants, 21 years must clapse before the native born can become a voter while the foreign immigrant within 5 years or less can become a voter. Therefore, the immigrant who comes into this country can become a voter four times over during the time necessary for the native born to reach the age of maturity. And if the parity between the native born and immigrants remains the same the voting strength of the foreign element that comes into this country is four times that of the native born. So the yearly influx of new immigrants, with the increase of those already here, will soon outnumber if they do not now outnumber the native voting population.

Again, if the influx of immigrants approximates the number of service hore, as they are Joing new that a children.

of native born, as they are doing now, their ability as relates to males to become voters, as I said a moment ago, is four times as great as the native-born child. For example, a male child born of native parents in 1901 can not become a voter | citizen to vote?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I also submit the following | until 1922. He will have lived through two census periods before becoming a voter, while the adult immigrant during this same time will have become a voter four times over. If the number of native born as relates to sex is about evenly divided and the percentage of the male among the immigrants remains the same, the proportion of the native voting population is overshadowed by the immigrant male population 15 per cent.

To put it in another way, it takes 21 years for a native to produce by natural increase a voting citizen, while it takes only five years for an immigration company or a steamship company to produce a voting citizen in America. If the number of male children born to native parents were just equal to the number of male immigrants coming in each year, the voting power of the foreigner would be, according to our law, four times as great as that we guarantee to the native born. When the native-born child, therefore, with all his American training, American association, American instinct, and love for his country arrives at the age of 21 he is confronted with four times as many foreigners without that training and without that native attachment.

These are the figures gathered from this report, last year 1,040,000; in 1907, 1,300,000 immigrants. So if by the last census we had brought into this country more aliens capable of becoming citizens and voters than all the native-born population, that would be bad enough if a child were born capable of voting in five years; but he has got to live 21 years before he is allowed to vote, and in that time each yearly influx of these foreigners is either adding to or subtracting from the sum of American spirit and American progress.

This feature of it I have not heard discussed. Therefore, having arrived at a period in our history where our institutions are established, where the genius and power of our Government is known, it becomes the duty of every Senator on this floor and of every citizen in America to throw every safeguard around our institutions and leave the period of 21 years as the proper schooling to raise a full-fledged, safe, educated American voter and demand its equivalent in the immigrant admitted to citizenship.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I have just come into the Chamber. Is the Senator directing his remarks to a proposition that we should place a limit of time as a requisite to the right of a naturalized

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not, Mr. President, I am not advocating a 21 years' period of residence here, but I am advocating an equivalent in education for the 21 period demanded of a native born. I am advocating that we shall incorporate into this bill such requirements as shall guarantee that when the immigrant does become a citizen of this country he shall at least be upon an equal footing, so far as education and equipment for citizenship are concerned, with the boy who is born on American soil.

Mr. CLAPP. Has the Senator an amendment pending to that effect?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have offered one.

I asked the question merely for information.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, I think the time has arrived, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said yesterday, when we should at least have some regard for the American. I am not going to go into that phase of the question covered by him. I have here a report from the Census Bureau, and in it is a point that should be of some interest to Senators and to the country at large.

In 1890 the number of acres of land, if it were apportioned according to population, per capita, was 30% acres; in 1900 it was 25 acres; in 1910 it was 20 acres, or in a period of 20 years the per capita possibility of possession of American land had I think with all our laws for the conservation of natural resources the time has arrived when we should enact some law for the conservation of the resources of this country for the use of the native-born American citizens. To allow for eigners to come in and preempt our lands is a crime against the boys and girls of this country who are to marry now and in the Take a man who possessed 2,000 acres of land. inarries, he has 5 children; in one generation he dies, and his estate is divided, and there are 400 acres apiece. That is one generation. In the natural order of things I think we have arrived at a point in our history-our territory is known and the average yearly increase of our native citizenship is knownwhen we should not allow aliens indiscriminately to come into this country under the specious plea of certain corporations, certain manufacturing and other enterprises for skilled labor: under the cry of American industries for further labor to de-Let them train American hands and American velop them. heads to do American work and give to Americans the wage which the work demands and profits justify, the wage commensurate with the work they do. There is not a man before me to-day, either on the other side or on this side, who dares stand up and declare that the poverty stricken, the politically incompetent who troop to this country from Europe ever receive or are worthy of receiving the wage that an intelligent American citizen doing like work should receive.

Here we are, with our population increasing by leaps and bounds, boasting of the development of this country, which development is done at the expense of the man who is forced to labor for the benefit of the man who does not have to labor. Take the scene that was enacted just a few months ago in Lawrence, Mass. It remains history without my reciting its terrible phases.

Now, I shall not speak longer on this subject. The ground was admirably covered from another standponit yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Others have spoken. But I to-day stand here and protest that the development of American industry is put in the scale against the development of American citizenship and we have got to a point where we must declare for which side we stand.

What question is of more import to this country than the question of adequate and remunerative employment to the mil-lions of American men? The contentment, progress, and development of American citizenship depends upon this. The vast industries that accumulated and aggregated capital desire still further to develop should and could give to American laborers such remunerative employment as would in nowise retard the progress of American enterprises and would tend largely to the betterment of all classes of labor.

I put it to Senators before me to-day, which of the two would you prefer to see, a less rapid progress of the development of American industries or a more rapid rise in the comforts and conveniences of the American laborer? That is, if it were necessary to develop in a lesser degree our American industries, if by so doing, without detriment to the country at large, we could, in justice and fairness, increase the comforts and conveniences of those who labor? If you vote to open wide the door to foreign immigration into this country, you vote to supplant, beyond a doubt, American labor with foreign labor for the benefit of American capital. If you vote to restrict immigration, you vote to increase the demand for American labor, to increase the opportunities to it for better living and better homes.

It is not a question with me as to what section is benefited or what section is not benefited. It is a question with me, Shall the marvelous resources of this country yet undeveloped be left for American citizenship to develop and to receive the benefits of the wealth that they produce, or, by throwing wide our doors to the overteening millions of foreigners, bring them in competition with American labor?

It is a significant fact that only 1.4 per cent of all the immigrants who come are possessed of such wealth and education as to make them competitors in the professional and higher branches of American industry.

If we are to open the door to immigrant labor, let us open the door to foreign capital-to those who can come here and offer opportunities to American boys and American girls in the development of American resources with foreign capital, rather than let American capital in its greed and avarice bring in foreigners in competition with the boys and girls of this country to the detriment of our citizenship and to the benefit of the already overrich, overgreedy, and overselfish under our protective system.

I do not think there is a question as to how the Senate should vote on a proposition to reinstate the illiteracy test and any other legal test that will restrict this influx. Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do. Mr. CLAPP. I have not examined this particular question. Do I understand the Senator to imply that the illiteracy test does not apply under the present bill to skilled labor?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From the reading of the bill I am persuaded that it does not. If the Senator will take pains

Mr. CLAPP. I am not entering into any controversy over it. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I say it does not, in my judgment, apply, and therefore I think the words offered in my amendment should be added after the word "labor," as indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that a vote can not be taken on the amendment until after the committee amendments have been disposed of. The amendment will be considered as next pending. The question is on the committee amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The Secretary. Beginning on page 7, line 11, after the word "prescribe" and the semicolon, strike out all of the bill down Beginning on page 7, line 11, after the word to and including the words "unless otherwise excluded" and

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

[Mr. STONE addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken upon the amendment I desire to make one or two changes in it so as to perfect it. I call the attention of the Chair to section 3, page 8, line 8, where occur the words "unless otherwise excluded." They do not belong to the amendment. The semicluded." They do not belong to the amendment. The semi-colon, it will be observed, comes after the word "apply" in the preceding line, and the words "unless otherwise excluded" belong to the amendment which was put in yesterday. It belonged to the amendment which took the place of that, and it ought to have been stricken out. That those words were not stricken out is my fault. I repeat they do not belong to the literacy amendment.

In section 3, page 7, line 14, after the word "dialect," to insert "including Hebrew and Yiddish." I do not think there is any doubt that they are now included, but I desire to have this amendment made to the amendment before it is voted on to conform to the provision reported by the House Committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota? Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I do.
Mr. CLAPP. Might not putting in those words possibly raise a doubt as to some other cases? I suggest that to the Senator.
Mr. LODGE. I think that is possibly true, Mr. President, and I will therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHIVELY. It will have a tendency—
Mr. LODGE. I do not think it does in the least. One is a language and the other is a dialect.

In the same section—the exceptions begin in line 20-I move to insert a clause which I take from the House bill. On page 7, line 22, after the word "Mexico," I move to insert the words "nor to aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, in section 3, page 7, line 22, after the word "Mexico" and the comma, it is proposed to insert:

Nor to aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amend-

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to have this amendment acted upon? I am simply attempting to perfect the committee amendment, and the Senator can offer his amendment later.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let the amendment be again stated, Mr.

President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment proposed by Mr. Lodge, Mr. SHIVELY. Would the Senator confine that to religious persecution? Suppose they desire to come on account of political persecution?

Mr. LODGE. If you open the question of political persecution, you open a wide field, which it will be almost impossible to determine. As I have said, I took the House provision on the subject. They have given it long consideration, and I think it is wise and is as far as it is necessary to go.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. STONE. Where is there now religious persecution? Who would be subject to it?

Mr. LODGE. I think there is something very much resembling religious persecution in Russia. I think also that in the case of some of the Christians in the Turkish dominions there is religious persecution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHIVELY. Take the case of the exodus from Germany in 1848. That was purely political.

Mr. LODGE. I think so, Mr. President, but I do not think there is any political persecution of that kind now in existence. I think if you put in "political" you practically destroy the effect of the provision.

Mr. SHIVELY. Well, we are making an act of legislation. I do not think we are legislating with reference to the precise present conditions. It does not seem to me that we ought to have a limitation in this bill, and such a clause as is proposed will operate as a limitation in the event of the exodus from a foreign country here because of political persecution.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. I was out of the Chamber when the Senator made his statement in regard to the amendment to the amendment. Do I understand the Senator to say that the text of the literacy clause eliminates persons coming here on account of religious persecution?

Mr. LODGE. No; I make that an exception to the literacy

Mr. RAYNER. I do not understand the Senator. Mr. LODGE. It is an exception—an exemption.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask what is the exception? I did not hear it.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment to the amendment proposes to exempt those persons from the literacy test.

Mr. RAYNER. What persons? Mr. LODGE. Persons who come here on account of religious persecution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, what is the question?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the committee amendment as perfected by the Senator from Massachu-

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the amendment to the committee amendment been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not an amendment to be voted upon; it is an amendment to perfect the committee amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, Mr. President, I wish to offer as a substitute for the whole committee amendment—is not this the committee amendment?

Mr. LODGE. The committee a strike out the literacy-test clause. The committee amendment is now pending to Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to offer a substitute. Mr. STONE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STONE. I understand that the committee reported an amendment to the bill striking out the provision relating to the literacy test.

Mr. LODGE. That is the pending amendment.
Mr. STONE. The pending amendment is to strike that out. Now, do I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts is seeking to change the text of the bill in that respect?

Mr. LODGE. I am seeking to perfect the clause which it is proposed to strike out, which is, of course, entirely in order.

think the Senate rule is very clear on that point.

Mr. STONE. The point I have in mind is, if the vote is

Mr. STONE. taken upon agreeing to the committee amendment and that is voted down, then you could change the provision.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I have proposed an amendment to the amendment. I am not sure whether or not the Chair put the question on that amendment; but, if not, I will ask the Chair to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not put the question because the Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts was simply perfecting a pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I was trying to do. It is in the nature of perfecting an amendment, but I think the question will have to be put on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the committee amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I beg pardon. As I understand, the committee amendment is not what the Senator is proposing

Mr. LODGE. I am proposing to amend the clause which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. BACON. Of course, but not the committee amendment, because the committee amendment is to strike out.

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendment is unamendable. Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. BACON. Of course.
Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
Mr. LODGE. The Senator from North Carolina, I understand, desires to offer a substitute for the clause that is proposed to be stricken out, so I ask that the question be first put on my amendment.

Mr. STONE. I again rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STONE. I am not an expert upon this sort of thing, but it does seem to me that when a committee reports an amendment under the usual procedure the first thing is to determine whether the Senate agrees to the committee amendment to strike out or to add, as the case may be, particularly to strike

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may read the rule— The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please do so. Mr. LODGE. It is as follows:

Pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

There is no question about the rule.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not understand that the Senator from Massachusetts makes any motion to strike out and to Mr. LODGE. That is the pending motion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The pending motion, as I understand it, is a motion to strike out.

Mr. LODGE. The pending motion is to strike out a clause.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly.

Mr. LODGE. Which clause is open, and it does not make any difference whether you propose to insert or not. which it is proposed to strike out is amendable, of course. There can not be any question about it parliamentarily.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There can be a question about it, because I myself question it.

Mr. LODGE. It is the first time I ever heard it questioned. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it now in order to move a substitute for the part of the bill which it is proposed to strike out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not until after the question has been voted on to perfect the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the amendment had been perfected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been voted upon.

Those in favor of the amendment—
Mr. BACON. What is the amendment?
Mr. LODGE. The exemption from the literacy test of persons who are seeking admission on account of religious persecution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the first amendment to be voted upon. The question is on agreeing to that amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now, the question is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President— Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am going to rise again to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask what is the pending question?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the committee amendment to strike out certain lines of the bill on pages 7 and 8.

Mr. STONE. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out certain lines?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending question.

Mr. STONE. Now, the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to amend the amendment of the committee?

Mr. LODGE. No; the amendment of the committee is to strike out and that is unamendable. The question now before the Senate is the motion to strike out. Pending that, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons] proposes to offer a substitute for the portion of the bill which it is proposed to strike out. If that prevails, the pending question will be on a motion to strike out the provision which has just been sub-stituted and, if that fails, the question will recur on the original proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand; Mr. President, it is now in order to offer a substitute? Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send forward to the Secretary's desk a substitute for the whole provision which it is proposed to strike

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In lieu of the portion proposed to be stricken out, it is proposed to insert the following:

That after four months from the approval of this act in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age and physically capable of reading and writing who can not read and write the English language or some other language: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted to this country may bring in or send for his wife, his children under 18 years of age, and his parents or grandparents over 50 years of age, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are so able to read and write or not.

That for the purpose of testing the ability of the alien to read and write or not the inspection officer shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on uniform pasteboard silos, each containing no less than 20 nor more 25 words of said Constitution printed in the various languages or dialects of immigrants in double small-pica type. Each alien may designate the language or dialect in which he prefers the test shall be made, and shall be required to read and write the words printed on a slip in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit:

"(a) All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States; (c) all allens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely want to point out the differences between the provisions proposed to be stricken out of this bill and the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina. The pending provision reads: All male aliens.

The substitute of the Senator from North Carolina reads: All aliens.

The Senate provision prescribes reading and writing, while the other prescribes reading alone; otherwise they are the same in substance and in intent.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that under his amendment husband and wife might be separated, one being admitted and the other not. His amendment is different in that respect from the provision of the pending bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. What section of the bill is that? *
Mr. SHIVELY. It is the section to which the Senator from North Carolina has offered a substitute. The concluding phrase of the section as it is in the bill is as follows:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. What line of the bill is that? Mr. SHIVELY. It is on page 11.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means the bill of the committee?

Mr. SHIVELY, Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would remain in the bill. Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator has offered his amendment, as understand, as a substitute for the whole section.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I offer it only as a substitute for the part which is proposed to be stricken out, beginning on page 7, line 11, after the word "prescribe," and extending through on page 8, line 8, to the word "excluded," before the word Chinese.'

Mr. SHIVELY. I understood the Senator very distinctly to announce that it was for the entire section.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I said for the portion proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I rise to a question of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming will state his question of order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to ask if this amendment is now in order? I understood that in the consideration of this bill the committee amendments were to be disposed of first. The committee amendment now under consideration is an amendment to strike out. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina would be a proper amendment to the bill provided the committee amendment should fail, but I can not see how it is in order at this time, when the order of business is the consideration of committee amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts stated his view of the differences between the provision in the bill and the amendment which I have offered. not cover all of the differences. Under the provisions of the bill the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe the rules by which the allen's capacity to read or write is to be tested. The substitute that I have offered prescribes the test itself; that is, that he shall be able to read some part of the Constitution of the United States, and that the immigrant in-spector shall be furnished with the parts of the Constitution the immigrant shall be required to read. It also provides that that section of the Constitution shall be printed in the various languages of the immigrants.

Another difference between the provision now in the bill and the substitute proposed by me is that the present bill has this provision:

This provision, however, shall not apply to citizens of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or Mexico.

I have left that out of my exceptions to the provision. Then there are certain references to Porto Rico and the Philippines which I have left out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair holds that the substitute is in order under Rule XVIII. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. The House text provides for a test of both reading and writing?

Mr. SIMMONS. The House bill does not provide for both reading and writing. It provides only for reading. The Senate bill provides the double test—reading and writing. The House bill does not. Mine follows the House bill in that respect, or rather the House bill follows mine.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina why he seeks to strike out the writing test.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did that on the supposition that if the allen could read he could write. I thought, at least, if he could read that would be sufficient. The great object is that they shall be able to read the newspapers and thus advise themselves with reference to American institutions and the American Government.

I confined it to reading, because I thought that was sufficient. I thought if the immigrant was able to read it would furnish him the sources of information, such as an American citizen should have, and that it is not particularly necessary that he should be able to write. I will say to the Senator that I think it would be a very rare instance where he would find a person who can read who can not also write, and for all practical purposes the reading test will cover it as well, as a rule, as will the writing test

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from North

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator desires to add that, I have no objection to it

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I hope the Senator will permit

it to go in now

Mr. SIMMONS. As there is some objection to this, in order to perfect it I will ask that the word "writing" be inserted after the word "reading" wherever it occurs in my substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The word should be inserted in both That affords a more certain and definite test. places.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I want to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that in carrying this test to the extent of ex-cluding females who can not read and write I think he is presenting a policy which would be bad for the United States.

Mr. LODGE. If I heard the amendment aright, it exempts the wife and children.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If that is true I did not correctly understand it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not the law before me.

gan "all aliens," whereas the language of the bill is "all male aliens." The point I want to probe it it. The point I want to make is this: If we are to have immigration, we want families. If a man is able to read and write we do not want to keep him out because his wife is unable to read and write.

Mr. LODGE. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina provides that a person now in may bring in or send for his wife and children and his parents or grandparents.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was misled by the opening words of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. LODGE. This is merely on the question of substitution. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. STONE and Mr. SHIVELY demanded the year and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senate, the Secretary will state what is proposed to be stricken

The Secretary. The committee proposed to strike out, on page 7, line 11, beginning with the words "all male aliens," down to and including the words "unless otherwise excluded," in line 8, on page 8. The Senator from North Carolina proposed for the words to be stricken out certain other words.

Mr. LODGE. Which was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. It is now proposed to strike out the substitute. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let us have it read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let us have it rend.

The Secretary read as follows:

That after four months from the approval of this act in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age and physically capable of reading and writing who can not read and write the linglish language or some other language: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted to this country may bring in or send for his wife, his children under 18 years of age, and his parents or grand-parents over 50 years of age, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are so able to read and write or not.

That for the purpose of testing the ability of the alien to read and write or not the inspection officer shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on uniform pasteboard slips, each containing no less than 20 nor more than 25 words of said Constitution printed in the various languages or dialects of immigrants in double small pica type. Each alien may designate the language or dialect in which he prefers the test shall be made, and shall be required to read and write the words printed on a silp in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit; (a) All allens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There seems to be a little confusion as to the precise question now to be voted on. As I understand, the committee submitted an amendment to strike out a certain portion of the bill. The Senator from North Carolina moved a substitute for the language which the committee recommended to be stricken out. The substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina was adopted, and now it is proposed to vote upon the recommendation of the committee to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the situation.

Mr. LODGE. Those who favor the literacy test will vote "nay," those opposed will vote "yea."
Mr. SHIVELY. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the motion to strike out the provision as amended was not agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another committee amendment which has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. That disposes of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 18—
Mr. LODGE. Oh, excuse me, Mr. President. There is a committee amendment which is connected with this one.

The Secretary. On page 18, line 12—Mr. LODGE. I ask that it may be disagreed to, in order to make it conform with the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. The amendment on page 18, and, of course, it falls or stays with the original amendment.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is the line?
The Secretary. On line 12, page 18, where the committee propose to strike out the words "he who is unable to read and write or.'

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit an amendment to section 2 of the bill.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 20, strike out the word "four" and in lieu insert "ten," so that if amended it will rend:

Sec. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $10 for

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is sometimes called a head tax. It is in reality a steamship tax; is levied upon the steamships, paid by them, and can not under the pooling and monopoly conditions which exist be shifted by them to the passengers, as I shall show. In 1883 Congress levied a tax of 50 cents upon every immigrant coming into this country, and required the steamship companies to pay it. The steamship com-row about this proposed amendment now. They paid it under protest, and then brought suit and carried the case all through the courts, contending that it was an unconstitutional tax-carried it to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the case is to be found in the One hundred and twelfth United States Supreme Court Reports. I simply call the attention of the Senate to the case in order to show that those who were fighting the tax were the steamship companies. It is known as the headmoney case, and it was brought by the Cunard Steamship Co. and other steamship companies.

Since that time Congress has increased the tax from 50 cents to $1, and then from $1 to $2, and in 1907 the Senate increased the tax from $2 to $5. It went to the House of Representatives, and the House amended it, making it $4, which it is to-day, and is the amount provided for in this bill.

At no one of these times was there a corresponding increase in the steerage rates, but as a rule there was, as in 1907, when the tax was doubled, being increased from $2 to $4, a decrease in the steerage rates of from $1 to $2, owing to the fact that the conference of steamship officials which met and do meet regu-larly to fix rates thought that the traffic would bear only a little less rate to yield them the greatest possible aggregate profits.

I want to read an extract from a book on immigration, by Prescott F. Hall, to show what was done at the time when the Congress increased the tax and to show what is being done to-day by the steamship companies to defeat this amendment.

For example, while the matter was pending in the House the western agents for a foreign steamship company sent the following telegram to numerous persons:

Immigration bill comes up in the House Wednesday; wire your Congressman, our expense, protesting against proposed exclusion and requesting bill be defeated, informing him that vote in favor means defeat next election.

At about the same time the agents and representatives of the same firm sent out a letter stating that if the Lodge bill became a law, immigration would be restricted "almost to the extent of a law, immigration would be restricted annual total exclusion "—a most absurd statement—and saying that total exclusion "—a most absurd to defeat the bill. With this letter was sent a slip, as follows:

Wire your Representative fully and let us know cost of telegram and we will promptly refund amount to you.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator tell us what company it was that caused these telegrams to be sent?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was the North German Lloyd Steamship

If I had time—I do not propose at this late hour to take up much of the time of the Senate—I could show that this amendment has been indorsed and recommended by the Farmers' Union. 'The resolution which I hold in my hand and which I wish to print in the RECORD was passed by that organization.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Whereas the United States Immigration Commission will report to the next session of Congress recommending legislation; and Whereas we are unalterably opposed to the present foreign influx from southeast Europe and western Asia, its proposed distribution and diversion to the South and West, and have in local, State, and National conventions resolved in favor of the enactment and vigorous enforcement of rigidly restrictive immigration laws: Therefore he if

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to call your attention to the recommendation of the Immigration Commission, which spent a million dollars in investigating this question, and it is one question upon which they did not differ. There was a minority report of one on the illiteracy test, but the commission unanimously suggested:

A material increase of the head tax.

It is not only recommended by the Farmers' Union, but is recommended by the National Grange; not only by the National Grange, but by the National Farmers' Congress; not only by the National Farmers' Congress, but by the American Federation of Labor; not only by the American Federation of Labor, panies raised a great row about it then, as they are raising a but by the Patriotic Order Sons of America; not only that, but by the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and the Knights of Labor. All of those organizations have recommended this amendment. If there is one thing which the American people are in favor of, since I introduced it four years ago, it is this amendment. Resolutions in favor of it have been passed by every patriotic organization and nearly every farmers' organization in the Union. So I say it is desired by the American people.

Let us see how much the steamship companies make out of these immigrants. I saw in the New York Sun a few days ago that on two days of last month there landed in New York 21,000 immigrants. A table, which I propose to publish in the RECORD without reading, shows that they landed over a million immigrants in this country last year, and have been landing about a million a year for some time, and carry back about a half a million a year.

The table referred to is as follows:

Immigration.)

Statistics furnished to the Government by steamship companies. (Required by act of Feb. 20, 1907.)

Not given after 1909.

Note 1.—The distinction "Immigrant alien" and "nonimmigrant alien" is fanciful, the only difference being as to whether the alien comes for the first time or comes intending to remain. A "nonimmigrant alien" is so classified if the alien says he expects to return to the allen" is so classified if the allen says he expects to return to the native land.

Note 2.—Although 9,787,239 aliens entered this country during the last census decade (1900 to 1910), the Census Bureau reports that our foreign-born population increased only 3,129,700, which tends to show that the number of allen departures reported by the steamship companies falls short of the number that actually leave the country. The Immigration Commission reports that "at least 40 per cent of those coming return" taking a minimum of $250,000,009 annually out of the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the price of steerage passage? Mr. OVERMAN. What is the price of steerage passage? In 1883 it was $25 to $30; now it is $35 to $40. So they realize from the steerage passengers alone coming this way at least $35,000,000 annually. Now, let us see what profits they are making. This great trust, this Steamship Trust, which has been indicted and is being prosecuted by the Government, I understand, a few months ago declared dividends as follows, to wit, Hamburg-American Line a net profit of $10,900,000 and the Bremen Line a net profit of $10,900,000 and the Bremen Line a net profit of $10,375,000.

[From the New York Sun, Mar. 15, 1912.]

BREMEN LINE DIVIDEND-NORTH GERMAN LLOYD LINE TO PAY 5 PER CENT FOR 1911.

The North German Lloyd directors met in Bremen yesterday and decided to declare a dividend of 5 per cent at the general meeting to be held on April 3. The managing director's report showed profits for 1911 of $10.375,000, a gain of about $875,000 over 1910. The profits are largely the result of improved freight conditions in South America and Australia, the North American passenger traffic showing a falling off.

The general-expense fund of the company was increased to $5,175,000, as against $5,100,000 in 1910, and in the figures for 1911 is included $375,000 for extra depreciation of seagoing vessels. The insurance fund was increased by the addition of $365,000, the reserve fund by $100,000, the renewal fund by $225,000, and the extra reserve fund by $68,750. The increase in the reserve fund was approximately $750,000 in 1911, as against $500,000 in 1910.

The financial position of the company has been considerably strengthened, as the indebtedness decreased from $9,100,000 at the beginning of 1911 to $4,875,000 at the close of the year, while the debts owing to the company on January 1, 1912, amounted to $4,255,000, as against $3.875,000 on January 1, 1912, amounted to $4,255,000, as against $3.875,000 on January 1, 1912, amounted to $4,255,000, as against $3.875,000 on January 1, 1912, amounted to $4,255,000, as against $3.875,000 on January 1, 1911. Included in the indebtedness of the company is a large amount of money which has been paid on steamships now under construction and shortly to be finished.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN REPORT—A NET PROFIT OF $10,000,000 FOR YEAR IS SHOWN—BY MARCONI TRANSATLANTIC WIRELESS TELEG TO THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, March 13, 1912.

Berlin, March 13, 1912.

The report of the Hamburg-American Line for 1911 shows a net profit of 43,799,044 marks (about $10,900,000).

Deducting interest on prior loans, there remains 40,520,185 marks. Of this sum 1,348,108 marks has been assigned, in accordance with a statute of the company, to the insurance and reserve funds, and the sum of 27,676,412 marks has been employed in writing down the value of ships, etc., and adding to the renewal fund and other accounts.

The available balance is 11,495,605 marks, which admits of a dividend of 0 per cent, leaving the sum of 245,605 marks over.

Most departments of the company's freight business show highly satisfactory development, but emigration to the United States suffered an appreciable reduction as compared with 1910.

[From the New York World, Mar. 12, 1912.]

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD SHOWS BIG PROFITS—INCREASE FOR YEAR IS $850,000, AND DIVIDEND GOES FROM 3 TO 5 PER CENT.

BREMEN, Monday.

The annual report of the North German Lloyd was submitted at a meeting of the directors to-day.

The report shows gross profits for the year of 41,500,000 marks ($10,375,000), an increase of 3,400,000 marks ($$50,000). A dividend of 5 per cent was recommended, as against 3 per cent last year.

The report says the reduction in the receipts, due to a failing off in North American passenger traffic, was more than counterbalanced by increased freight earnings in the South American and Australian services.

I am going to show you that the steamship lines can afford to bring every single immigrant who came here last year-in round numbers more than a million-for absolutely nothing in order to get the price which they get for the immigrants who return, and thereby realize a good profit.

During the last 10 years the immigrants returning from this country to Europe have averaged nearly 400,000 per year, according to their own statements. Multiply the steamship rate, $35, by 400,000, and you have $14,000,000 which they realize from steerage passengers alone that they carry away from this country. The report of the Industrial Commission shows that the actual cost to bring an immigrant to this country is from $6 to $8. Put it at the highest sum, to wit, $8. It costs them to bring here 1,000,000 steerage passengers $8.000,000. Then they get from the returning immigrants $14,000,000 and make a net profit of $6,000,000, even if they did not charge a cent to bring a million immigrants here.

We want to increase this tax in order to increase the revenue, because the administration of this bill, if we should adopt it, is going to cost a great deal more money.

These immigrants come here and share in our blessings, but they do not share in our burdens. They get the advantages of our schools, but they pay no taxes. They get the advantages of our charitable institutions, but they contribute nothing to their support.

To-day in the asylums of New York there are 30,000 insane people, and it is reliably stated that of those 30,000 insane persons 15,000 are alien born, and the taxpayers of New York are required to support them. These steamship companies, this great trust, which is said to be the greatest trust in the world, have organized for the purpose of bringing all kinds of people from all over Europe to this country for the revenue they get from bringing them here and carrying them back. These returning immigrants have carried back and sent from this country in the last 10 years, according to the report of the Immigration Commission over $2,000,000,000 to enrich southeastern and other countries of Europe. I ask the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] if there has not been an organization in Europe to bring these people here in order to get the wages we pay them, expecting them to go back to enrich their country? remember when I made a speech on this subject four years ago there was a gentleman sitting in the gallery who came to me and said: "I am a contractor. Last year I worked 150 Austrians who belong to the Austrian Army. They were sent here for the purpose of working to get money from this country to carry back to their country."

I say, in view of the enormous sums of money these steamship companies get from the immigrants, they can well afford to pay this head tax. Why have they increased the steerage rates? Why did they increase the steerage passage from $20 to S35 before we ever levied a dollar head tax? It costs them but $8 to bring an alien here, the report says. Some reports say it costs them only $6, but the extreme cost is $8. Then if we make this tax $10 the immigrant will not pay it, but the steamship companies will pay it and help us to get some revenue to administer the laws of this country, and it will, in a measure, reimburse us for the financial burden the traffic has entailed.

Mr. President I am going to close by reading an extract from

Mr. President, I am going to close by reading an extract from an article written by the secretary of the Immigration Commission. He wrote a very interesting and able paper in the North American Review, and he has recommended in the highest terms a material increase in the head tax.

American Review, and he has recommended in the highest terms a material increase in the head tax.

The term "American wage carner" is rapidly becoming a misnomer. Almost three-fifths of the employees of the principal branches of mining and manufacturing in the United States at the present time are of foreign birth, and about one-fourth are of races from southern and eastern Europe. About one-fifth of the total number of wage earners were born in this country, but their fathers were born abroad. Less than 20 per cent of the entire operating forces of our mines and manufacturing establishments are native Americans. In many of our industries the proportion of employees of foreign birth ranges as high as 75 per cent, with a corresponding falling off in the number of native Americans. Among bituminous coal and fron-ore mine workers, by way of illustration, less than one-tonth are native Americans. The fact of greatest import in connection with the situation is that about one-half of the industrial workers of foreign birth are southern and eastern Europeans and Asiatics, principally representative of the north and south Italians, Poles, Croatians, Greeks, Lithuanians, Russians, Portuguese, Slovenians, and Russian and other Hebrews, This transformation in the racial composition of the wage carners of the country has been brought about by the immigration to the United States during the past 30 years.

The most general effect of this extensive employment of recent immigrants in American industries is found in the character of the industrial communities of the country at the present time. There is no manufacturing city or town or any mining community of any importance in the Middle West, New England, and the Middle States which has not a foreign section made up of industrial workers from southern and eastern Europe. In the older industrial workers from southern and eastern Europe. In the older industrial workers from southern and eastern Europe. In the older industrial workers from southern and eastern Europe of immigran

Mr. President, early in the session I introduced a comprehensive bill for the restriction of immigration, including this amendment, the illiteracy test, and other restrictions, many of which have been included in this bill reported by the committee. I am sorry they did not report an increase of the head tax from $4 to $10. They did include the illiteracy test and then reported an amendment to strike it out, which, I am glad to say, the Senate has just defeated. I have been for years an advocate of that restriction also. I hope, Mr. President, my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina fell into one error when he said that the Immigration Commission unanimously recommended an increase in the head What the commission did was this: After recommending that some measure should be adopted to restrict a certain class, the least desirable class, of immigrants coming to America, the commission said:

The following methods of restricting immigration have been sug-

And then they gave the list, and occurring in that list appears what the Senator read as to the head tax. They did not recom-mend it. What they did do was to say, after suggesting all these different methods by which it might possibly be done:

A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

So the commission never have recommended an increase of the head tax.

I want to make only one suggestion in connection with this matter. I will not detain the Senate. The head tax was originally laid in order to provide a revenue which would be sufficient to enforce the immigration laws of the United States. The rate now established by law is amply sufficient for that purpose. By the report of the commissioner general for the year 1911 it appears that it not only provided for all the expenses of administering the immigration laws, but left an excess of $1,080,000. So as a revenue producer no increase in the head tax is required.

Individually I may say as a member of the commission that I was very much opposed to attempting to restrict immigration by the imposition of a head tax for the reason that it will prevent the coming of families. I have no faith whatever that we can increase the head tax $6 on every person coming without getting an increase in the rates charged by the steamship companies.

Mr. OVERMAN. When we raised it to $4 did the steamship companies increase their rate?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. We raised it at different periods—50 cents at a time or $1.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator if they increased the rate before

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not remember.
Mr. OVERMAN. The report shows that they did.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. I simply express an opinion, that we can not do this without getting an increase of the steamship rates. I am expressing my opinion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand. Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am not bringing any knowledge to bear on the question.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator was on the commission, and I think he should have the information. I will ask the Senator if the mere cost of bringing them here is not $8?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. I fon the report.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. If so, I did not know it. I do not know it now. I do not say that it is not so. What I want to say about it is that if this is a tax upon the incoming alien and is not borne by the steamship company it would operate badly upon the question of immigration as affected by the bill, for this reason: Substantially 82 per cent of the present immigration coming from southeastern Europe is made up of single men. The 18 per cent who want to bring their wives are the ones out of that immigration we would like to have come, if any of them are to come, because when a man brings his wife and has a family there is a chance to make a citizen of him.

Now, take all the other immigration-36 per cent of all we are receiving now is of the old type coming from northwestern Europe, and they are the ones who bring their wives and their children. If this is to operate as a tax upon those men, women, and children coming, you can see at a glance what a discouragement it will be to a man who has a wife and, we will say, a ment it will be to a man who has a wire and, we will say, a family of three, four, or five children.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield the floor. I have said all I rose to say

Mr. OVERMAN. But I want to ask the Senator if the steamship companies do not pay the tax?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think the steamship companies pay the tax.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They make an arrangement by which they pay the tax, but they charge it in the price of bringing the immigrants here.

Mr. OVERMAN. They pay the tax. A protest was made by them in the head-tax cases and they brought suit against the payment and carried the case to the Supreme Court

Mr. DILLINGHAM. By an arrangement between the Government and the steamship companies they collect it through the steamship companies, but, of course, it comes out of what is paid to the companies by the immigrants.

Mr. WATSON. I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina by striking out "ten," before the word "dollars," and inserting "twenty-four." The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. In lieu of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, striking out "four" and inserting "ten," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert twenty-four."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts, in charge of the bill. What is the amount of money which in the administration of the immigra-What is the tion laws is required to be shown by the aliens?

Mr. LODGE. The law originally provided for what was known as the immigrant fund, and that fund was set apart and used only for immigration expenses. A few years ago-

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Senator does not understand me. Mr. LODGE. It was provided that a surplus should be put in the Treasury, and the fund was abolished.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not ask about the head tax Mr. LODGE. Last year there was $1,080,000 more collected than was spent. My remembrance is that the expenditure was My remembrance is that the expenditure was between two and three million dollars. Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Massachusetts has misunderstood me.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not ask about the head tax; I know that; but I understand that in the administration of the law, in order to inform themselves as to whether or not the immigrant is to become a charge, they require him to show a certain amount of money.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Thirty dollars.

Mr. LODGE. As I recall it, that is a regulation of the Immigration Service. There is no law requiring them to bring any amount of money

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the law is simply that they are at liberty to prevent anybody from coming in who is liable to become a public charge. Now, then, they make each immigrant fill out certain blanks and they make the steamship company do it, and, amongst other things, there is a blank after the words "money possessed by the immigrant."

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. That is a matter of administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the administration of the law what is the amount of money beneath which they would consider be was lightly to become a public charge? I have beaut that they was liable to become a public charge. Now, then, they make each liable to become a public charge? I have heard that they require him to have $30.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct. It is $30.
Mr. LODGE. It is not exactly that they require that, but they look on it, when it is less than that, as an evidence that he is likely to become a public charge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With less than $30, unless there is something to rebut the inference, they would conclude that he is liable to become a public charge.

I asked that question, Mr. President, with this view: I think that every real good object had in view by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina could be better obtained by a provision requiring-the immigrant to show himself in the possession of, say, $50, which is an increase of the amount now required; in other words, to see to it that the immigrant had $20 more than is required now. But we let him keep the money, because if he is going to be admitted amongst us, the more money he has in his pocket the better for the American people and the better for him, the less liable he is to become a charge, the greater encouragement he has to make himself self-supporting; and if he should be slow about getting a job the less risk we would have to incur of having to take care of him while he was getting it.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one moment. It seems to me, on pages 24 and 25 of the bill, where these blanks are required to be Mr. WILLIAMS. filled out, if instead of saying "amount of money possessed by the alien" you substitute some language about to this effect, "to ascertain whether the alien possesses $50 or more," make that requirement on the other side and make the steamship companies attend to it, you would accomplish the very good purpose that you have in view, and yet we would not be taking comparatively poor people's money which we did not need to administer the immigration laws.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think that the steamship companies that may be interested in the steel company or some other corporation who want to bring these laborers here would give them money to put in their pockets when they might give it to them to pay their way here?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They will not give them that money to show.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think they would give them the money. They want to get their work here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They will have to show it before they start to satisfy the steamship company, and then they will have to show it after they get off the steamship to satisfy the United States authorities. The steamship company is hardly likely to give them $50 apiece to show after they got off the ship.

I am in favor of the restriction of immigration, but I am in favor of the restriction of unfit immigration. I am not in favor of any provision which merely restricts immigration simply because it does restrict it. I would not levy a tax upon a comparatively poor man under the pretense that it is necessary for the administration of the immigration laws if it were not really necessary, but for the protection of the American people I would not only be entirely willing but glad to vote for a provision that a certain amount of money should be shown by the immigrant to be possessed by him before he landed upon our shores, say, $50, an amount which, in our opinion, furnishes a good security against his becoming a public charge.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly. Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I may illustrate the theory of the administration of the present law in this way: A young man presents himself for admission at Ellis Island. He may be 25 years of age, strong, healthy, vigorous, capable of taking care of himself, and destined, for instance, to Pittsburgh, where he expects to secure work. In the administration of the law the inspectors do not deem it necessary that he should have in his possession a large amount of money. If he has a comfortable amount with which to reach his destination and get himself established and sure of work, there is very little expectation that he will become a public charge. But a man who is 60 or 65 years of age, who has passed the meridian of life, may have $500 in his pocket, but he has no object in coming here, no employment that he intends to take up, and that man is much more liable to become a public charge than the young man who is facing a job and has a smaller amount of money.

That perhaps is not a very clear illustration, but I think the Senator will get the idea I have in mind. It is not the amount of money he possesses so much as it is youthfulness, an abun-of money he possesses so much as it is yourn'threes, an abundance of health, and the prospect that he will enter into work. I only wanted to say that by way of explanation as to the way the present law is applied at the immigrant stations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is very true; but if that man on his way to Pittsburgh has but $4, let us say, or $5, and something happened—he is taken sick or some accident occurred—he would the properties of the provided of the properties. become almost immediately a public charge. The same man with $50 in his pocket would have enough to have the attendance of a physician, and before his $50 was expended he would be well again. So there are many things that might happen. Another thing. He might be going to Pittsburgh to get the job, with every reliance that he would get it, and if he got there and got it, if he did not have but 50 cents in his pocket, it would be all right. But suppose something happened so that he did not get it. His $5 would soon be gone and he would be a public charge on some private or public charity. If he had $50, it would be reasonable to suppose that he could get work before his $50 was exhausted.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.
Mr. ROOT. On page 103 of the first volume of the report of the commission there is a table showing the amount of money brought in by immigrants, and the percentages are exhibited. It appears that in the years 1904 to 1910, inclusive, the seven years, only 13.9 per cent of the immigrants who were admitted showed $50 or over. So there would be $6.1 per cent of those immigrants who would not have come up to the test of showing $50 or over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I frankly confess that is a greater percentage than I thought and that the provision would be very much more drastic in results than I apprehended.

Mr. ROOT. It is rather stringent. It appears also that the average amount of money shown, based on the number who showed money, was $28.95, and the average amount, based on the number admitted, which, I suppose, would include women and children, was $21.57. I should think such an amendment would be rather revolutionary of the whole proceeding

Mr. WILLIAMS. I frankly confess, Mr. President, that from the percentage given by the Senator from New York, as I had never had the occasion or the opportunity, or never had both at the same time, to look into it, that the effect of it would be very much more far-reaching than I had thought or more far-reaching than I would like to have my amendment go.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, there was one circumstance mentioned by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] the other day. It is that a great number of these immigrants come in with letters. They have letters from their friends giving them reasonable ground to expect employment, and great numbers of them have railroad tickets to carry them to the place where they are assured by their friends who had come here before that they will have employment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. About 80 per cent.

Mr. ROOT. As the Senator from Vermont suggests, that is the case with 80 per cent of those who come in. That kind of circumstance may well be taken into consideration by the commissioners in determining whether the immigrant is likely to become a public charge. I think it would be unfortunate for us to set up a simple rule of requiring so many dollars, putting the dollar above the man.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Watson] to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Over-MAN].

What is the amendment to the amendment? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. In the head-tax provision strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-four."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary. In section 2, page 2, line 20, before the word "dollars," strike out "four" and insert "ten."

Mr. OVERMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. CLAPP's name was called). The junior Senator from Minnesota has been called out of the Senate on business.

I will again Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). announce my pair and the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I make this announcement of my pair for the day.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I am not informed as to how he would vote on this amendment, and I will refrain from voting. If I were at liberty to word, if would vote "nay."

Mr. BACON. I have been requested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain] to state that he has been necessarily called away from the Chamber.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I shall ask that the announcement stand for all other votes on the bill. Were I permitted to vote on this amendment, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

CLAPP] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota. I do not know how he would vote if he were here. Observing the pair, I desire to state that if I were at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I again announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on business of the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed]. I wish this announcement to stand for all the votes to-day.

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I should like to ask whether the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nixon] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Nevada has not voted.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a general pair with that Senator. I do not know how he would vote on this question. If he were present, I would vote "yen."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gone] and vote. I vote "yea,"

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not announce my pair when my name was reached. I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead]. I do not know how he would vote. I therefore withhold my vote. I think if he were here we would vote alike.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 32, as follows:

So Mr. Overman's amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary. In section 20, page 44, line 11, after the word "hereof," it is proposed to insert the words-

Any alien who shall take advantage of his residence in the United States to conspire with others for the violent overthrow of a foreign Government recognized by the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I accept that amendment, Mr. President. I think it ought to be put in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the reading of the amendment "any alien who shall take advantage of his residence in the United States for the purpose of conspiring for the overthrow of another government"? If so, it seems to me that is going pretty far.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment again be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The Secretary. In section 20, page 44, line 11, after the word "hereof," it is proposed to insert the following:

Any alien who shall take advantage of his residence in the United States to conspire with others for the violent overthrow of a foreign government recognized by the United States.

Mr. ROOT. I ask to have the letter which I send to the desk read to the Senate. It is a letter from the governor of Texas, which explains the reason for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter presented by the Senator from New

The Secretary read as follows:

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, Austin, Tex., April 12, 1912.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, Austin, Tex., April 12, 1912.

Hon. Eliiu Root, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Congressman Burleson, of Texas, has sent me a copy of your amendment to the bill amending the immigration laws of the United States providing for the deportation of revolutionists who take advantage of residence in the United States to conspire with others for the violent overthrow of a foreign Government.

I sincerely hope that you will press the adoption of your amendment, and that you will urge immediate action in the passage of the bill.

The recent assassination of Americans by order of Orozco fully justifies this country in running every Mexican revolutionary sympathizer out of the United States. Besides, your amendment will do more to promote peace in Mexico than anything else which has been undertaken. Americans have very large interests in that country, and their lives are in danger every day, and this fact has been a source of great anxiety to me, and I have employed my limited power in every way consistent to protect them, and also protect the lives and property of our own citizens along the Rio Grande. This work entails a great deal of responsibility and expense upon the State government, a burden and expense which other States do not have to bear, and I appeal to you to press your amendment and the bill to an early adoption and passage.

O. B. Colourt. Governer.

O. B. COLQUITT, Governor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the governor of Texas correctly quotes the amendment, it contains a very important adjective that I did not catch when the amendment was read. If the amendment be as he quotes it, against those who conspire for the "violent overthrow" of a Government recognized by the United States, I have no objection to it.

Mr. ROOT. That is the case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I did not so catch the reading of the amendment at first.

That is in the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I repeat, then, that I have no objection to Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will say that that amendment comes in in the clause which provides for deportation. Such persons are simply to be deported; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. Root].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I request the attention of the Senator from Massa-chusetts [Mr. Lodge] to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 7, page 14, line 14, it is proposed after the word "partnership," to strike out the word "or"; in line 15, to strike out the word "and" before the word "others," and insert the word "or" others," in line 15, to insert a comma. and insert the word "or"; and after the word

Mr. LODGE. I think that that is an improvement of the wording, and I am glad to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I now move the amendment which I offered this morning, in section 3, page 9, after the word at the end of line 18, to insert the words "if otherwise admissible."

Mr. LODGE. That, I think, also is desirable, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 3, page 9, at the end of line 18, after the word "labor," it is proposed to insert "if otherwise admissible," so as to read:

Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In section 3, page 5, line 3, after the word "had," I move to insert the word "one" instead of "two." The language of the bill is, amongst the enumeration of those who are not permitted to come to this country:

Persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously.

I do not see why more than one attack should be necessary to convince people of the fact that they might have another.

The PRESIDING OFFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The Secretary. In section 3, page 5, line 3, after the word "had," it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and to insert "one," so as to read:

Persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. In section 3, page 10, line 2, I move to strike out the word "either," before the word "before," and the words "or after" as they appear after the word "before."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The Secretary. In the committee amendments already agreed upon in section 3, page 10, line 2, before the word "before," it is proposed to strike out the word "either," and after the word "before" it is proposed to strike out the words "or after," so that if amended it will read:

Such application to be made before such importation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the committee made that change in order to remain that here. in order to remedy what has proved, in the rare cases in which it has happened, a great hardship, and to allow the matter to be determined either before or after the importation. I see no objection to the amendment, though I think the language ought to stand as it is.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana? Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. On what page is the amendment?
Mr. SHIVELY. The amendment is to strike out certain words in line 2 on page 10. The present law requires the application for authority to import skilled labor under certain stated conditions to be made before such labor is imported. The committee amendment, as reported on the bill, provides that such application may be made "either before or after" the importation takes place. This change I oppose. My amendment is to strike out the word "either" and also the words "or after." The committee amendment would allow the labor to be imported without authority first granted, and leave the fact of the right of importation to be tried afterwards. My amendment requires the right of importation to be tried and settled in advance.

Mr. LODGE. I misunderstood the Senator's amendment in the reading. He stated, I thought, that he was proposing to strike out the word "before," leaving the same trouble that strike out the word "before," leaving the same trouble that now exists; but I now understand he proposes to strike out the word "after," and leaves it "before such importation."

Mr. SHIVELY. So that the application must be made before the importation.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that change.

Mr. SHIVELY. And no application is anowable and Mr. LODGE. The hardship arises when a man has to be returned after he has arrived here.

Mr. STONE. How will the clause read if amended as proposed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary. If amended as proposed, the provision will read:

Such application to be made before such importation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Shively].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and on the amendment I ask for the year and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 2, page 2, line 20, before the word "dollars"—the head-tax proposition—it is proposed to strike out the word "four" and to insert the word "seven," so as to

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $7 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] he asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRISTOW. Where does the reading of it I could not tell. Where does the amendment come in? From

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment of Mr. Warson. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the amendment the Senator from West Virginia demands the yeas and nays. The year and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. CLAPP's name was called). The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment.

So Mr. Warson's amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill why in section 2 a change is proposed to be made in the existing law by inserting the words including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act"

Mr. LODGE. Because, Mr. President, to this bill there have been added some new clauses affecting immigrants who have come in as seamen and thus escaped the enforcement of the immigration law. It is becoming a very great abuse. Men who have been unable to be admitted under the regular examination would secure employment on a ship in some capacity, come to this country, leave the ship at the wharf, and avoid the examination entirely. It was to stop a large system of evasion of the immigration laws that made the change necessary, because heretofore alien seamen have not been included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment,

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there are two amendments pending of which I gave notice, and I wish now to call up the first one. In section 3, on page 8, line 9, after the word "descent"—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator wait until the committee amendments have been concurred in?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the committee amendments had all been agreed to long ago.

Mr. LODGE. They have been. I understand the Senator from Mississippi desires to offer an amendment before the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. After the word "descent," in section 3, on page 8, line 9, I move to insert the words-or persons of African descent, whether from Africa or the West Indies, except Porto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the other day when I offered that amendment I saw a smile upon the countenances of some Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and I suppose the thought which ran through their minds was, "There is another southerner who has found another 'nigger in the woodpile.'" as the phrase runs. Therefore, I want to explain the purpose of the amendment.

We now exclude Chinese as immigrants into this country; and we exclude them very wisely, because they are an unassimilable race, because they are a race with whom our own people will not intermarry. Now, Mr. President, the perfect democratic temple here or anywhere rests upon four pillarsliberty, fraternity, equality, and justice. You can never have genuine liberty in any community in the world without real equality, and you can never have real equality without potential brotherhood, potential fraternity, actual or potential blood relationship, and you can never have that where there are two in the same community that do not intermarry, one of which regards the other race, rightfully or wrongfully, as its inferior and will not mix blood legitimately and legally

It may be answered that a great many negroes are citizens of the United States-and they are-and a great many of them were born here and their fathers and grandfathers before them, and that this amendment might be considered a lick at them.

It is not; it is merely a blow at the further infiltration of the same sort of people in our body politic. The presence of those already here has been the cause of stupendous bloodshed and division and of benefit to nobody except themselves.

Very early in the history of this country the most prescient and the greatest man in its history, in my opinion, speaking from the standpoint of politics and of statesmanship, Mr. Jefferson, attempted to secure the emancipation and the deportation of this unfortunate race just as much sinned against as sinning. He failed, and the consequence has been that we have had in a part of our territory these two dissimilar and mutually alien races, mutually unassimilable, because one refuses legally to mix his blood with the other. Wherever you have that condition of things you have, necessarily, an unfortunate condition-a great evil-and there is no sense in running any risk of increasing it.

The last census reports show that the white birth rate of the South exceeds the birth rate of the colored people, and that independently of immigration-and, of course, what little immigration there is in the South is white—the white race there is increasing at a larger percentage than is the colored race. That census fact holds out a hope of a final solution of the problem by that very disparity multiplying itself from year to year to its final result.

There is but one danger. Men are greedy all over the world. Every race has its faults. The red American Indian is cruel; the African is lustful; the white man is greedy. He is the greedlest creature that God ever made; and when it comes to making money, he is going to make it to the detriment of his own civilization and the future of his own community. He has done it always in the past. Our ancestors did it when they introduced these people here—our slave-selling Yankee ancestry and our slave-buying southern ancestry. Mr. Jefferson, after he had tried to secure the emancipation and deportation of this race, and after his motion had been voted down by a l small vote, at that time in a slave-holding community, uttered these very memorable words in a letter to a friend: "They will not bear it now, but the time will come when they must bear it, for nothing is more certainly written in the book of fate than that these people must at some day be free, except this, that no two races physically and mentally so different can long exist equally free in the same country.'

Now, the danger from the white man's greed is this: Labor is growing scarcer every year in the sugar belt and in the cotton belt and in the rice belt in comparison with demand for an increase of the production of cotton, sugar, and rice. In my opinion, it will not be many years before sugar planters and cotton planters will be bringing over negroes from the West Indies and perhaps even from Africa, and I want to stop it before it starts. You may say it is a fancied danger, but I find that in 1902 there were 4,700 immigrants from the West Indies and in 1911 there were 13,403. It has grown threefold in that time, and I find that within the last five years—these figures are furnished me by the Department of Commerce and Labor-there has been a total immigration from the West Indies of 64,404.

Mr. President, I ask Senators to leave aside for a few minutes politics and the question of losing votes at elections, and think about the future. Wages in the cotton and sugar and rice States are higher than they are in the West Indian country, and are increasing. Since we have been hiring Jamaica negroes at the Isthmus in the construction of the Panama Canal they have begun to find now that they can better their condition industrially by coming into the United States, and they are beginning to come and will come more rapidly as day succeeds day.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. I should like to ask the Senator what effect the educational test, adopted in this bill, would have on immigration of that kind?

There would be great hope for a long time Mr. WILLIAMS. to come yet that the test would keep out a majority of them. That much is true. Now, then, one word more and I shall conclude.

Within certain broad racial lines human nature is the same. The white man's human nature is the same at the mouth of the Tiber, at the mouth of the Mississippi, at the mouth of the Hudson, and of the Thames. Chinese human nature is the same whether the Chinaman be in San Francisco or Hankow or Hongkong. The same is true of the negro-a negro is a negro in Africa, Jamaica, Cuba, or Mississippi. When men use the word "race" they frequently use it incorrectly. The French, the German, the Scandinavian, the English are not different races at all. They have different languages, but they are of the same Caucasian race; and as long as any people of the several nationalities or languages of that race come to our country they will be assimilated by actual or potential inter-Where there is legal mixture of blood any race marriage. question, in the course of time, will of course be dissipated.

There is not a white man from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the Great Lakes, who would want to see that sort of a thing in this country, as between white people and the No matter what his politics, no matter what his darkies. ideals, he wants to preserve the racial integrity and the purity of the Caucasian race; and if any did not, the opposite never would happen anyhow, because that part of the white race among whom the negroes are greatly congregated would never permit it.

It is dangerous for any country to admit a nonhomogeneous race—that is to say, I mean dangerous for any country whose Government rests upon free institutions. It is not dangerous for a despotism, because both races there have a common master.

One pillar of the temple of Democracy is justice. It is well that we excluded the Chinaman. That pillar would have tumbled, too. The white man would not have treated the Chinaman with impartial justice wherever there was a sufficient number of Chinamen to give the white man a real or fancied fear or menace of his domination, nor will he treat any other race precisely as he treats his own whenever that idea is in his head; and it makes no difference whether it is a real or fancied menace. In this clause of this bill and by existing law you exclude Chinese.

I want to follow it up by excluding Africans. If the Chinaman be our inferior-and I do not say that he is-then the negro is still more our inferior, because all the history of the world teaches that the Chinaman is his superior in accomplishment, in attainment, in culture, in civilization everywhere where the two races have been left to themselves to work out each its own upbuilding.

But if the cause of the exclusion of the Chinamen be not because of their inferiority-and that is the position I takebut merely because they are different morally, mentally, physically, and inherently different, and therefore, mutually unassimilable, then it applies equally to the Africans; and if you want to protect our racial integrity and at the same time protect the symmetry of the democratic temple without the destruction of any of its supporting pillars, then you will foresee and guard in advance against this possible danger, and to the extent that this amendment will help to prevent it you will help by passing the amendment.

I may add that the immigrant of African descent is a greater menace than the immigrant of Chinese descent, because under our laws the latter can not be naturalized. At worst, then, he can become only an inhabitant; the former can become both inhabitant and citizen.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi if his amendment does not propose to insert these words in the wrong place. It comes in the middle of the provision relating to Chinese persons, and I think it would be better to insert it, if it is agreed to, after the words "United States," in line 11. The Senator will observe that he breaks the sentence concerning Chinese.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is right. I ask that, instead of being inserted after the word "citizen," on line 9, it be inserted after the words "United States," on line 11, and that the semicolon follow it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and the word "or" is not necessary; simply say persons of African descent.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I hope this provision will not be inserted. Agreeing fully with many things the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has said, it seems to me that this is rather a theoretical than a practical provision now. We are not going to seriously affect the problem which has to be worked out with our nine to ten million blacks in this country by a provision relating to the coming in of men of negro blood, which in the last dozen years, I see by the statistics in this report, has only amounted to some 2,800 per year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from New York is mistaken.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. For the 10-year period the average is about

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was furnished this morning with the figures of the immigration from the West Indies alone, without counting any negroes who might possibly have come from elsewhere, and what has deceived the Senator from New York is that in the West Indies they do not count anyone a negro unless he be of pure negro blood. People of mixed races who are counted here as negroes are not there thus regarded. When they come in they may report themselves as white, because they have white blood in their veins; but these figures sent to me by the department this morning show that there has been during the period of five years-1907-1911-a total of 64,404, and nearly all of them were of mixed or Indian blood.

ROOT. It is of little consequence whether you take the one figure or the other. It is very negligible when you come to deal with the 9,000,000 colored people in this country. are not going to work out our problem by this small number coming or not coming in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they increase at the same rate at which they have increased-

Mr. ROOT. If it is found that they increase, we can deal

Mr. WILLIAMS. Three hundred per cent in nine years.

Mr. ROOT. But it is agreed that the literacy test, which we have now established, will tend to reduce this immigration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true.

Mr. ROOT, The same reason on which we exclude Mongolians does not operate with respect to the blacks. The Chinese minister once said to me: "You are excluding us for our virtues"; and I was compelled to admit that there was a good deal of truth in the observation.

We exclude them because when they come here they underbid the American workman. They can live on so much less than he can live on that they can drive the American workman out of the market wherever they come in in considerable numbers.

It is because of the special qualities that they possess, different from ours, but, as the Senator from Mississippi well says, not necessarily inferior to ours, that we exclude them. That does not apply to the blacks.

But it is not merely upon a balancing of these considerations that I urge that this amendment should not be adopted. that we would be entering upon a field of serious interference with a great array of our treaties with foreign countries. To exclude people whom we have agreed to admit; to exclude people who have a right to come in under our treaties with Brazil, with Haiti, with San Domingo, with Cuba, with England in regard to her West India Islands, with France in regard to hers, with the Netherlands in regard to hers, with all the countries on the mainland surrounding the Caribbean at one stroke and without consideration of the terms of those treaties or the effect upon our international relations of a provision put into this bill directly in violation of the provisions of the treaties, we would involve ourselves in a most serious situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the language of the law proposed in this bill, which is substantially the present law. It excludes Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. ROOT. From where does the Senator read?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Page 8, beginning with line 8. It excludes "Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, whether subjects of China or subjects or citizens of any other country foreign to the United States." So that if excluding persons of African descent would result in the abrogation of all these treaties as the Senator argues, the exclusion of persons of Chinese descent who are British subjects or French subjects or Dutch subjects would work precisely the same evil.

Mr. ROOT. It is true we have been in rather a delicate and difficult position in regard to our exclusion of the oriental subjects of a considerable number of foreign powers. Fortunately they have not seen fit to press the right under their treaties to have their oriental subjects admitted to the United States. But, if we now for the first time put in a provision of this kind regarding these countries which are in immediate proximity to us, we certainly can not expect any such immunity, and I apprehend that the consequences would be exceedingly serious. do not see how it could be avoided.

Mr. BACON and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I confess to my utter surprise at the position taken by the Senator from New York [Mr. Root]. The southern people have during all these years never failed to respond to the demand or the request of the people of our western coast that they should assist them in keeping out the Asiatics.

The Senator speaks about the problem we have to contend with and whether or not this will contribute to its solution. It is a monstrous evil, and every additional ounce of weight adds to the burden.

I confess I was in absolute ignorance of the important facts stated by the Senator from Mississippi as to the magnitude of this immigration from that source, and if you were to search the world over for a class who ought to be excluded from this country, that which in higher degree than any other should be rigidly excluded is this.

Mr. President, we have a fearful burden and a fearful prob-Why add to it? And the possibilities which the Senator from Mississippi has pointed out far exceed any small limita-

Mr. President, why should there be an exception made in this case, when for 30 years this country has never wavered and never hesitated, whenever the question has come up, to say that they would do all in their power to protect the people of the western coast from the threatened invasion of Asiatics? are in a position where, of course, we can not be relieved of the burden we have, but we do protest that that burden should not be added to.

Now, as shown by the Senator from Mississippi, the exclusion of people of the Asiatic races does not militate against any treaties we have with any other countries. It is not so regarded, because it is expressly said that whether they are sub-jects of Asiatic monarchies or of any others they are excluded if they are Asiatics and come within the class; and therefore there is no reason why under the same ruling there should be any assumption of any infraction of any treaty if we add this

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BACON. Certainly. Mr. ROOT. Does not the Senator from Georgia recognize the fact that a law prohibiting the entrance into this country of the entire population of a country with which we have a treaty providing for entrance and residence would break our friendly relations with that country?

Mr. BACON. What country does the Senator refer to?
Mr. ROOT. San Domingo, Haiti, three-fourths of the people of the great Empire of Brazil. Are you going to break off friendly relations with Brazil by prohibiting a majority of their people from entering the borders of the United States?

Mr. BACON. If they are colored people I would undoubtedly say yes. Have we hesitated to break off friendly relations, if need be, with Japan or China? They are as important to us as It is a question of whose ox is gored, and I repeat that I was utterly astonished when the Senator from New York got up and made opposition to this. I supposed, of course, he was going to get up for the purpose of giving his assent to it.

We have a tremendous problem, one the solution of which no man can foresee or predict or arrange for. We are struggling with it the best we can, and we ask simply that it not be added to. I am not afraid that Great Britain is going to make any trouble if we say that negroes from Jamaica shall not come to this country. If San Domingo or Haiti or Cuba chose to make the issue with us, what is the more important, that we should preserve our institutions or that we should run the risk of offending these people?

We do not invade their territory. We are simply protecting ourselves. If we can protect our country against the hordes of Asia and not only so, but against undesirable people from Europe, is it to be treated as a trivial matter when it has been pointed out by the Senator from Mississippi that sixty-odd thousand of these people have already come? Is it a trivial matter?

Mr. President, I ask Senators from the northern section upon what possible ground they can say that the demand of our brethren upon the Pacific coast shall be heeded and that they will turn a deaf ear to the appeal made through the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. President, I do not know how many millions of these people there are. We want immigration, but we want it of a different kind. The immigration that I prefer is the immigration of our own blood and people from the Northern States who come to the South-and great quantities have come and I hope a great many more of them will come, because they add to all that is best in the improvement and development of our country. But it is an impossibility, as pointed out by the Senator from Mississippi, that anyone of this race can come and add to the present population without its being an injury, and in the case of any prospect of a large number a most serious menace to us.

It has not been a matter of any importance to us to keep out the Asiatics; we have not been threatened with anything on account of the Asiatics; and yet the southern people have not hesitated for a moment, but have stood as a man for their exclusion, and I do not suppose that a single vote can be shown cast by a southern man opposing the legislation which has been asked to protect the States upon the Pacific coast. When this is asked by us, why should there be this differentiation?

We make some exceptions now in favor of this race. the only race that under our law can be naturalized other than a member of the Caucasian race. We do not permit a Mongolian or a Malay to be naturalized. As is suggested to me by the Senator from Mississippi, when the Negro comes here he is not limited as the Mongolian or the Malay is by the simple opportunity to come here. The Mongolian or the Malay when he comes here is denied the right of citizenship. This other man, when he comes here, is given the right of citizenship; and there are a good many other reasons which could be urged.

We are dealing with this problem in the most conservative manner. The people of that race are not oppressed. There are individual instances of wrong, just like there are individual instances of wrong everywhere, but the relation between them and the whites is a kindly relation. It is a relation in which the stronger protects the weaker. It is a relation so agreeable to them that it is only the exceptional man who can be induced to leave that section of the country to go elsewhere, and we propose to the best of our ability to work out the problem without injustice to anybody. But, in God's name, do not add to it; if sixty-odd thousand of these people have come here within this short time-a fact, I repeat, of which I was ignorant-I am impressed with the importance of the adoption of the amendment, and I appeal to Senators, when we have stood by them in the past, as we have done in all these years without exception, in trying to protect them against the invasions of Asiatics, not now to deny us what we ask for the protection of ourselves.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia ield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BACON. I do. Mr. STONE. The sixty thousand who have come from San Domingo, Haiti, Cuba, and so forth, came within what range of time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Five years.

Mr. STONE. Five years? Where did they settle when they came—in the South or in the North?

On the Florida Keys and the Gulf of Mr. WILLIAMS. Mexico. Some of them-quite a percentage of them-went to New York City. I do not know precisely how that happened. Mr. STONE. Is the greater number in the North or in the South?

Mr. BACON. Most of them are in the South, and there is where the menace is, I repeat I was really surprised and disappointed that there should be opposition to this reasonable request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it was not my purpose when I rose to obtain the floor, before the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] spoke, to occupy the time of the Senate upon this subject except for a few moments.

I wish most earnestly to express my approval of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], and I wish to earnestly request the Senators on the other side not to resist it. The Senator from Georgia has made our appeal to the Senators upon the Pacific coast. It does seem to me it is one that they can not fail to heed.

I have had some observation of the elements sought to be reached by this amendment. They are not desirable. Who wishes them here? I desire to say to the Senators on the other side that our black people, our negroes, in the Southern States very much object to them. If the wishes of our negro population in the South were to be considered it would be found that they are almost a unit against the immigration of the West Indian negroes. As a rule they do not work pleasantly together.

I had occasion to observe it in quite an extensive amount of work done at Key West, in which I had an interest, a few years We were almost unable to keep our Georgia negroes that we took down there and induce them to work with the West Indian negroes. They do not harmonize. They do not fraternize with the negro population of America, who vastly prefer that we should exclude these foreign negroes.

I am sure that the white laboring men do not want them brought here to be put in competition with them in large enterprises. We do not believe that there is any desire by any American citizens to have them. We are sure that it is to the interest of our section not in any sense to increase the negro We are seeking to handle the problem. I want to population. say to Senators on the other side that the larger the proportion of whites in any one of our counties and the smaller the proportion of the blacks the more the blacks prosper, the better their condition. Instead of increasing the blacks proportionately to the whites, as they decrease the black man fares better and improves more rapidly. It is to the interest of our colored race here in the United States not to increase it at all from the outside; and that is certainly to the interest of the white

I want to assure you that from my personal contact with our negroes in the South and their aversion to these foreign negroes you will not be pleasing them by opening the door. I join with the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Georgia in appealing to you to allow this amendment to pass.

Mr. STONE. Can the Senator from Georgia tell me whether these 60,000 West Indian negroes come here temporarily to engage in some particular work or whether they come here to remain as citizens and become a part of our population? Do they bring their families?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; those whom I have seen and those with whom I have come in contact in my observation of certain enterprises in which I was interested in southern Florida, in southern Alabama, and in southern Georgia have largely come alone. They are men who come to engage in work connected with larger enterprises-construction work, sawmill work, or something of that character-and they really interfere with the work done by our local laborers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr.

WILLIAMS]

Mr. TILLMAN. On that question let us have the year and

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].
Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nixon] voted? The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a general pair with that Senator. I do not know how he would vote on this question, so I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I announce the transfer of my general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] as on previous votes, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I previously announced that I was paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Davis]. I am authorized by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] to transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa

MINS to transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon], and I do so, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Smith]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] is unavoidably absent from the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THORNTON].

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative).
Owing to some information that I have as to how the absent Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton] would vote on this question, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. FOSTER. If the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr.

THORNTON | were here, he would vote "vea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I misunderstood it, then. If that is the case, I will vote. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton], and as he would vote "yea," I shall vote. I vote "ven.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. In section 2, page 2, line 20, before the word "dollars," strike out "four" and insert "five," so as to read: That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, on page 8, line 20, the significance of the word "capitalists." It seems to me that is a pretty general word

Mr. LODGE. That is the word used in the present law Mr. CHILTON. I move to strike out the word "capitalists." Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to striking it out. I do not think it adds anything to the enumeration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. In line 20, page 8, strike out the word " capitalists."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to call the attention Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to can the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to one word, on page 4, line 2, at the beginning of the line. Would it not add to the efficacy of the bill to change the word "may" to "shall"?

Mr. LODGE. "May require the deposit of such tax."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes. Would it not strengthen it somewhat to use the word "shall" in place of "may"?

Mr. LODGE. He may require it "only upon proof." It would weaken it; it would not strengthen it. It now reads that he "may require it only upon proof." and then it would read he "may require it only upon proof," and then it would read that he "shall require it only upon proof." It would weaken the clause and not strengthen it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina.

It was called to my attention by an organization who asked me to call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will read the clause he will see that it would weaken it and not strengthen it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to renew the amendment I offered to come in after the words "United States," in line 11 on page 8. After the semicolon following the words "United States," I move to insert:

Persons of African descent, whether from Africa or the West Indies, except Porto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Scretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 8, line 11, after the words "United States" and the semicolon, insert the words:

Persons of African descent, whether from Africa or the West Indies, except Porto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division-ayes 22, noes 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement.

I was out of the hall when the vote was taken on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams]. If I had been present, I would have voted "yea" on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendments be proposed, the question is, Shall the bill be ordered engrossed for a third reading and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a word. I shall not ask for the yeas and nays, but I wish to say, as far as I am con-cerned, that if a yea-and-nay vote shall be ordered I shall vote against the bill in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was unable to hear the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I think the reporter hears what I am saying, and it is not important that the Chair should hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Well, the Chair would like to hear if the Senator is going to submit a motion.

Mr. STONE. I am addressing the Senate and not the Chair.

And the reporter will get what I say.

However, for the benefit of the Chair, if it is at all important to him, I was saying that I will not ask for a yea-and-nay vote, but if one should be ordered I will vote "nay" on the passage of this bill.

I am in favor of practically all the provisions of the bill, except the one against which I opposed myself this afternoon. An amendment was offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons], providing that immigrants shall be able to read and write 25 words of the Constitution of the United States. I think that was substantially it. Why pick out 25 words of the Constitution of the United States and ask an immigrant to read it in any language? What does it mean? Is there anything to it? You had better have him read that verse from Mrs. Hemans's poems:

The boy stood on the burning de Whence all but him had fled; The flame that lit the battle's wr Shone round him o'er the dead.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that if the immigrant did repeat that he would repeat something which, while it has become hackneyed, is one of the finest things in the English language.

Mr. STONE. It is one of the finest things in the English language, and how much better it would be for him to repeat it than something like this:

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of 25 years and been 7 years a citizen of the United States.

That is about 25 words of the Constitution. Here is another

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

That, also, is about 25 words of the Constitution. Mr. President, I do not see anything to it, with all due respect. I am going to vote against this bill because, in my poor judgment, in this provision which prescribes an educational test it is too near akin to the old intolerant propaganda of the Know-Nothings and the A. P. A.'s. I am against it, and shall not vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

LOSS OF THE STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HABANA, April 19, 1912.

To the SENATE, Washington:

The Senate of the Republic of Cuba in session held yesterday resolved unanimously to express its condolence through the Senate to the people of the United States of America for the loss of life in the terrible disaster of the steamship Titanic.

Dr. Antonio Gonzalo Perez,

President of the Senate.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, proved August 5, 1909, generally known as the metal schedule. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 25 minutes m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 20, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 19, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 500.

Resolved, That as a tribute of respect to the memories of those who lost their lives in the terrible disaster to the steamship Titanic the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words. I am in favor of the adoption of this resolution as a fitting expression of our sorrow for the dead whose lives went out in the terrible catastrophe of the Titanic—one of the greatest marine tragedies in all history. All the world mourns. At this time I want to say that I think we can do more for humanity, more for the to say that I think we can do hore for humanity, more for the living, if we take warning from this frightful calamity and ere long pass my bill, or a bill similar to the one that I have introduced, to make it impossible hereafter for any ship to leave our ports unless she is fully equipped with every life-saving device and life-saving apparatus known to modern skill and science.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to object to the motion to adjourn, for the reason that, I think, by unanimous consent we could to-day take up measures which would prevent such catastrophes in the future.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I make the mint of the country of th

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a motion to adjourn is not debatable and is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, April 20, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

John T. Brickwood v. United States (S. Doc. No. 598).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 5333) to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 16306) to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented resolutions adopted by the Ogden Good Roads Association, of Utah, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the building of good roads throughout the country, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.
Mr. SUTHERLAND.

I send to the desk a letter which I ask may be read and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

There being no objection, the letter was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

BIRMINGHAM DIVISION, No. 186, ORDER RAILWAY CONDUCTORS, Birmingham, Ala., April 17, 1912.

Hon. Geoege Sutherland, Senator from Utah, Washington, D. C.

Hon. George Sutherland.

Senator from Utah, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senators: Having kept in close touch with the proceeding of your committee on employers' liability and workmen's compensation act since its inception, I feel that I owe you this acknowledgment, to wit: That, in my opinion, you have been fair in your efforts to solve one of the problems of the ages; and that while I do not subscribe to the maximum payment of the higher salaried employee (believing that it should be greater and the period longer for payment), yet I think your bill is a step in the right direction and we can hope to have an improvement after it has been tried out.

I have noticed the arguments that have been made for and against the bill, and also the speeches that were made before the bill was written, and in some instances it is to laugh. Being, as I am, one of the rank and file (being a freight conductor on an ore and coal run, and, by the way, this is among the hardest work on a railroad), I am amused that some men make the argument that we of the lower five are not conversant with the legislation affecting our own interests, while some outsider sees all evils in the bill and runs to save us from what would destroy us. This is a new kind of philanthropy, and it is too bad that we are so dense that we can not appreciate it.

In reference to a statement of one of the gentlemen who addressed your body, in which the insinuation was made that we were afraid that if we opposed the bill we would jeopardize our insurance in the order, I simply want to say that that gentleman knows not of what he is saying, for the members of our organization are absolutely free to express themselves as they see fit; and I want to say that I am writing this letter on my own initiative and without the knowledge of the president of our order, a man who is loved by all of the rank and file.

With best wishes for the success of your committee, I am, sir, file.

With best wishes for the success of your committee, I am, sir,
Yours, very truly,
John R. T. Rr

JOHN R. T. RIVES. P. S.—I am inclosing copy of resolution to the Members of Congress from Alabama.

Mr. WETMORE. I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January session, A. D. 1912.

Resolution recommending to Congress the passage of House resolution No. 17731, providing for the Federal inspection of seagoing barges. No. 17731, providing for the Federal inspection of seagoing barges. Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States House bill No. 17731, providing for the Federal inspection of all seagoing barges of 100 gross tous or over, and providing for the issuance of a certificate of inspection wherever such barges are found to be suitably equipped and in proper seaworthy condition; and

Whereas the loss of life along the shores of the State of Rhode Island is much increased by the operation of unseaworthy barges, which are in many cases without lifeboats, anchors, cables, or life preservers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island heartily approves of the provisions of said bill and respectfully requests our Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the passage of said bill, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, April 13, 1912.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 10th day of April, A. D. 1912.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date first above written.

[SEAL.]

J. FRED PARKER.

SAFETY OF VESSELS AT SEA.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back with amendments Senate resolution 284, relating to treaties with foreign nations with a view to regulating matters pertaining to vessels carrying passengers at sea. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the

The amendments were, in line 3, after the word "Governments," to strike out "with a view"; in the same line, after the word "to," to strike out "directing" and insert "regulate"; in the same line, after the word "course," to insert "and speed"; in line 5, after the words "at sea," to strike out "and, further, to confer as to all matters appertaining to the safety of such craft and passengers" and insert "to determine the number of lifeboats rafts searchlights and wireless and the number of lifeboats, rafts, searchlights, and wireless apparatus to be carried by such vessels, and to assure the use of such other equipment as shall be adequate to secure the safety of such vessels, passengers, and crew," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, advised that the Senate would favor treaties with England, France, Germany, and other maritime Governments to regulate the course and speed of all vessels engaged in the carrying of passengers at sen, to determine the number of lifeboats, rafts, searchlights, and wireless apparatus to be carried by such vessels, and to assure the use of such other equipment as shall be adequate to secure the safety of such vessels, passengers, and crews.

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this resolution is the proper, orderly, and just method of approaching the great subject that is near the heart and conscience of every American citizen and of every person in the world who knows of this catastrophe, the sinking of the ship Titanic and the loss of over 1,500 lives. I wish that the American people as a whole and this Senate could be as deliberate in its judgment as has been the Committee on Foreign Relations in reporting a resolution Yesterday, Mr. President, one of the survivors of that terrible calamity, upon a rather flimsy and uncertain report, in my opinion, was tried, convicted, sentenced, and executed in the Senate of the United States. I, as a Senator of the United States and as an American citizen, desire to register my protest against the trial of anyone connected with the operation of that ship, from the highest officer of the company to the seaman who sailed thereon, without fair, honest, and full hearing.

The Lord knows, Mr. President, that the habit of accusing and trying and condemning public men without a hearing and without a trial is bad enough, but when the feeling of the entire civilized world is wrought up to such an extent that it is eager for a victim upon whom it may expend its wrath, I say that then above all times we should hold in abeyance our judgment until we ascertain whether or not there has been any guilt established in connection with the operation of this vessel.

Mr. President, my own view is that the American people are as much to blame for this catastrophe as anyone. We of late years as a people are moved and controlled in all matters of transportation rather by the impulse and spirit of the sportsman than by the calm and sober judgment of the man of business.

We seek always to build greater vessels than some one else has constructed; we seek and encourage people to push those ressels to the very last test of endurance and speed. When the Lusitania was launched and made her record trip the whole country was filled with laudations and praise. We clapped our hands and cheered her achievement. There is no evidence that her equipment was any greater or any better than was that of the Titanic. There is no evidence that she did not take practically the same route that was taken by the Titanic, and if the Titanic had been successful for weeks we would have heard of nothing, Mr. President, but the wonderful achievement and the record that she had made.

This desire to exceed all past records, to excel everything else in speed and in size has so swerved our judgment from the ordinary in life to the one idea of excelling in everything that we forget ourselves. In the matter of aviation, while we all know that all the feats that are performed could be done from 100 to 200 feet above the surface of the earth, yet as a people we seem to demand the spectacular; that the performer shall demonstrate his ability to pass the clouds; that he shall ascend thousands of feet; and when he comes down we decorate him, and the papers are filled with laudations of the wonderful feat. Spurred on by these public testimonials, he attempts the next day to go higher, and the following day we bury a mass of flesh and we call for another victim to satiate our thirst for the spectacular. We demand the highest limit of speed and are always ready to take the chance.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that it is most unjust to condemn appears connected with this afficients.

condemn anyone connected with this affair until at least there has been a hearing. I am certain—and I think every Senator will agree with me—that nearly every vessel that plies along our shores from one section of the country to the other has not sufficient lifeboats to take care of one-tenth of the people who are loaded upon those vessels, and yet there has been no condemnation whatever of those officials for their dereliction in that direction or of the laxity of our laws.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho? Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator says the people generally are to blame for those things, I do not see precisely how he connects the people with the soaring in the air or with the fact that there were not sufficient lifeboats upon this steamer. I apprehend there was no one responsible for that in the world except the company which constructed the ship and failed to put upon her those things which scamen know were necessary for the safety of the ship.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know who is to blame. I simply will not convict without a hearing. If we create a demand that the great ships shall make the distance between Liverpool and New York in a given length of time, we who demand the ticket for that particular boat because of its size and speed, we who wish to make the trip across the ocean in the shortest time are somewhat to blame.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I think there is great room for blame, but there is this to be said: The blame rests on the British law very largely, as it does on our own law, for not requiring a sufficient number of lifeboats to be carried. The Titanic carried all the lifeboats that the British law required; she had the board of trade's certificate of inspection; and had everything that the British law required. It may be said that she ought to have carried more than the law required, but it must be remembered that the first trouble in these things is lack of proper legislation, and the purpose of this resolution is to try by treaty to cure all these evils by international agreement.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, may I be permitted to interrupt the Senator from North Dakota?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I feel, Mr. President, that the passage of this resolution will tend to accomplish the result which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] desires. I feel that it is sheer barbarism for us in this enlightened age to tolerate the loading of passengers on a vessel to the number of two or three thousand with only lifeboats sufficient to take care of one-fourth of them. I feel that this will be a step in the direction of humanity, and that we can well afford to press the resolution at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in the RECORD of yesterday we find these words, to which I object at the present stage of the investigation:

Mr. Ismay, the managing director of the White Star Line, who, in my judgment, acted in a most cowardly manner in this disaster, and to whom I think it is largely attributable.

And again:

Mr. Ismay claims, according to reports, that he took to the last lifeboat. I do not helieve it, and if he did, it was cowardly for him to take to any lifeboat.

Mr. President, the most that that statement can possibly be based upon is some newspaper report; no one can vouch for the accuracy, and under the present state of excitement the probabilities are against its accuracy. In the same paper that published this statement, I find a statement from another person, a survivor, namely, Mr. Johnson, in which he says:

When J. Bruce Ismay, president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., stepped into the lifeboat, Johnson said, there were no women left on the deck.

He was forced into the boat by officers of the ship, and this was done, Johnson said, just as the boat was being lowered.

I simply place those two side by side so that no injustice may be done any person until there has been an opportunity for a fair hearing and just consideration.

Mr. President, I would sooner use my time in expressing my admiration for the courage and the bravery of the captain and of the crew and of every man who was on board that ship at that time, than to use it in condemning anyone without more substantial evidence against him. I can not help here putting into the Record the statement of Mr. Johnson when he says:

When the first signal was given to lower the boats some of the crew pressed forward. It was then that the rallying cry came through the megaphone from the bridge, "Be British, my men!" It was Capt. Smith's voice. Every man obeyed the command and faced death calmly. They knew there was no hope, and as the big, strong English seamen assisted the women and children into the boats they gave no sign that they realized that Capt. Smith's words, "Be British!" had sealed their fate. They remained at their posts and died like men.

I had rather a thousand times, Mr. President, spend a few moments here in expressing my admiration for that captain and crew, who in the face of a horrible death maintained the honor of true manhood. Surrendered their own lives for others. I would rather spend it in paying tribute to them than to be hurrying to a judgment that is as liable to be erroneous as to be true, and then wait calmly and patiently until we have some evidence before us or before a competent tribunal before the Senate of the United States should pass judgment of conviction against anyone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution as amended is agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Wyoming:

A bill (S. 6441) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6442) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 6443) granting an increase of pension to Charles Crismon (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 6444) granting a pension to Edward D. Hamrick; and

A bill (S. 6445) granting a pension to Homer McC. Summerville (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 6446) granting an increase of pension to Emma Sherwood (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 6147) granting a pension to Conrad Hockenberger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 6448) granting an increase of pension to Palmer Atkinson; to the Committee on Pensions. By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 6449) granting a pension to Joanna L. Dixon; A bill (S. 6450) granting an increase of pension to Albert Sunderland (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 6451) granting an increase of pension to Robert Wood (with accompanying paper); and A bill (S. 6452) granting a pension to Thomas M. Dixon (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to give notice that on Wednesday next, April 24, following the routine morning business, I shall desire to address the Senate upon the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

SPRING ROAD NW., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 5333) to authorize the widening and extension of Spring Road NW., and for other purposes, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. In accordance with the notice I gave I now move a reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

CENTRAL DISPENSARY AND EMERGENCY HOSPITAL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a letter from the committee on legislation of the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, which deals with the questions that will be before the committee of conference in the near future. I depart from my usual custom in asking that the letter may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CENTRAL DISPENSARY AND EMERGENCY HOSPITAL, Washington, D. C., April 12, 1912.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, United States Senate.

Hon. Jacob H. Gallinger, United States Senate.

Dear Str. As the matter of hospital appropriation will probably come up for consideration at an early date, we beg to call attention again to the following facts:

The claim has been made that the Emergency Hospital is supported largely by the Government, and should therefore be under governmental control. This claim is without foundation.

The Emergency Hospital has been given no money by the Government for five years—not one cent.

During this time it has been paid for work done under contract for the Government $65,000, and received from other sources $84,000. This contract is made by the Board of Charities at their own figure, and they select the cases for which they pay.

The hospital received under this contract $1.20 per day for patients treated. The actual cost of treating these patients was $1.80 per day on each patient so treated, and this amounts to about $20,000 for the five years.

The hospital, therefore, donated to the Government 60 cents a day on each patient so treated, and this amounts to about $20,000 for the five years.

We may say, then, in all fairness, that the Government during the past five years has given the Emergency Hospital absolutely nothing, but has been given by the hospital $20,000.

The need for a larger and better Emergency Hospital is urgent and immediate. It is now inadequate, and the combined accommodation of all the hospitals in the city is inadequate. There are not now enough rooms and beds to meet the demand which is rapidly increasing with the growth of the city.

Such a hospital is needed not alone for the indigent, but for all classes, and not alone for citizens of Washingtos, but of all the United States and many foreign countries.

Nearly every prosperous citizen of the United States at some time visits the Capital of the Nation—and many distinguished foreigners. These visitors come singly and in large gatherings—national and International. They come to presidential inaugurations, congresses, political and civil gatherings and functions, in thousands and tens of thousands, and should have the protection of an emergency hospital second to none in the world. In such times of congestion many accidents occur to persons of every class.

The combined capacity of all our hospitals is often overtaxed, even under normal conditions.

The temergency Hospital takes care of more accident cases than any other five of our institutions. Should it be abandoned, there will be an immediate overcrowding of other hospitals—disgraceful in any city, and especially so in the National Capital.

During the past winter many well-to-do patients have been treated in open wards in various hospitals, because the private rooms were all filled, and many poorer cases sent to the Washington Asylum Hospital, because the open wards were full. This accounts in part, at least, for the overcrowded condition of the Washington Asylum Hospital, and the part of the control of the city a suitable ho ground, will cost not less than $250,000. It is a liberal proposition on the part of the directors.

It will result in an immediate saving to the Government of $5,000 or $6,000 a year, and a much greater saving later. The time is rapidly coming when well-endowed voluntary hospitals all over the country will care for the indigent sick without cost to the taxpayers, except for a small class that can not be suitably treated in such hospitals.

The only hope of getting an endowed emergency hospital in this city seems to depend upon this requested appropriation. Many donations have been offered, but only on this condition.

The appropriation asked is really a loan, amply protected by existing laws, which will pay to the Government a very large and annually increasing interest.

It will surely result in increased revenue to the hospital from private rooms, donations, and legacies, all of which have been used in the past, and will be used in the future to lighten the burden of the Government in caring for indigent sick.

Very truly, yours,

WOODBURY BLAIR, ZAIDEN ELLIS GAFF, W. P. CARR, Committee on Legislation.

THE UNITED STATES V. THE AMERICAN TORACCO CO.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask of the Senate unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent order by which the bill (S. 3607) to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to certain organizations or persons in the suit of the United States against the American Tobacco Co. and others was made the special order for Monday next be postponed and that the bill be taken up on Saturday next under the unanimous-consent order as it appears on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hesitates to put that request, because since the present occupant has occupied the chair the Senate has never varied a unanimous-consent agreement. It is a matter for the Senate, of course, but the Chair desires to call that fact to the attention of the Senate before putting the request.

Mr. LODGE. What is the proposition?
The VICE PRESIDENT. To modify the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into regarding Senate bill 3607.

Mr. LODGE. That certainly can not be done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought anything could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. It can not be done by unanimous consent. The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been the practice of the Senate since the present occupant of the chair has been here not to permit a modification of a unanimous-consent order.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is no modification of the order; it is only a continuance of the order until a day certain. It does not propose

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would it make any difference when the Senator who asked for the unanimous-consent agree-ment makes the second request? I understand the Senator from North Carolina made this request, and he is now asking that the request be modified, and he is asking unanimous consent that it be done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the distinction between what I ask to have done and a modification of a unanimous-consent agreement was made under a former ruling. It is not a modification of the unanimous-consent order, except in so far as it is a continuation of the unanimous-consent order until a day certain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, of course, will put the request.

Mr. LODGE. What is the precise request? Mr. OVERMAN. That the unanimous-consent order for the consideration of Senate bill 3607 shall be continued from Monday next until Saturday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to so modify the unanimous-consent order heretofore entered in reference to Senate bill 3607 as to read on Saturday, April 27, instead of Monday, April 22.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have never known the slightest modification of a unanimous-consent agreement. The reason is obvious. Senators who gave their consent to the unanimous-consent agreement when originally made may not be here and consent agreement when originally made may not be here, and if we begin to modify unanimous-consent agreements it is utterly impossible that one should ever be regarded as final and binding.

Mr. CULLOM. It would be an absolute change. Mr. LODGE. I must object. The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, to accommodate a Senator who is greatly interested in the order of business set for Monday next and who must necessarily leave the city on that day, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC UTILITIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commission the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commission the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commission that the Columbia and the Col sioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public-utilities commission.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate some time ago it was practically read through, but a controversy arose as to certain sections of the bill. On my motion the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia. All parties in interest have been consulted and have agreed upon certain amendments; and, while I will not insist upon it, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration the amendments now recommended without reading the bill through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I understand the request is to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has been practically read once. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the request to be to dispense with the reading for amendment and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of such amendments as are presented, those recommended by the committee to be first considered. Is there objection? Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The formal reading of the bill, as the Chair recalls, was concluded on a previous occasion.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The formal reading was dispensed with. The Secretary will now read the bill for the presentation of amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, on page 5, line 5, after the word "railroads," to strike out "and"; and in the same line, after the word "Company," to insert "and the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co., and all companies engaged in interstate traffic upon the Poto-and all companies engaged in interstate traffic upon the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay," so as to read:

The term "common carrier" when used in this act includes express companies and every corporation, street railroad corporation, company, association, joint-stock company or association, partnership, and person, their lessees, trustees, or receivers, appointed by any court whatsoever, owning, operating, controlling, or managing any agency or agencies for public use for the conveyance of persons or property within the District of Columbia for hire. Steam railroads, the Washington Terminal Co., and the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co., and all companies engaged in interstate traffic upon the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay are excluded from the operation of this act, and are not included in the term "common carrier."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, to strike out section 3, result in irreparable injury to the owners or other users of such equipment, nor in any substantial detriment to the service to be rendered by such owners or other users. In case of failure to agree upon such use, or the conditions or compensation for such use, any public utility or any person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation interested may apply to the commission, and if after investigating the commission shall ascertain that public convenience and necessity require such use and that it would not result in irreparable injury to the owners or other users of such equipment nor in any substantial detriment to the service to be rendered by such owners or other users of such equipment, it shall by order direct that such use be permitted and prescribe conditions and compensation for such joint use. Such use so ordered shall be the lawful conditions and compensation so prescribed shall be the lawful conditions and compensation to be observed, followed, and paid, subject to recourse to the courts upon the complaint of any interested party, as hereinafter provided, which provisions, so far as applicable, shall apply to any action arising on such complaint so made. Any such order of the commission may be from time to time revised by the commission upon application of any interested party or upon its own motion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 12, section 4, line 11, after the word "act," to insert "and with all other laws of the United States applicable," so as to read:

Sec. 4. That the commission shall have power, after hearing and notice by order in writing, to require and compel every public utility to comply with the provisions of this act, and with all other laws of the United States applicable, and any municipal ordinance or regulation relating to said public utility, and to conform to the duties upon it thereby imposed or by the provisions of its own charter, if any charter has or shall be granted it.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 8, to strike out section 6 in the following words:

Sec. 6. That the commission shall, whenever it may deem it desirable to do so, investigate and ascertain the fair value of the property of any public utility subject to the provisions of this act and used by it for the convenience of the public. For the purpose of such investigation the commission is authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary. Such investigations shall be prosecuted with care and thoroughness, and the results thereof reported to the District Committees in Congress.

Every such public utility shall furnish to the commission from time to time, and as the commission may require, maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers and other documents, records, and papers, or copies of any and all of the same in aid of such investigation, and to determine the value of the property of such public utility used for the public service; and every such public utility is required to cooperate with the commission in the work of the valuation of its property in such further particulars and to such extent as the commission may reasonably direct. The commission shall thereafter, in like manner, keep itself informed of all extensions and improvements or other changes in the condition of the property of the said public utilities and ascertain the fair value thereof, and from time to time, as may be required for the regulation of public utilities under the provisions of this act is valuation, every public utility subject to the provisions of this act is peroperty, and to file with the commission copies of all contracts for changes and improvements at the time same are executed.

Whenever the commission shall have completed the valuation shall become final, the commission shall have completed the valuation of property of any such public utility and before such valuation shall become final, if no protest is filed within such time, such valuation shall become final. If no protest

And insert:

Sec. 6. That the commission shall ascertain, as soon and as nearly as practicable, the amount of money expended in the construction and equipment of every public utility, including the amount of money expended to procure any right of way; also the amount of money expended to procure any right of way; also the amount of money it would require to secure the right of way, reconstruct any roadbed, track, depots, cars, conduits, subways, poles, wires, switchboards, exchanges, offices, works, storage plants, power plants, machinery, and any other property or instrument not included in the foregoing enumeration used in or useful to the business of such public utility. It shall ascertain the outstanding stock, bonds, debentures, and indebtedness, and the amount, respectively, thereof, the date when issued, to whom issued, to whom sold, the price paid in cash, property, or labor therefor, what disposition was made of the proceeds, by whom the indebtedness is held, so far as ascertainable, the amount purporting to be due thereon, the floating indebtedness of the public utility, the credits due the public utility, other property on hand belonging to it, the judicial or other sales of said public utility, its property or franchises, and the amounts purporting to have been paid, and in what manner paid therefor, and the taxes paid thereon. The commission shall also ascertain the gross and net income of the public utility from all sources in detail, the nmounts paid for salaries to officers and the wages paid to its employees, and the maximum hours of continuous service required of each class. Whenever the information required by this section is obtained it shall be printed in the annual report of the commission. In making such investigation the commission may avail itself of any information in possession of any department of the Government of the United States or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 2, to strike out section 7 in the following words:

SEC. 7. That in making any investigation under this act the commission may avail itself of any information in possession of any department of the Government of the United States or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

And insert:

Sec. 7. That the commission shall value the property of every public utility within the District of Columbia actually used and useful for the convenience of the public at the fair value thereof at the time of said valuation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 11, to strike out section 8, in the following words:

Sec. 8. That the commission may at any time, on its own initiative, make a revaluation of the property of any public utility.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to state that the section was by mistake recommended to be stricken out, and I desire to have the amendment not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCumber in the chair).

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 10, after the word "records," to strike out "in" and insert "In"; and in line 11, after the word "Act," to strike out "The" and insert "the," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 10. That the commission shall prescribe the forms of all books, accounts, papers, and records required to be kept, and every public utility is required to keep and render its books, accounts, papers, and records accurately and faithfully in the manner and form prescribed by the commission and to comply with all directions of the commission relating to such books, accounts, papers, and records. In so far as practicable for the purposes of this act, the form prescribed shall be the form accepted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 23, to strike out section 15, in the following words:

out section 15, in the following words:

Sec. 15. That every public utility shall carry a proper and adequate depreciation account whenever the commission, after investigation, shall determine that such depreciation account can be reasonably required. The commission shall ascertain and determine what are the proper and adequate rates of depreciation of the several classes of property of each public utility. These rates shall be such as will provide the amounts required over and above the expense of maintenance to keep such property in a state of efficiency corresponding to the progress of the industry. Each public utility shall conform its depreciation accounts to such rates so ascertained and determined by the commission. The commission may make changes in such rates of depreciation from time to time as it may find to be necessary. The commission shall also prescribe rules, regulations, and forms of accounts regarding such depreciation which the public utility is required to carry into effect. The commission shall provide for such depreciation in fixing the rates, tolls, and charges to be paid by the public. All moneys in this fund may be expended in new constructions, extensions, or additions to the property of such public utility, or invested, and, if invested, the income from the investments shall also be carried in the depreciation fund. This fund and the proceeds thereof shall be used for no other purpose than as provided in this section and for depreciation unless with the consent and by order of the commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 2 on page 23.

Mr. GRONNA: I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question for information. As I understand, section 6 and section 7 provide for the physical valuation of the property, and the provisions in the new section on page 21 give the commission power to limit the rates; that is, they will be based upon the valuation fixed by the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is right. There are other sections in the bill relating to the matter of rates, but that is substantially correct.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 18, page 23, line 4, after the word "commission," to strike out "whenever required in connection with any investigation by the commission," make the section read:

make the section read:

Sec. 18. That each public utility shall furnish to the commission in such form and at such times as the commission shall require such accounts, reports, and information as shall show in itemized detail: Depreciation; salaries and wages; legal expenses; taxes and rentals; quantity and value of material used; receipts from residuals, by-products, services, or other sales; total and net costs; net and gross profits; dividends and interest; surplus or reserve; prices paid by consumers; and in addition such other items, whether of a nature similar to those bereinhefore enumerated or otherwise, as the commission may prescribe, in order to show completely and in detail the entire operation of the public utility in furnishing its product or service to the public.

the section read:

SEC, 52. That no franchise nor any right to or under any franchise to own or operate any public utility as defined in this act or to use the tracks of any street railroad shall be assigned, transferred, or leased, nor shall any contract or agreement with reference to or affecting any such franchise or right be valid or of any force or effect whatsoever unless the assignment, transfer, lease, contract, or agreement shall have been approved by the commission in writing. The permission and approval of the commission to the assignment, transfer, or lease of a franchise under this section shall not be construed to revive or validate any lapsed or invalid franchise or to enlarge or add to the powers and privileges contained in the grant of any franchise or to waive any forfeiture. It shall be unlawful for any street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electric corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, or other public utility corporation, directly or indirectly, to acquire the stock or bonds of any other corporation incorporated for or engaged in the same or similar business as it is, unless authorized in writing to do so by the commission, and every contract, transfer, agreement for transfer, or assignment of any such stock or bonds without such written authority shall be void and of no effect.

The next amendment was, in section 61, on page 45, line 18, after the word "charges," to insert "time and condition of payment thereof," so as to make the section read:

"one hundred and twenty"; and after the word "such," at the end of line 9, to strike out "ninety" and insert "one hundred and twenty"; and in line 10, after the word "days," to strike out "unless the time for appeal has been enlarged by order of the commission," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 63. That every proceeding, action, or suit to set aside, vacate, or amend any determination or order of the commission, or to enjoin the enforcement thereof, or to prevent in any way such order or determination from becoming effective shall be commenced, and every appeal to the courts or right of recourse to the courts shall be taken or exercised, within 120 days after such order or determination shall have become effective, and the right to commence any such action, proceeding, or suit, or to take or exercise any such appeal or right of recourse to the courts shall terminate absolutely at the end of such 120 days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 18, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 73. That no public utility shall declare any stock, bond, or scrip dividend or divide the proceeds of the sale of any stock, bond, or scrip among its stockholders.

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 21, to insert as a new section the following:

as a new section the following:

Sec. 74. That no public utility shall issue any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness secured on its property in the District of Columbia for the purpose of any reorganization or consolidation in excess of the total amount of the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness then outstanding against the public utilities so reorganizing or consolidating, and no such public utility shall purchase the property of any other public utility for the purpose of effecting a consolidation until the commission shall have determined and set forth in writing that said consolidation will be in the public interest, nor until the commission shall have approved in writing the terms upon which said consolidation shall be made.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 9, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 75. That no public utility shall apply the proceeds of any such stock, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness to any other purpose or issue the same on any less favorable terms than that specified in the certificate issued by the commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 14, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 76. That all stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness issued contrary to the provisions of this act shall be void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 17, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC 77. That any public utility, or any agent, director, or officer thereof, who shall, directly or indirectly, issue or cause to be issued any stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness contrary to the provisions of this act, or who shall apply the proceeds from the sale thereof to any purposes other than that specified in the certificate of the commission, shall forfeit and pay into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia, not less than $500 nor more than $10,000 for each offense.

Mr. GRONNA. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, on page 53, line 1, before the word "dollars," the words "five hundred" and inserting "one thousand."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. In section 77, on page 53, line 1, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "five hundred" and inserting "one thousand."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think that the amount provided in the committee amendment is sufficiently drastic. It was incorporated by a Senator who found a good deal of fault with the bill as it was originally introduced, and he suggested the amount that is in the amendment. The maximum penalty is very high. I do not know that it makes very much difference, but still I think the Senator should not urge that amendment. I will be glad to hear the Senator's reasons for it,

Mr. GRONNA. It is for the reason that the maximum is high that I think the minimum of $500 would be too low.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I have no objection to having it read "$1,000."

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read

The next amendment was, in section 63, on page 48, line 5, after the word "within," to strike out "ninety" and insert guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to offer an amendment to section 78 by striking out "five hundred," in line 14, before the word oby striking out "live hundred," in line 14, before the word "dollars," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one thousand," so as to read "by a fine of not less than $1,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 53, line 14, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand." "one thousand.

"one thousand."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust that amendment will not be agreed to. I think the penalty is quite adequate and is quite as high as in any public-utility bill in any State whose laws upon the subject I have examined.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, I am not offering the amendment with the idea that the fine will ever be paid by the company. I believe, if anything, it is a protection to the corporation to make the fines high, so that when they once do violate a provision of law they will not be apt to violate it again. It is for that reason that I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronnal. [Putting the question.] By the sound the [Mr. Gronna]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall dispute that, Mr. President, and I shall have to ask for a division, even at the risk of adjourning the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask what is the amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment of Mr. Gronna.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will again put the question. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have a division, and I believe

I will ask for a division on that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am extremely anxious to get this bill through, and I will make a proposition to the Senator to fix the fine at $750 in place of $500.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not believe the sum I suggested is unreasonable. I do not believe that it is unreasonable.

able to impose a fine of a thousand dollars when a public-utility corporation violates the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will go further, then, and, in my great anxiety to have this bill passed, I will agree to the amendment the Senator suggests.
Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, on page 55, after line 12, to strike out section 76, as follows:

SEC. 76. That if any public utility shall knowingly or willfully make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, firm, or corporation, or shall subject any particular person, firm, or corporation to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever, such public utility shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared unlawful. Any person, firm, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000 for each offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (77) 81, on page 56, line 2, after the word "corporation," to strike out the word "knowingly," so as to make the section read:

ingly," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 81. That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect to any service in or affecting or relating to any public utility or the production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, light, water, or power, or any liquid, steam, or air, or the conveying of telegraph or telephone messages within the District of Columbia, or for any service in connection therewith whereby any such service shall, by any device whatsoever or otherwise, be rendered free or at a less rate than that named in the schedules and tariffs in force as provided in this act, or whereby any service or advantage is received other than is in this act specified. Any person, firm, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemann, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000 for each offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, on page 56, line 16, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "two hundred."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 56, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and insert "two hundred."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, on page 56, after line 17, to strike out section 78, as follows:

Sec. 78. That if any public utility shall knowingly or willfully do or cause to be done or permit to be done any matter, act, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing required to be done by it, such public utility shall be liable to the person, firm, association, or corporation injured thereby in double the amount of damages sustained in consequence of such violation: Provided, That any recovery as in this section provided shall in no manaer affect the punishment of the offender or a recovery by the United States or by the District of Columbia of the penalty prescribed for such violation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 11, on page 59.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. On line 10, page 59, I move to strike out the word "un-justly" where it occurs before the word "discriminatory."

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection to the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Evidently the Senator from North Dakota wants to strike out the word "or" as well.

Mr. GALLINGER. No. The word "discriminatory" fol-

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 22, on page 61.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I notice that by section 89-

The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia shall be the general counsel of the commission and shall receive from and be paid out of the appropriations provided and to be provided for the expenses of the commission in addition to his compensation otherwise provided by law the sum of $1,000 per annum, payable in equal monthly install-

I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the present compensation of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that it is either $4,000 or $4,500 a year. I have an impression it is $4,500. Mr. STONE. That is a pretty fair salary. Would or would not this duty come ordinarily within the range of his official duties; and, if so, why should he be paid a thousand dollars extra?

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee considered that matter very carefully and consulted with others about it, and were of the opinion that this officer ought not to be required to perform this extra and very onerous duty without some additional compensation.

The corporation counsel is a lawyer of distinction. very busy man, and is hardly able to keep up with the work of his office at the present time, and the probabilities are—in fact, I may say the certainty is—that if these additional burdens are placed upon him, Congress will be asked to provide at least one additional assistant for the office to perform the duties that will be required of the corporation counsel and his assistants.

It is a very busy office, I will say to the Senator. They are very hard-worked men. There is nobody in that office who is not working to the limit of his time; and this matter was given very careful consideration. The Senator from California looked into it very carefully, as did, I think, the Senator from Ohio, and other Senators who stand high in the profession of the law, and they felt that this would not be an undue compensation to pay to this official.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand that the corporation counsel gives his entire time to the duties of the office?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely so. I believe it is true-because we want to make a fair statement of the matter-that in the last year or two the corporation counsel has had something to do with one case with which he was associated some years ago, but it has been in an advisory capacity. It is, I think, stipulated by the commissioners—indeed, I know it is—that he shall give his entire time to the duties of his office, and he is giving his entire time to them.

Mr. STONE. I have great faith in the Senator from New Hampshire and in the accuracy of his statements, but I should like to ask for information if this thousand dollars provided for here is really intended as additional compensation to this corporation counsel, adding that much to his salary, or whether it is intended to enable him, because of the additional duties, to employ assistance.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say frankly to the Senator it is intended as an addition to his salary, because there is a pro-vision in this section whereby the corporation counsel can employ outside talent if it becomes necessary for him to do so. The appropriation in the bill is limited to $40,000 for all purposes of the commission, and it was thought by the committee that there might be some important cases. These public utilities have very able lawyers and plenty of money and employ the very best talent, and it was thought by the committee that this was simply a fair additional salary for the corporation counsel and that he might in emergencies employ outside help.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand the purpose of the bill is to increase the salary of this officer?

Mr. GALLINGER. It will increase his salary.
Mr. STONE. Is that the purpose?
Mr. GALLINGER. That is the purpose, just as in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, if the Senator will examine it, he will find that there are several officials who have salaries fixed by law, but other duties are imposed upon them, such as being at the head of commissions, and they are given a little additional compensation.

Mr. STONE. I shall vote against this item. I do not be-lieve in the policy of increasing the salaries or the compensation of public officials in this way. It seems to me $4,500 a year for a city attorney or counselor is a very liberal salary. I do not know how it is in cities outside of my own State, but in St. Louis and Kansas City, one much larger than, the other almost as large as, Washington, $4,500 for a city counselor, adviser, would be regarded as fairly good compensation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if those officials are not permitted to practice in addition to the duties they perform for the city? Mr. STONE. - I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know that the attorney general of my State is permitted to practice in addition to representing the

Mr. STONE. But whether so or not-

Mr. GALLINGER. And I know that in my own little city a lawyer of certainly not any greater distinction than Mr. Thomas, the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, recently collected a fee of $50,000 in one case. Good lawyers are earning very large fees in these days.

Mr. STONE. That is undoubtedly true. Some lawyers are earning very large fees. I have not any doubt that there are lawyers in this body who could earn many times the salary they

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question of it.

Mr. STONE. That is true of almost every kind of public employment, but if a man sees proper to take the position, at a fairly liberal compensation, he ought to be satisfied with it, and I do not believe that the Government ought to enter into competition with private employers. I do not like it. It may be that $4,500 is not enough. If it is not, then it ought not to be increased under any kind of subterfuge. By that I mean no disrespect at all, but it ought to be an open question of increasing the salary.

I merely wanted to say that, and I shall content myself with voting against the proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite willing to have the matter acted upon without further discussion. Does the Senator from Missouri move to strike out the provision?

Mr. STONE. I move to strike out, beginning in line 5, page

60, the words:

And shall receive from and be paid out of the appropriations provided and to be provided for the expenses of the commission in addition to his compensation otherwise provided by law the sum of $1,000 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 3, on page 63.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 18642) to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

PUBLIC UTILITIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a publicutilities commission.

The rending of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 92, line 6, page 64.

Mr. GRONNA. On page 63, line 20, in section 92, I move to strike out the words "as it shall deem" and insert the words "which shall be deemed."

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator I think the word "which" is an unfortunate word in that connection. I think the Senator can reach the same result by having it read, and give such notice to interested parties as shall be proper and reasonable."

Mr. GRONNA. That is better.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The Secretary. On page 63, line 20, before the word "shall," strike out "it"; after the word "shall," strike out the word "deem" and insert "be," so that if amended it will read:

Fourth, upon receiving such application the commission shall fix a time and place for hearing, and give such notice to interested parties as shall be proper and reasonable.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand the word "deem" is to be stricken out. That is the word I want to have stricken out.
Mr. GALLINGER. That is to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 4, on page 66, in section 95. Mr. GALLINGER. I think in lines 1 and 2, on page 66, the words "permit or" and "license" ought to come out, so as to read:

To revoke all permits or licenses.

I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 21, to strike out section 93, in the following words:

Sec. 93. That a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and not exceeding $40,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof as a new section, section 96, as

SEC. D6. That the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and all moneys received from fines, forfeitures, and ponalties shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia. the Treasury of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. By inadvertence a section was left out of the bill, and I offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. The Secretary. On page 17, after line 11, insert a section, to be known as section 8

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the section be left blank, for I think all the sections will have to be renumbered.

The Secretary. Insert on page 17, after line 11, as a new section the following:

SEC. — That before final determination of such value the commission shall, after notice of not less than 30 days to the public utility, hold a public hearing as to such valuation in the manner hereinafter provided for a hearing, which provision, so far as applicable, shall apply to such hearing. The commission shall, within 10 days after such valuation is determined, serve a statement thereof upon the public utility interested, and shall file a like statement with the District committees in Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GALLINGER. On page 33, line 15, after the word "section," I move to strike out "39" and insert "40."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 35, line 16, after the word "section," I move to strike out "35" and insert "36."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 48, at the end of line 5, I move to strike out the words "after such order or determination shall have become effective" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "after the entry or rendition of such order or determina-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 26, lines 13 and 14, I move to strike out the word "twenty-five," and before the word "section," in line 13, to insert "the preceding," so as to read "as provided in the preceding section."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GALLINGER. Those are all the amendments I have to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the bill passes I wish to have authority given to the clerks to renumber the sections. I want that authority to appear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

The bill was passed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. Overman was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on the Conservation of National

Mr. SHIVELY. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAM-BERLAIN] asked me to prefer a request to the Senate that he be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the junior Senator from Oregon will be relieved from further service upon the committee. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAXNER] is hereby appointed a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department,

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 2234.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we had better not undertake to do

Mr. BRISTOW. We have quite a little time before us yet, and I would like to get the bill up and have it read anyway.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it a long bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks for the consideration of a bill, which will be read by its title.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen.

Mr. CULLOM. In the meantime I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should we not go ahead with this bill? Mr. CULLOM. Nearly everyone has gone away expecting that nothing would be done after the bill which has been up was passed.

Mr. BRISTOW. There has been no understanding to that effect.

Mr. CULLOM. No; no understanding, but still—
Mr. BRISTOW. Why should we not do something on the calendar? There is a calendar here full of bills and it will take some time to consider them. We are meeting at 2 o'clock, and why should we adjourn at 15 minutes past 4?

Mr. CULLOM. As far as I am concerned I do not care anything about it, but I know that a good many Senators supposed that the discussion on the bill which has just been passed would last as long as the Senate would remain in session to-day, and they have gone away under that impression.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall not ask that the bill be passed, but I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw the motion.
Mr. BRISTOW. I understand the Senator from Illinois withdraws the motion. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas only wishes to have the bill read, it is a very long bill, and I do not think I will object. But the Senator who reported the bill adversely is absent. It is true he is absent from the city. I refer to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin], who is very much opposed to the bill. I know the Senator who sits on my left, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Hex-burn], is likewise opposed to the bill, and would wish to be here when it is considered. I do not think the Senator from Kansas ought to unduly press it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will not press it unduly, because I know it can be blocked very easily; but I would like to have the bill taken up, and then dispense with its formal reading and have aside and take up other bills. I am perfectly willing that that course shall be pursued, but I want to make some progress with Mr. GALLINGER. I think if the Senator to-day would get an order to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator to make that request.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the bill is before the Senate, I would be glad to make that request. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that the bill is not yet before the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that it be laid before the Senate.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill will be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask now that the further consideration of the bill be laid aside, and I give notice that after the passage of the bill which is the special order for Monday, I shall ask the Senate to take up this bill for its consideration. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Kansas is agreed to.

Mr. BACON. What request of the Senator from Kansas is agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BACON. How can it be temporarily laid aside if it is not a special order nor the unfinished business?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Kansas did not quite put it in that form. He simply gave notice that on Monday, after the special order is disposed of, he will ask the Senate to consider this bill.

Mr. BACON. That is all right. It is perfectly in order to

ESTATE OF SILAS F. BAKER.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4456) for the relief of the estate of Silas F. Baker. I will state to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that there will be no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the personal or legal representatives of the estate of Silas F. Baker, late of Keokuk, Iowa, such sum of money as has been in any manner collected from the aforesaid estate as internal-sevenue taxes paid on legacies and distributive shares of personal property to the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, such sums to be refunded in accordance with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Knowlton v. Moore (reported in U. S. Sup. Ct. Repts, v. 178, p. 41), any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF CHARLES C. BENTON AND OTHERS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4257) for the relief of the estate of Charles C. Benton and others. It is precisely similar to the bill just passed.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the personal or legal representative of the following estates, which paid taxes in the Massachusetts internal-revenue district, namely, estates of Charles C. Benton, Mary Ann Benton, James Chisholm, George W. Chipman, Parker L. Converse, George D. Colony, Mary S. Langley, Lucretia T. True, and Anna H. Ward, such sum of money as has been in any manner collected from the aforesaid estates as internal-revenue taxes paid on legacies and distributive shares of personal property to the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, such sums to be refunded in accordance with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Knowlton against Moore (reported in U. S. Sup. Ct. Repts., v. 178, p. 41), any statute it read for amendment if that is satisfactory, and then lay it of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 268) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Rhode Island

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, proceeded to its consid-

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this bill the State of Rhode Island, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

So as to make the hill read:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment of a fish-cultural station, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at a point in the State of Rhode Island to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this bill, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 22, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 20, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker, who took the chair amid general applause. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast ever been our refuge and our strength, quicken every noble impulse within us, that we may control our passions, guard our lips, walk uprightly, keep our hearts free from guile and warm with brotherly love. That we may do unto others as we would be done by, and pass on our way rejoicing, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL FROM INTERNATIONAL SEAMEN'S UNION.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in view of the terrible disaster which recently occurred to the Titanic, by which a large number of lives were lost, the attention of the people has been focused upon the necessity for safeguarding travel at sea. Therefore I desire to ask unanimous consent that the memorial of the International Seamen's Union of America, prepared by their president, showing the viewpoint of those men of experience as to the necessity for and the best methods of safeguarding travel at sea, be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson] asks unanimous consent that the memorial referred to be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the memorial above referred to:

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

On behalf of the seamen your petitioners respectfully represent that—While the existing discrimination against the seamen is permitted to continue the United States can not become a sea power; that native Americans will not become seamen; and that the differential in wage cost of operation will prevent American vessels from competing on the cost of operation will prevent American vessels from competing on the ocean.

First. "No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into any other, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due." (Art. IV, sec. 2, subsec. 3, Constitution.)

Under authority of this section Congress in 1791 passed the law giving to the ship power to enforce contracts made with seamen upon the seamen's body. This law—the fugitive-sailor law—in 1793 served as a model for the fugitive-slave law.

Under authority, presumably, of this section the United States entered into treaties with foreign nations for mutual arrest, detention, and delivery of deserted seamen to their vessels.

In 1865 the following amendment to the Constitution was adopted:

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction." (Thirteenth amendment, Constitution.)

In 1867 the statutes were revised, and all compulsory labor, except as applicable to seamen, was stricken out, and in 1872 the laws compelling seamen to labor for a private person were made more drastic.

Under the treaties with foreign nations and these laws seamen, having signed contracts to labor in countries having a lower standard of living life and a lower wages, were forcibly compelled to continue to labor within the jurisdiction of the United States.

This produced a difference in the wage cost of operating vessels taking cargoes from ports of the United States, the difference being all in favor of the foreign vessel and sufficient in amount to gradually drive domestic vessels from the ocean. (Testimony, Merchant Marine Commission.)

In 1896 the seamen, believing that they came within the protection favor of the foreign vessel and sufficient in amount to gradually drive domestic vessels from the ocean. (Testimony, Merchant Marine Commission.)

In 1896 the seamen, believing that they came within the protection of the thirteenth amendment, took this question to the Supreme Court, but in Robertson v. Baldwin (165 U. S., p. 275) the court held that the thirteenth amendment had no application to seamen. Justice Harlan illing an elaborate dissenting opinion, which resulted in abolishing the involuntary servitude of seamen in the domestic trade. (Act Dec. 21, 1898.)

In 1911 the Supreme Court again had occasion to construe the thirteenth amendment. In the case of Baily v. State of Alabama (219 U. S., p. 219) the court decided (we quote from the syllabus):

"While its immediate concern was African slavery, the thirteenth amendment was a charter of universal freedom for all persons of whatever race, color, or estate under the flag;" and

"The words "involuntary servitude" have a larger meaning than slavery, and the thirteenth amendment prohibited all control by coercion of the personal service of one man for the benefit of another."

We respectfully submit that we are persons and that we are within and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and

That Congress should now repeal all laws and abrogate all treaties under which we are subject to arrest, detention, and delivery to any man in order that he may compel us to labor for his benefit.

Second. Hon. WILLIAM B. WILLSON, of Pennsylvania, has introduced a bill, H. R. 11372. This bill is described in the following letter to the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom the bill was referred:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1912.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1912.

Mr. Joshua W. Alexander, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
Dear Sir: You suggested, at the last hearing but one, that we should take up the bill H. R. 11372 section by section, and we tried to do as you requested, but may have used too many words. We shall try to write such analysis herein and shall try to be as brief as we possibly can. The references made will be either to Senate Document 379, second session Sixty-first Congress, or to the navigation laws.

Section 1 amends present law by regulating the hours of labor at sea, by dividing the sailors into at least two and the firemen into three watches. (This is statute law of France and Germany—see pp. 19 and 23, Senate document; it is custom in England and custom protected by law in Norway—see pp. 27, same document.) In port, by establishing a legal nine-hour day, excepting on Sundays and legal holidays when no unnecessary work shall be required. (This is, in substance, the laws of France, Germany, Norway—see pp. 19, 23, and 28, S. Doc.)

Section 2 amends present law by increasing the penalty for its violation.

Section 2 amends present law by increasing the penalty for its violation.

Section 3 amends present law by striking out the following: "unless the contrary be expressly stipulated in the contract" and inserting in its place as follows: "and all stipulations to the contrary shall be held as void." Objections having been raised to this amendment that it would impose an unreasonable burden upon vessels that run regular passenger routes and are continually going into ports, the following exception was inserted: "within 48 hours after demand therefor."

The section thus amended is made applicable to seamen on foreign vessels while in American harbors, and the whole section becomes part of the means used to equalize the cost of operation of all vessels taking cargo out of any American port.

Section 4 amends existing law, dealing with survey in any foreign port, to what the law now is upon the same subject in a domestic port. (See R. S., 4556, p. 98, Navigation Laws.)

Section 5 amends existing law by striking out "not less than 72 cubic feet and not less than 12 square feet" and inserting "not less than 100 cubic feet and not less than 12 square feet."

This is now the law of England, France, Germany, and Norway (see pp. 15, 20, 24, and 31, S. Dec.), and by providing opportunity for cleanliness (French, German, and Norwegian law, pp. 20, 25, and 31, S. Doc.).

Section 6 amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection for amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection for amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection for amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection for amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection for amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection for amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection and contracting the discipline at see and persection and contracting the discipline at see and persection of amends existing law relating to discipline at see and persection and c than 100 cubic feet and not less than 12 square feet."

This is now the law of England, France, Germany, and Norway (see pp. 15, 20, 24 and 31, 8. Dec.), and by providing opportunity for cleanliness (French, German, and Norweglan law, pp. 20, 25, and 31, 8. Dec.).

Section 6 amends existing law relating to discipline at sea and personal freedom in a foreign port in the foreign trade by making the provide the provided of the pr allow seamen on foreign vessels to leave their vessels in any port of the United States.

It abolishes the fugitive slave law, which when the laws were amended to correspond with the thirteenth amendment, were left upon the seamen, and, together with sections 3, 5, 6, and 13 of this bill, it will, when enacted, do what has been sought for during these last 40 years or more, namely, equalize the cost of operation in vessels taking cargoes out of ports of the United States.

Seamen's wages depend upon the port and the trade, not upon the flag, and by permitting the seamen to leave in our ports and to reship under the same laws that govern shipment in domestic vessels, the foreign vessels must cease to bring men whom they can not take away, except as passengers, and they will be compelled to pay not only to their sailors and firemen but to their officers the same wages that are current in that particular port.

We have labored with the public and with Members of Congress for about 20 years to bring about these changes in the maritime law. From time to time some of it passed the House and failed in the Senate, some passed the Senate and failed in the House. We have called attention to the fact that native Americans are shunning the sea because of conditions under which we are compelled to live and labor. We have so far failed, because our voice is feeble and our opponents are strong. The voice of the bondman is silenced or overcome by the voice of the master unless those that listen have an ear attuned to the voice of the bondman and a conscience that compels action. It may be the duty of the statesman to listen to conscience only when material interests are thereby served; if so, there is in this measure sufficient of material interest to quicken the conscience, because in this bill are the means of doing without cost to our people what very many have been willing to expend millions of dollars per year to accomplish, and the more complete and humane the law is made the more effective it will be. The employers who oppose this bill secretly urge that its passage will put the employers at the mercy of the unions of seamen; they would have you believe that herein is the real purpose and danger of passing this measure. The bill leaves to the employer the entire seafaring population of the world, regardless of race or nationality, from which to draw their seamen, insisting only upon the necessary skill and knowledge of language spoken by the officers of vessels. The fear of union domination, if honest, is without justification.

Hoping and trusting that the bill may be speedily reported out of committee and passed through the House so that it may have time to pass the Senate at an early date, we beg to remain,

Very respectfully, yours.

Andrew Furuseth,
President International Scamen's Union of America.
PATRICK FIYNN,
First Vice President, Representing the Marine Firemen.

Third. We believe that the passage of this bill will gradually equalize the wage-cost operating vessels under foreign and American ilags if sailing from any American port. Our reason for our belief is set forth in the following memorandum, which was submitted to the President of the United States on March 25, 1912:

To the PRESIDENT.

Pass this bill and the equal of a great subsidy will have been given to American shipping and conditions will gradually so change that the American will again seek the sea and there will be no difficulty in getting the right kind of men for the American Navy.

MARCH 25, 1912.

Fourth. The gradually diminishing skill of men employed on steamers is dangerous to life and property at sea; altered conditions have changed the risk and liability of the shipowner; it has been shifted to the public. On this question we submit the following memorandum, which was submitted to the majority members of the subcommittee:

APRIL 5, 1912.

To members Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

Gentlemen: Speaking for the seamen, we respectfully represent that: Many years ago the shipowner was responsible to the traveling public for any failure to provide either an efficient crew or a proper vessel, any failure resulting in loss of life, health, or limb of the traveler was subject to damages which might bankrupt the shipowner. Limited liability has changed this. (See pp. 108, 109, 110, 111, and 137 of navigation laws.)

The shipowner was liable to the charterer for the freight or its value.

traveler was subject to damages which might bankrupt the shipowner. Limited liability has changed this. (See pp. 108, 109, 110, 111, and 137 of navigation laws.)

The shipowner was liable to the charterer for the freight or its value.

Limited liability has changed that.

The owner might lose his all by the loss of the vessel.

A carefully worked out system of insurance has abolished that. When the shipowner was liable to lose his all his self-interest was sufficient to cause him to have a stanch vessel and an efficient crew. Protection from loss through limited liability or Insurance altered that. All this, or at least part of it, has been recognized by the enactment of laws compelling vessels to be well built and properly equipped.

It was found that the shipowner evaded those laws or simply disregarded them, and that life and property was not safe in his keeping; therefore the Government went to the expense of establishing an inspection service.

Laws had to be made penalizing the inspectors, because they could be, and they were, corrupted.

It was found that because there was no special standard provided below which the vessel and her equipment must not be, in order to pass, there could be no conviction of either the owner or the inspector.

Special standards were adopted for the vessel, for her steering gear, her machinery, her boilers, her staitways, her life buoys, her davits, her boats and their equipment. All these had to be of a definite standard and a specific number before the steamer was or is permitted to provide these things. Inspectors had to be given a definite standard to go by in their inspection, and had to be penalized because they were subjected to see all these appliances.

The shipowner may take his vessel to sea with a crew not one of whom has any experience or can understand the orders given.

Why all this care about the vessel, her equipment, and tools for saving life and property and this total disregard of whether there are men to use fall these appliances.

The shipowner may take h

There is a law regulating these matters in New Zealand. You have this law.

The Commonwealth of Australia is considering the same kind of law introduced by the Government, and the law must pass or the Government must step out. You have this information.

Great Britain has rules, having the force of law, that to some extent regulate the manning of not only their own but foreign vessels when within the jurisdiction of her laws.

Germany has some pretty effective rules on this subject. You have the translation of those rules.

The United States Senate adopted an amendment to a House bill in 1905, after the Slocum disaster; it was never permitted to come before the House or you would not now be considering this particular question. You have that amendment.

Some shipowners are protesting. They claim that their self-interest is sufficient to guarantee proper men being employed. If they are to be believed, why expend the people's money on an inspection service? Should there not be some definite standard of skill?

Should not this standard be set by the Government—that is, by law? Is it safe to leave it to either of the contending parties?

Respectfully submitted.

Patrick Furns, First Vice President.

Andrew Furuseth, President, Patrick Flynn, First Vice President, International Seamen's Union of America.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE AT SUNDAY SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Neeley] to preside at the memorial service for the late Representative MITCHELL to-morrow.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee ou Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:
H. R. 20190. An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rock River, Ill.; and H. R. 16306. An act to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5428 An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, men for homesteads upon reclamation projects;

S. 6354. An act to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War and to authorize its partial use as a museum of historic relics;

S. 5309. An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140); S. 3925. An act providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Nevada;

S. 5668. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Cape Charles, in the State of Virginia;

* S. 2346. An act to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Florida;

S. 4599. An act for the relief of Frederick Beckstein and

S. 4930. An act to carry into effect the provisions of a convention for the unification to certain rules with respect to assistance and salvage at sea; and

S. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution authorizing the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to occupy temporary structures erected by the American Red Cross and to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington,

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 16101. An act providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 18336) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5428, An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19,

1909; to the Committee on the Public Lands,

S. 5548. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain tract of land to the Minnesota & Manitoba Railroad Co.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4663. An act granting to the Washington-Oregon Corporation a right for an electric railroad, and for telephone, tele-graph, and electric-transmission lines across the Vancouver Military Reservation, in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5545. An act providing for the issuing of patent to entrymen for homesteads upon reclamation projects; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

S. 6354. An act to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War and to authorize its partial use as a museum of historic relics; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5309. An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3925. An act providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Nevada; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 5668. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Cape Charles, in the State of Virginia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 2346. An act to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Florida; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 4599. An act for the relief of Frederick Beckstein and others; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution authorizing the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to occupy temporary structures erected by the American Red Cross and to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PURLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] submits the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 498 (H. Rept. 581).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 23349) entitled "A bill providing for the publicity of contributions and expenditures for the purpose of influencing or securing the nomination of candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States," and at the end of two hours a vote shall be taken on all pending amendments and on the bill to final passage.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. For a question. Mr. MANN. Is it the purpose, according to the form of the resolution, to consider that bill to-day and cut out the debate on the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is the purpose to consider that bill to-day. This will not cut out the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill only so far as we occupy time prior thereto. It will only postpone it.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I have not examined the bill yet, not supposing it would come up so soon, although the bill has been reported. I had supposed that under the rule that was adopted Thursday we would proceed with the Post Office bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The rule this morning provides for two hours' general debate, and the gentleman will have time in the meantime to examine it. It is a very short bill—H. R.

23349—and it is very important to get it up at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] will yield, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Congress has already adopted the plan of publicity of campaign funds for Members of Congress and Senators. This is merely an extension of what is already the law to the condidates for nomination to the Presidency. It is a bill of no great length. As a matter of fact, as the policy has already been agreed to by both sides of the House, it does not seem to me there can be much contention over a proposition to merely extend the present law-

Mr. MANN. There would probably not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (continuing). To other candidates in national political fields.

Mr. MANN. Still, as a matter of practice in the House it is only fair to Members of the House that they have some idea as to when bills could be called up. The House having passed the rule on Thursday providing that immediately on the passage of that rule the House should proceed to five hours' general debate on the Post Office bill, I think that Members have the right to assume that that rule would be in force and not a new rule brought in to take its place.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that if it is the purpose of this Congress to have the campaign expenditures in the present contest published it will be necessary to take action at an early date or most of the expenditures will have been made and the campaign will be practically over.

Mr. MANN. That is probably true. That was true also on Thursday before the other rule was brought into the House. The publicity bill had then been reported to the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it was well understood that this resolution would be brought up to-day.

Mr. MANN. Understood by whom? Mr. HENRY of Texas. By the Committee on Rules; by the gentleman's colleagues on the committee.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. Here we have a rule presented to the House on Thursday, passed by the House, providing that immediately upon the adoption of the rule we should do one thing. Now the gentleman introduces and proposes another rule to do the contrary thing, although both bills were then on the calendar. It is not fair to the Members of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the other rule was simply a continuing order, and the five hours' debate was to be taken up when the House resolved itself again into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the Post Office appropriation bill, and this simply postpones that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I will read a part of the rule that we adopted on Thursday:

And on the other subjects included in this resolution there shall be five hours of general debate, to follow immediately on the adoption of this resolution—

Mr. HENRY of Texas. When the House is again in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Nothing was said about that.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. If not, this rule could supersede it to that extent. But there was no such idea on the part of the committee, because it was not necessary. It simply postponed the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill for two hours in order to take up this matter. There is no objection to it on this side and there should be none on that.

Mr. MANN. If we find a rule brought in to do something which was not intended to be done, it seems to me the House ought to have the opportunity to scan the different provisions of the bill to see whether they are in favor of the policy or not.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, there is no question of unfairness about it. You ought to be willing to meet this question of publicity now.

Mr. MANN. I am always willing to meet the question of publicity.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yesterday nobody was against considering a claims bill.

Mr. MANN. You could not consider a claims bill yesterday. A gentleman who frames rules should say what the facts are.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It was not intended, Mr. Speaker, that it should be interfered with.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should frame his rule according to what he wants to say.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think we have done so.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman said "immediately," I sup-

mr. NAVNE. When the gentleman said infinitely, I sapposed that meant immediately.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do. Mr. PAYNE. I do not know anything about the terms of this bill. I assume the chairman of the Committee on Rules does know about it. I would like to ask him whether anyone is required to file a statement except the candidates themselves?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It does not say the candidates themselves, but all the committees or any person representing them.

I think it reaches the difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this proposed rule would simply suspend the rule passed the other day pro tanto, and if that rule that was passed the other day had been literally construed it would have been the duty of the House to have resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union immediately after the passage of that rule the other day, and to have gone into that 15 hours' debate. That is what the word "immediately" means. As a matter of fact, the Chair consulted with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon about that rule after it was passed, and we both concluded that it did not mean any such thing as that at 6 o'clock in the evening the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to discuss the Post Office appropriation bill. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is in order.

Mr. MANN. I do not make a point of order on the matter, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the House has the right to make its rules, but the Members of the House, supposing, as they had the right to suppose, that this day would be devoted to general debate on that bill, are very generously absent from the Chamber, and it is not fairness to the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I had moved the previous question. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. There will be 20 minutes debate on a side. Mr. HENRY of Texas. It seems to me we have already had debate, and that all debate is exhausted—the debate between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and myself. The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that a fair con-struction would construe that into a debate. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CONDOLENCE OF THE CUBAN REPUBLIC RESPECTING THE "TITANIC" DISASTER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the Cuban Senate:

CUBAN GÖVERNMENT, Habana, April 19, 1912.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Senate of the Republic of Cuba in session held vesterday resolved unanimously to express its condolence through the House of Representatives to the people of the United States of America for the loss of life in the terrible disaster of the steamship Titanic.

DR. Antonio Gonzalez Perez,

President of the Senate.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has one hour and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] an hour.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] may be entitled to an hour if he gets recognition. The Speaker can not yet declare who will have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not listening very closely to the rule, but he understood that the rule provided for that.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I assumed that I would be recognized for an hour and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for an hour.

Mr. MANN. I should assume that the chairman of the committee which reported the bill would be entitled to an hour under the rule of the House and that the ranking Member of the minority on the committee would be entitled to the other hour.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That would be true if I had not been seeking recognition, and thought I was recognized. Of course

I have no objection to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] controlling the time, and ask that he control the time on this side, and that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] control the time on the other side.

Mr. MANN. Whoever gets the floor is entitled to an hour—on either side. I do not ask for recognition on this side at this

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent that the hour in the affirmative on this bill be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And I should like to stop right there. Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] is recognized, he is entitled to an hour. If he is not, that is the only way

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We can adjust that. I ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] be allowed to control the time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER

The bill (H. R. 23349) was read, as follows:

The bill (H. R. 23349) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee of any political organization or party which shall attempt to influence or secure the nomination of any person as a candidate for the office of President or Vice President of the United States shall, within 30 days next after the calling of the national nominating convention or within 30 days next after the fixing of the date of a national primary election for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President of such political party, file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate of the United States at Washington, D. C., with said Secretary an itemized detailed statement, and on each 15th day thereafter until such nominating convention or primary election shall be held said president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of such headquarters, bureau, or committee shall file with said Secretary of the Senate a supplemental itemized detailed statement. Each of said statements shall conform to the requirements of the following section of this act, except that the supplemental statements herein required need not contain any item of which publicity has been given in a previous statement. Each of said statements shall be full and complete and shall be signed and sworn to by the person making the same: Provided, That if a national nominating convention shall have been called before this act becomes law then the first statement herein required shall be made within 30 days after the approval of this act.

It shall also be the duty of said president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of such headquarters, bureau, or committee to file a similar statement with said Secretary of the Senate shall be deemed a filing of such sta

Second. The aggregate sum contributed, promised, loaned, or advanced to the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of such political headquarters, bureau, or committee, or to any officer, member, or agent thereof, in amounts of less than $100.

Third. The total sum of all contributions, promises, loans, and advances received by the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of such political headquarters, bureau, or committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

Fourth. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee to whom the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of such political headquarters, bureau, or committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, has distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised any sum of money or its equivalent of the amount of $10 or more, stating the amount or sum distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised to each, and the purpose thereof.

Fifth. The aggregate sum distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised by the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of such political headquarters, bureau, or committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, where the amount or value of such distribution, disbursement, loan, advance, or promise to any one person, firm, association, or committee in one or more items is less than $10.

SEC. 3. That every person willfully violating any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the rule just adopted provides for two hours' general debate. I ask unanimous consent that some member of the committee from which this bill was reported may control the hour on that side.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any necessity for unanimous consent. A member of the minority opposed to the bill, if there is one, has the right to recognition on this side.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. If there is no one on the committee opposed to the bill-

The SPEAKER. The chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] for one hour, to dispose of the time as he pleases, and the Chair will recognize the ranking Republican on the committee for the other hour if he is opposed to the measure.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SHERLEY. Will it be in order, during the two hours' debate, to offer amendments to the bill without having been recognized for debate of the bill?

The SPEAKER. If any Member gets the floor in his own right, he can offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I appreciate that, but my inquiry is this: The statement of the Chair indicates that the time is now going to be disposed of entirely by yielding an hour to a gentleman on the majority side and an hour to a Member on the minority side. Now, this is a bill that could properly be read under the five-minute rule and thereby perfected. Will it be possible for any Member desiring to offer an amendment to offer such amendment before a final vote is taken on the passage?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that under the language of this rule any amendment can be offered after the two hours' debate.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The rule fixes the time for debate at two hours. The SPEAKER. That is the impression of the Chair. Mr. MANN. But the rule does not order the previous question at the end of that time, so that I take it an amendment would be in order, but not subject to debate.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the exact proposition—
The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the latter portion of this rule:

At the end of two hours the vote shall be taken on all pending amendments and on the bill to the final passage.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. The intention was to bring all amendments and the bill to a vote at the expiration of two hours. An amendment can be offered at the end of two hours, but there can be no debate on it, and the vote must then come on the amendment and the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was at first under the impression that it would shut out amendments, but the Chair does not now believe that it will. The Chair believes the amendment would have to be voted on without debate, however.

Mr. SHERLEY. The rule says that they must be pending. The SPEAKER. And they would be pending if the Chair recognized any Member to offer one.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the two hours are taken up by Members already recognized, the Chair would have no opportunity to recognize anybody else.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that when a Member gets recognition in debate, there being no special rule to the contrary, he shall have an hour. If the gentleman from Missouri uses up his hour, it would only be fair for the Chair to recognize the leading Member of the minority or some Member opposed to this, if anybody is opposed to it. The Chair, however, will at the end of two hours' debate recognize anybody to offer an amendment, but shut off debate on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. That goes beyond the rule, but everybody believes that it is right.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri, Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get recognition by the Chair in order to state to the Speaker and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] that in order to be sure that his amendment would be pending I myself would yield him time to offer the amendment; but the Chair has obviated the necessity of my making that statement. Mr. Speaker, the report which accompanies this bill is very short and fully explains the purposes of the bill. Within the last two years this House, by a vote which was not partisan, but generously given by gentlemen on both sides, has passed two publicity acts which now on the statute books.

This bill seeks simply to extend the provisions of those acts to parties not covered by the existing law. It extends them to the president, secretary, manager, or person in charge of political headquarters, bureaus, or committees seeking to secure the nomination of candidates for the Presidency of the United

I believe there is widespread demand for this legislation, and I believe that demand is so thoroughly reflected in the sentiment and judgment of the membership of this House that two hours is much more time than is needed to discuss the provisions of the bill.

Let me say that I take but little stock in newspaper reports which cast reflections upon the character of distinguished citizens of the United States; but if reports that reach us through the daily press are true, if they are approximately true, they appeal to us loudly and earnestly for prompt action on this measure. If it be true that certain candidates have expended the amount of money the newspapers tell us have been expended in certain States, I say the Federal Government ought to reach out its strong hand and require the gentlemen connected with the ex-penditure of that money to show from whence it comes and for what purpose it is being expended.

I am glad to say that many distinguished gentlemen in the I am glad to say that many distinguished gentlemen in the United States have already expressed their approval of this legislation. I was glad to hear this morning, in the colloquy that occurred on the floor of this House, the distinguished leader of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] plead that this bill might be considered to-day. [Applause,] I feel assured by his action here that he will give his vote and support in passing this measure promptly through the House and sending it to the other end of the Capitol.

A distinguished citizen of the United States, a resident of New Jersey, has recently sent a telegram to a Member of this House, which I read this morning in the Commoner, in which he gives his approval. I desire to have the Clerk read the telegram from Gov. Wilson which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Commoner, Apr. 19, 1912.]

I am heartily in favor of legislation requiring publicity of contributions to presidential campaign funds, including both the contest for nomination and for election, and of their publication before the contests. Indeed, I think such legislation absolutely necessary to the purification and elevation of our politics. It would absolutely open the field to public view in which sinister influences are most apt to lurk and

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Now, if the Clerk will pause right there; thus we have it from a distinguished gentleman who hopes to be the Democratic nominee for President that he favors this resolution. I now ask the Clerk to read the editorial statement following the telegram just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Speaker CLARK has also declared in favor of the same measure.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Now, if the Commoner correctly quotes the facts, and I am sure it does, then the last-named gentleman, the distinguished Speaker of this House, who will be the next Democratic nominee for President, is also in favor of this measure. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire whatever to embarrass the presiding officer of the House, but prompted by the spirit of goodfellowship and hearty approval which greeted the remarks just uttered by me, let me say that all of us, the friends of the Speaker of this House, bow in gratitude to the splendid Democracy of Oklahoma, Kansas, Arkansas, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, and to the splendid Democracy of Nebraska, and away over to the Pacific slope, to the Democracy of Oregon; and we, the Speaker's friends, will go with him as he seeks to woo and best bill—to secure the desired results, not in the next Congress, win the hand and heart of the Democracy of Massachusetts. which I believe will soon give a favorable answer to his ap-[Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has heard from Nebraska?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that I have heard from Nebraska, and that the Speaker of this House is running like a "houn' dawg" in Nebraska. [Renewed applause.] Mr. Speaker, I desire to apologize for the last statement, but it came to my lips as a quotation from some verses I recently read. [Laughter.] I want to say that the glad tid-ings which swept over this country since last midnight from Nebraska has kindled anew the fires of hope in the heart of every man who wants to see and who believes he will see the Speaker of this House nominated and elected the next President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is not in the interest of any favorite that I ask that this law be passed. It is in the interest of the great mass of the people of the United States. We Democrats in this House, aided by our good Republican friends who are just as sincere in this matter as we are, in my belief, want to make it impossible for the elections in this country to be longer debauched as the press tells us they have been debauched in the

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Stephens of Nebraska). Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I quote from the law recently passed governing the election of Congressmen:

Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, as Representative in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention * * * file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington,

And so forth.

The gentleman will note there that the candidate himself is included within the provision of the law. Why is not the candidate for the Presidency and Vice Presidency included within the provisions of the bill now before us in the matter of the publication of campaign expenses? Theirs being more important offices, why is it not more important that they should report than in case of Congressmen?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. My answer may not be satisfactory. In the first place, it is a little indelicate to require a man seeking the exalted office of President of the United States to make a sworn statement as to the amount of money that he expends. In the next place, we know that the candidate for President can not and does not himself expend campaign funds, except through the medium of committees, and this law, with the other laws that are in force, will require publicity as to every contribution made by a man seeking that high office.

Mr. BATHRICK. What is to prevent the candidate himself from receiving large contributions from any source?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. If he receives contributions and does not use them, they will not debauch the multitudes; if he uses them, then the committees expending them must give publicity. Then, again, at present we do not vote for the candidate for President of the United States, as we hope some day to do. We vote for electors who in turn vote for the President.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. KOPP. Does the gentleman consider this bill broad enough to cover the operations of an individual who may go about the country expending money in behalf of any given candidate?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. We sought to make the law broad enough to cover that.

Mr. KOPP. Who may not have any connection with any headquarters or any bureau?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The committee and the gentleman who drafted the bill, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry], sought to make it broad enough. It may not be, but let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp] this is quite as good a bill, I believe, as we will be able to pass at this session of Congress. I grant that after a while, after the people have been heard from still further, we may pass a more drastic and a more satisfactory law.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I differ with the gentleman in this respect, that I believe this House is ready to pass any bill—the but now. [Applause.] I call the gentleman's attention to this language:

That the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee, etc.

Suppose a wealthy man-and we have plenty of them who are interested in the elections-shall take $25,000 and go from State to State and distribute it, is it the gentleman's judgment that that is covered by the wording of this bill?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. To be frank about it, I doubt it.

Should not it cover it? Mr. KOPP.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will be glad to see it put into the law of the United States, but I ask the gentleman, does he believe that such a law would pass?

Unless some one shall show why it is unrea-Mr. KOPP.

sonable, I think it will pass; yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the good faith of the gentleman who is now addressing me and know that he would go as far as any of us in making this bill all any citizen would desire it to be, but this House alone can not act; all measures must run the gantlet in another branch of the Legislative Assembly, and we are trying to get the best we can get.

Mr. KOPP. Does the gentleman think that relieves us of the responsibility of doing what we think is right? [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The gentleman thinks that we to deal with conditions as we find the have to deal with conditions as we find them and, knowing the difficulties which have arisen in seeking to secure that which we have been desiring so many years, we should now take just as much of good legislation as another body will permit us to engraft into the law.

Mr. KOPP. If that amendment is not put into the law, does not the gentleman concede it would be a very simple matter to evade this provision?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Let me answer the gentleman once more, and then I hope he will excuse me. I say I would be very glad to welcome that as part of this legislation, but I did not believe it was advisable to put it in this bill, and therefore it is not in the bill. I am in full sympathy with the suggestions made by the gentleman.

Mr. KOPP. Just one more question.
Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. KOPP. Is it not a fact that when the last corrupt practices bill was passed in this House and went to the Senate it was amended and improved, and does the gentleman think we are not justified in putting in all we think that is right, because of the fear that the Senate will strike it out? [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who just propounded the question to me almost provokes me to do that which the rules of this House forbid, and that is to disclose matters which transpired in conference, and let me say here now I have no respect for the rule, I have no respect for any rule made by any political party or any set of men which hides from public view the acts of public servants. [Applause.] And I want to say to you now-

But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison house (the conference room),
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,
Thy knotted and combined locks to part
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine.

[Applause.]

I could tell you how distinguished gentlemen, powerful gentlemen, labored with my friend from New York [Mr. Conny] and myself not only to modify but to absolutely destroy, as I regarded it, most of the good legislation the Senate of the United States added to that bill, and I want to tell the gentleman that if it had not been for the great majority of the membership of this House, coming fresh from the people and standing firmly to their guns, that conference committee would never have reported the bill which became law. We are tied up on another piece of legislation which the people are clamoring for and for which the gentleman is clamoring. Why do not we get it? Go ask somebody why we do not get it, but do not ask me. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].
Mr. Sherley. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest this thought to the gentleman: We nominate, or, rather, we select by States, citizens to the nominating convention. If publicity is to be of value, that publicity ought to come prior to the primary election or the convention that is held in each particular State. Now, it has been currently rumored in the press that a great deal of money was spent in Pennsylvania in connection with the primary held there for the selection of delegates to a national convention. Does the gentleman think that this law makes certain the publication in each instance prior to the holding of the primary or State convention of contributions of money expended in a particular State?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] knows very well there must be some time fixed to begin. This act provides that the first publication shall be within 30 days after the calling of a national convention or the fixing of a date for a national primary.

And that seems to be as near as we can get to it. That, I believe, will antedate the action of any State in the Union.

Mr. SHERLEY. 'I want to suggest to the gentleman this idea: That instead of making fixed periods of time of, say, 15 days, it might be advisable to have a provision that required within 3 days or 5 days prior to holding the convention or primaries in any State that as to all moneys expended in that State a statement should be made public, because it is entirely possible that money is put out just prior to the holding of a primary, and the time might come prior to the publication, and when the next publication was had it would simply be reciting ancient history.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I recognize the force of what the gentleman has said. The committee sought to anticipate that condition by requiring the first publication to be within 30 days next after the calling of the national convention. Let us take such steps as we recommend now. Do not load the bill down so that it will be cumbersome and its enactment endangered. If it becomes law, Congress has full power to make it fit and apply to any conditions that may arise, and will exercise that power by amendment from time to time as experience may demonstrate the necessity.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I understand his fears. I do not want a bill passed here that will not go through the Senate, but that is no reason why we should put a bill through that does not mean anything. there be a provision in here providing for the publication of all expenses five days prior to the primary?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will be glad to take that up. do not think it should be put in the bill now. Mr. Speaker, I have already consumed more time than I had any intention of doing, and I new reserve the balance of my time and ask gentlemen on the other side to consume some time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the attention for a moment of those Members who are familiar with criminal prosecutions as to a provision in this bill, for the purpose of ascertaining, if I may, whether it will amount to anything when passed. The bill contained a penal section-section 3-

That every person willfully violating any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

The penalty is directed against the persons named in section 1, as follows:

The president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other persons in charge of any political headquarters-

Who could be punished if no one files these statements? I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] that question. Would it be the president, the chairman, the secretary, the manager, or other persons? They are not all required to file a statement. If no one files a statement, who is guilty? Are all of them guilty? Can you make one man guilty because some one else does not do something? You can not convict anybody on the face of the earth under such a provision. If you wish to make it so that the penal provision is good, it must be directed against some particular person or official and can not be, in my judgment, in the alternative. However, I would prefer to have the opinion of those who have drafted indictments and prosecuted indicted persons.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Do you ask me my opinion?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think the man in charge would be amenable to this criminal provision, whoever he might be, whether he is designated as president, secretary, manager, or

Mr. MANN. Supposing there is a chairman and a secretary and a president in charge, could they all be prosecuted if no statement is filed? It is easy enough to organize and have a president, a manager, a secretary, and a chairman, if that permits somebody to escape.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the language in line 3, section 1:

That the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee—

He is in charge of the political headquarters or in charge "of ne committee." That is the language, literally. It does not the committee. say "the president of a committee or secretary of a committee,"

President, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee—

Mr. MANN. Suppose any one of them is in charge. Suppose all four are in charge?

Mr. COOPER. How could any of them be in charge of "a committee'

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman's criticism is well di-

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest if it would not simplify this bill and make it more effective if the words "president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other erson" were stricken out? Mr. MANN. With "the person in charge"? Mr. BURLESON. And read:

That the person in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee of any political organization—

Mr. BURLESON. The bill provides that the person in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee of any political organization shall be required to make report.

Mr. MANN. That would make it of some value; but as it was written probably it was not intended that we should be able to convict anybody under it.

Mr. BURLESON. It would make some person in charge re-

Mr. MANN. I have always supposed that in a criminal statute it was necessary to have particularity if you wished to indict and convict Mr. BURLESON. It would make the person in charge of the headquarters responsible.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. So far as I know, speaking for myself, neither the gentleman who introduced this bill or any member of the committee is opposed to any amendment to the bill that will perfect it. If that will perfect it, there is no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, here is a situation where a bill is introduced on the 15th of this month and reported on the 17th, and on the 18th—day before yesterday—after this bill had been reported, we passed a rule providing that this day should be set aside for another purpose. Members of the House have not carefully examined the details of this bill, unless it be the members of the committee which reported it. I do not even see very many members of the minority of the committee here. I do not think that they knew that the bill was coming up. I do not think that the Members of the House generally knew that the bill was coming up. It seemed at me that, when I first looked at the bill this morning, I detected a fatal defect in it. The gentleman seems to admit it now. How many more defects there are in it I do not know.

This is not the way to pass proper legislation when everybody is agreed that legislation may be desirable. The House and the Members ought to have an opportunity to examine the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Yes. Mr. MANN.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How would you reach an individual who was acting in his own capacity, establishing agencies or setting up committees-more than one-in separate parts of the country? Mr. MANN. You could not reach anybody under the penal sections of this bill unless you established the fact that they were political headquarters or the bureau of a committee or a political organization or party that attempted to influence or secure the nomination of any person. These organizations are not organizations of any party; these committees are not com-mittees of any party. They are committees of individuals, and they are intended to influence the nomination of the party candi-They are not committees of a party; they are not recognized as committees of a party. The distinguished Speaker of this House may have a committee; I do not know; but if he has one to encourage his selection it is a committee devoted to the interests of the Speaker. It is not a committee of the Democratic Party, and no conviction could be had under the terms of the bill.

But I suppose that if the bill were enacted into law, the purpose in the main would be carried out by honest men attempting to influence the selection of presidential or vice presidential candidates, but those who did not wish to be honest would omit any statement that they wanted to omit in the state-ment which they filed, knowing that no criminal prosecution could lie against them successfully.

Mr. Speaker, it is an odd thing that at the very time when the Democratic side of this House is opposing or advocating whichever you take it—a change in the Constitution which would eliminate the control of Congress over the election of Senators of the United States they seek publicity in every other direction. So far as I am concerned, I believe that so far as possible every individual, every party, every committee, every organization of any kind which seeks to influence the election of any United States officer ought to be required to make public its receipts and its expenditures, including United States Senators. And yet there is now in conference between the two bodies a proposition, advocated by the other side of the aisle, which would eliminate the power of Congress over either the primaries or the election of United States Senators.

Why do you want to take away our power to require sena-torial candidates to publish their campaign contributions and expenditures? Why do you want to take away our power to require candidates for United States Senators at direct primaries, if they be provided, or direct elections, to publish their campaign contributions and their campaign expenditures? Why do you seek to strike down the law now on the statute booksof great value, in my judgment-to require both Senators and Members of this House to make public their campaign contributions and expenses?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MANN. I will yield, but the gentleman can take his own time whenever he takes the floor. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Oh, well, if the gentleman does not want to be courteous enough to answer the question-I will answer the question, certainly. Mr. MANN.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill destroys the other publicity act?

Mr. MANN. I do not. I say that the position which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] occupies in reference to the constitutional amendment now pending in conference, if sustained by Congress, will eliminate the power of Congress to control the publicity of campaign contributions and expenses of senatorial candidates either at primaries or elections.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The gentleman voted against House resolution 39, I believe. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, in House resolution 39, I believe. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman, that if the American people have to choose between two alternatives—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to answer in his own time. I did not limit the time.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART]?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois in connection with what he said.

Mr. MANN. I did not limit the time. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TAGGART. Does the gentleman say that the Congress of the United States has no power at this time to legislate with reference to campaign expenditures of candidates for the House of Representatives?

Mr. MANN. We have already legislated. We have provided for the filing of statements. That applies both to candidates for this House and candidates for the Senate; but the constitutional amendment, which your side of the House is fighting for, eliminates all control by Congress over the election of Senators, either directly or at the primaries. [Applause on the Republican side.] We are opposed to it. We are in favor of maintaining the power of Congress to require publicity of expenditures, both of candidates for the House and of candidates for the Senate, and you are opposed to it, or your committee is.

Mr. PAYNE. And they are insisting-The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. They are insisting on attaching that to an amendment to the Constitution which would allow a direct vote of the people to elect Senators.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for another ques-

Mr. MANN. For a short question.
Mr. TAGGART. The gentleman has reference to the amendment offered to the constitutional amendment providing for a direct vote of the people in the matter of electing Senators, has

Mr. MANN. I have reference not to an amendment offered to an amendment, but I have reference to the resolution providing for the amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. TAGGART. That is coupled with the resolution to amend the Constitution so as to provide a direct vote for Senators.

Mr. MANN. That is a part of the Democratic program on the resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution in reference to the direct election of Senators.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Did the gentleman from Illinois vote for that?

I do not remember whether I did or not. I do Mr. MANN. not see what that has to do with it. I am in favor of that part of the Constitution, and of enforcing it, giving the power which we now have to require of candidates both for the House and the Senate that they shall make known all of their contributions and their expenses, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] is opposed to it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to use all of the time. I y to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Korr] five minutes. I yield

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I am carnestly in favor of the publicity of campaign contributions, whether it be for the choice of candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency, for United States Senators or Representatives; but I believe the bill before us will accomplish nothing unless those who are to comply with its provisions desire to do so. And I take it as no reflection on the committee or any individual because we express our views in the matter. Now, it is a well-known fact that penal statutes are strictly construed, and consequently if this bill becomes a law and comes to our courts for interpretation in the state of the state tion it will be strictly construed.

As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], what does this prohibit? It prohibits "the President or any other person" in charge of what—"of a committee of a political organization or a party"—surely no one will contend that in a primary fight it is a party contest. The honored Speaker of this House is not seeking nomination with his candidacy sunported by a party; it is by certain members of his party. Nor can it be said that his supporters form an organization. Has there been any meeting of the men throughout the country who favor the honored Speaker for President; have they ever met to form an organization? There is no organization supporting any presidential candidate. When you say that only those who are managing "committees of an organization" or "committees of a party" need account for their contributions you are saying that there are no persons in existence to-day who need to so account, for I defy any man to get up and point out anybody who, under the strict interpretation of that statute, would be compelled to file a statement.

It is nothing more nor less than an association of individuals, not an organization, who are supporting the several candidates; a few in this State, a thousand in that, some here and some there; these people who get together and run a campaign are a voluntary association, so to speak, but can not be called an organization in any sense.

My contention, Mr. Speaker, is that unless this bill is amended so that every individual who contributes in excess of a minimum amount, say $100-unless there is an amendment which compels every person who contributes $100 or more toward the election or nomination of any delegate, or the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency, to file a statement, it will be nugatory; it will have no practical effect, and will not be worth the paper that it is written on.

Why waste the time? I think that no one can successfully deny the statements which I have made, and so why waste the time in trying to pass this bill in its present form? Surely, not because, perchance, as the gentleman from Missouri has said, and no one has a higher opinion of him than I, the Senate will put some other amendments on, or the Senate will not be satisfied with the amendments that are put on. If we are going to pass a bill let us pass one that will have some effective, virile force when written on the statute books. If there is to be a bill let it have some teeth.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. Has the gentleman his thought in concrete form in the nature of an amendment.

Mr. KOPP. I have not, for the reason that I never saw this bill until debate opened. It was introduced on April 15, reported on April 17, and I had no idea that a rule was going to be brought in providing for the immediate consideration of one of the most important bills that has been before us this session

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Yes.
Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have been studying the proposition as well as I could within the limited time that I have had, and I suggest whether it could not be put in concrete form by inserting in line 8, page 1, after the words "United States," the language "and any person who shall attempt to influence the securing of such nomination."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin

has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I think that would accomplish the result. I will say that I had intended offering an amendment myself in line 5, after the words "party which," add "and every individual who." But the trouble is the bill is already built and constructed around the proposition here embodied, and it would take a dozen amendments to perfect it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin a member of the committee?

Mr. KOPP. I am not. So, Mr. Speaker, it seems that this is so important that it is considered to-day, not in the usual routine of business, but under a special rule. Special rules are brought in when? I take it only when there is an emergency or when there is something of such transcendent importance that it must receive early attention. With all the primary contests now on throughout the country and with the charges pending of corrupt use of money, I am earnestly in favor of the bill being passed to-day, and I trust it will pass the Senate Monday and be signed, so that we may have this law on the statute books, but this bill ought not to be put on our statute books unless it is very materially amended.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask if it is not true that under the provisions of this bill nobody is required to publish a statement except the president, chairman, secretary, or manager, or person in charge of a political headquarters or bureau or committee?

Mr. KOPP. That is the position I take.

Mr. POWERS. And is it not further true that those are the only ones who would be amenable to the laws for any failure to comply with the provisions of this bill?

Mr. KOPP. That is my interpretation of the bill.

Mr. POWERS. In other words, anybody else connected with the campaign could, with impunity, have all of this money expended and would not be required to give any publicity to it? Mr. KOPP. That is the defect as it appears to me, and which I am attempting to point out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP.

Mr. KOPP. I do. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose we take a concrete example. Headquarters are opened here in the city of Washington and placed in charge of a gentleman who is a publicity agent or a manager or whatever you please to call him. Headquarters are also opened in Chicago and are placed in charge of a gentleman who has similar control over the immediate management of the campaign in that locality. Does the gentleman believe that a statement to be filed by such an agent or such a manager would cover the funds that are actually expended by a millionaire, for instance, in a campaign in the interest of a certain candidate?

Mr. KOPP. I think it is well known by all of us who have had any experience in politics or who have even observed the operations of individuals that the vast sums of money are expended by the individual and are never accounted for on the books of any organization, if you may call it an organization. But under the wording of this bill there is no one to file a statement but a party or organization. There is no party, there is no organization, who is supporting the candidacy of our honored Speaker, or of President Taft, or of Mr. Roosevelt, or of Gov. Wilson. There is no party or organization supporting those gentlemen. They are supported by individuals here and there all over this Nation within the party. This being a penal statute, it would be strictly construed, and I contend that there is not a person who would be required to account for expenditures made in the primary campaign now upon us.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose we expect to reach a candidate of great ability but of small means, who has a number of headquarters throughout the country and who is supposed to be supported by a millionaire. Does the gentleman think we would reach that millionaire by the passage of this

Mr. KOPP. I do not. As I stated a moment ago, if there is any one thing that we need in this country—and I hope it is not demagoguery to state it—it is to know who are the men who are supporting the various candidates in this day of great business, when we have hundreds of millionaires and when it is thought, at least by the common people, that these great financiers are attempting to dictate the nominations and elections. In justice to those people who believe this, whether it be true or not, we ought to place our hands on every individual who contributes a material amount and require him to say for whom he is expending the millions that he has hoarded. The should know who are furnishing the sinews of war. The people plause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat disappointed in the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] a moment ago when he abruptly, almost, refused to answer my question or to permit me to make a statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is hardly fair to me for the gentleman to make that statement. The gentleman has time and I have time.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as I heard the gentleman say the other day to a gentleman on this side, he will have to permit me to make my own statement, and I considered it that way; but, frankly, I do not think the gentleman intended to be abrupt. I appealed to the gentleman, and he told me to make my statement in my own time. I merely wanted to answer the question he asked me. Now, in my own time, I repudiate and deny the suggestion that any Democrat wants to repeal the law which makes candidates for the United States Senate give publicity to their expenses. After experiences of which the gentleman knows more than I do people all over this country demand that gentlemen who seek that high office should be required to give publicity, and I, for one, say amen to that holy and righteous demand.

The gentleman himself [Mr. Mann] voted against House resolution 39, and the Record so shows. He has forgotten how he voted or is not certain about it. The RECORD shows that he voted against it. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are more ways than one of defeating wholesome legislation. Some gentlemen say, "Oh, it does not go far enough." Mr. Speaker, if we Democrats have our way, it will be impossible for gentlemen to buy seats in the United States Senate in the future. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] favor House resolution 39 if we amend it so as to provide that the Congress of the United States shall always have the power to require Senators to publish their campaign expenses? I doubt if he Democrats would be glad to accept that as an amendment. has time and again been offered, and it will not do for gentlemen to say we are responsible for the long delay in reaching agreement in conference; but let me say again, believing as I do, thinking as I do on the subject, if the American people have to take the alternative between allowing a Senator to escape publicity or allowing him to buy a seat in the United States Senate, I would rather return to the people the right to elect their Senators. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a question that ought not to have been dragged into this discussion. I am somewhat surprised at my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp], who I know would gladly help make this bill a better bill; that every member of this committee on both sides of the aisle are seeking to make a bill which we believe will meet the present emergency, and as time goes and developments occur we would gladly meet you halfway and in every effort make the bill more perfect than it is. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 24 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question before he yields? I would like to ask the gentleman if he would have any objection to inserting, in line 8, page 1, after the words "United States," something to this effect, "and any other person or persons who shall attempt to influence or secure such nomination"?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I would have no objection to inserting the language which would carry that principle into the bill. We sought to make the bill the very best we could, but, as suggested before, we would have to make several amendments, if the suggestion of the gentleman is accepted, to make the various sections harmonize.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. You can insert the same language where occasion arises throughout the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentlen Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Would the gentleman have any objection to striking out the word "political" before "organization' insert the word "political" before the word "party," so so that the bill would read: "of any organization or political party"?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Why not have political organization, too?

Mr. BURLESON. We would like to know the amount of money that is expended by the American Protective League; for instance, which is not a political organization, as members of both political parties may belong to it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think this would include it.

Mr. BURLESON. I am quite sure it would not include it.
Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman I have no objection to changing the phraseology at all, and I will welcome any suggestion from any Member on either side of the House to improve the bill. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] a wise suggestion, and so far as I can I will gladly accept it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to what seems to me, if I correctly interpret the language, to be a contradiction. In lines 7 and 8 it requires that these officers' names shall within 30 days next after the calling of a national nominating convention or within 30 days next after the fixing of the date of a national primary election make their first statement. That is correct,

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think so.

Mr. COOPER. It says they shall file their first statement. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Then you go down to lines 7 and 8, and you provide "and on each fifteenth day thereafter until such nominating convention or primary election shall be held"

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Well?

Mr. COOPER. That is the primary election to nominate

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not know that I understand the gentleman, but the language, as I recall it, provides that beginning within 30 days after the calling of a convention or the fixing of the date of the primary these statements shall be made every 15 days until the convention or the primary election, as the case may be, is held, and then a final statement shall be made within 30 days after the adjournment of such convention, or after such primary election is held.

Mr. COOPER. But we have no national primary election. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I understand, but the committee thought, with the progressiveness that is now under way, we may have one when the next presidential nomination is made. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes-

Mr. COOPER. One moment. Then, a national primary election would not be a primary election in any particular State? Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER. But it would, as the gentleman from Mis-

Mr. COOPER. But it would, as the gentleman from sins-souri supposes, apply to a national primary election. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin I believe we are drifting to that end, and I hope it will come and come soon—the sooner the better. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Conry].

Mr. CONRY. Mr Speaker, I believe implicitly in legislation of this character. It is salutary legislation, for which there is an immediate and imperative necessity. The presidential primaries, as they have worked out in their practical application, have created certain abuses necessitating such legislation. obedience to the demands of this emergency this bill, as I understand it, was prepared and introduced to correct some of the evils that have arisen under the presidential primaries. admit, after reading it over and studying it as carefully as I could within the few moments that it has been up before this House for consideration, that it contains some imperfections. I may say it contains many imperfections, but I do not think that the existence of these imperfections should be utilized as a pretext to accomplish the defeat of this legislation [applause], which in its purpose and effect is salutary. I believe, as a member of the committee, that this bill should be amended. I am willing to accept, as far as I am personally concerned, any amendment of any kind whatever that will tend toward the absolute perfection of this legislation. I believe that the Presidency of the United States is an office too high in dignity, too great in power and influence to be smirched by any stigma that may result from a presidential election through the exercise of sinister influences and considerations. [Applause.] For this reason I believe that this legislation should pass to-day.

are in the midst of a presidential primary. If this bill does not pass immediately, we will not have time sufficient, between now and the nominating conventions, to apply it practically and to test its efficacy to reform conditions as they exist to-day, and as they will be developed under the pending presidential pri-was surprised to hear the distinguished gentleman on the other side of the House, the leader of the minority, say that the Democratic Party in this House has committed itself unequivocally to the destruction of that power of control and regulation which this Government exercises over the election of United States Senators. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York

[Mr. Conry] has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CONRY. He referred to a conference which has under consideration and advisement the bill passed by this House providing for the election of Senators by popular vote. And I want to say to the membership of this House that as a conferee on behalf of the House in my action in that conference I have been actuated purely and conscientiously by a conception of my duty in carrying out the instructions of this House. We received instructions from this House, which guides our action, by an overwhelming majority in support of resolution No. 39, to stand by a certain proposition. We have stood by it loyally and faithfully and have endeavored to carry out the mandate of this House effectively and patriotically.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONRY. That resolution was passed in this House. The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. Conry] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden]?

Mr. CONRY. I yield.
Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if as a matter of fact the resolution for which he stands as a conferee does not in words take the power away from Congress to regulate the election of Senators of the United States?

Mr. CONRY. That is the contention made by many people. The way I read it, I contend that in effect it does not go as far as the gentleman, by the question he propounds, would imply. But it is not a party question distinctively; because when that resolution passed this House it was carried by an overwhelming vote of 296 to 16. All party lines were battered down and party distinctions obliterated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York

[Mr. Conry] has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman [Mr. Conry] who has just taken his seat, able, eloquent, the ranking Democrat on the committee which reported this bill, gretted that he never had had an opportunity to read the bill until it was brought up in the House this morning.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to venture at this time to correct the statement just made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I yield for that purpose. Mr. CONRY. The statement of the gentleman verges closely I stated, not that this was the first time I upon inaccuracy. had had an opportunity to read this bill, because I was present at the meeting of the committee when it was considered, but I said in reading it, in the time allotted to me, I discovered the imperfections-imperfections that should not stand in the way of the enactment of this legislation and that should be eliminated in order to effectively deal with the evils that are liable to arise under the presidential-primary system.

Mr. MANN. I said he never had had an opportunity to read the bill, and evidently never had read it, until I took the floor a moment ago and called attention to some defects in it, which the gentleman, I presume, if he had read it, would probably have discovered himself, because he is an able gentleman and probably would have discovered these defects if he had even looked at the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman again refers to the resolution to amend the Constitution; both gentlemen do. This side of the House, when that question was presented to the House, voted in favor of a proposition to have Senators elected by direct vote of the people, reserving to Congress the power to control the regulations in regard to that election, and that side of the House voted against the proposition which would give to the Congress the control over the election of Senators by direct vote—a control which we now exercise over their election by legislatures—and the Democratic side of the House has persistently | only?

and consistently insisted that as a part of the amendment to the Constitution providing for the direct election of Senators the power which Congress now has to regulate the election shall be taken away from Congress.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota

[Mr. MARTIN]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there is certainly very great force in the position taken by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp] concerning the imperfections of this bill.

I think that the minds of Members of the House are agreed upon the necessity for this legislation. I believe that the great majority of the Members of the House are agreed also desire to perfect a bill that will accomplish results. Such imperfections as there are in the measure in its present form have resulted, evidently, out of the hasty manner in which this legislation is proposed. I am not criticizing that hasty manner. I think the exigencies of the situation are such that they call for this legislation and justify prompt legislation. At the same time they do not justify such careless legislation as will be absolutely ineffectual in accomplishing the results which we all desire to reach.

Now, this bill, as prepared, purports to touch nobody except persons acting on behalf of some organization or party. is a prevailing belief throughout the country and in the minds of the membership of this body that all of the offenses that ought to be reached here are not committed by organizations or by representatives of parties, but that they may be committed also by individuals of large means in their own personal capacity and in furtherance of their own personal desires. This bill does not undertake to reach individuals of that class. It ought to be amended so that it would reach them.

If, as a matter of fact, all the offenses of this type that we are now seeking to reach are committed by some persons acting in some capacity for some committee or organization, it certainly follows, as the daylight follows the night, that the moment this bill is passed, that moment the method would be changed, and thereafter all expenditures of that kind would not be made by representatives of organizations and parties, but by individuals, and then we would have no law to reach the offense

Therefore I think it absolutely essential to perfect any legislation that would accomplish the desired result, that the bill should be amended in such a way as to touch persons who attempt to influence in an improper manner as individuals the selection of candidates for presidential nomination as well as those acting in a representative capacity

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will allow me, will he draw up, before we get through the consideration of the bill, such an amendment as he has in mind?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have already submitted what I have to the gentleman across the aisle here—the gentleman from Missouri-an amendment which I think would reach it. I think it would be effective if we could insert at the bottom of the first page, in line 8, after the words "United States," this language: "And any other person or persons who attempt to influence or secure such nomination." Then make the required changes in the remainder of the bill, so as to make it cover these two classes of offenses-those committed by a committee or organization, and those committed by an individual. That could easily be done, and I think that would reach the

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Suppose in some small town, or in some large town, in the country, somebody issues a printed call by letter for gentlemen to gather at his house in the interest of some candidate for President. Does the gentleman mean to say that he would require such person or persons to file a statement every 15 days, as required by this bill, because they had spent a few dollars or a few cents in asking people to gather together?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It might be asked with just the same propriety, if a committee or some organization should do that thing, would we have a breach of the provision? Out of the necessities of the case, in order to reach the real offender, the law may sometimes cover negligible acts. not think for that reason it is any good argument against the advisability of the law.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a good argument in favor of putting a proper provision in the bill, so as to reach what you want to reach—expenditures of considerable amounts—and not attempt to reach expenditures that cover the price of a box of cigars

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There is a great deal of force in what the gentleman says, but I do not think we are likely to embarrass the purity of nominations by going too far in this matter. Of course, the thing that is sought to be reached here is the improper expenditure of money in an attempt to influence the selection of a candidate for nomination for the Presidency and it ought to be framed so as to reach the improper expenditure of money by any individual.

Mr. BURLESON. Could not what the gentleman has in mind be far more easily reached by adding, after the word "person," in line 4, the words "acting for himself or "?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think that is a mere matter of phraseology. I think something of the sort the gentleman suggests, if it were made plain that it does not limit what follows, would answer the purpose. I do not think it would do it quite as definitely as what I propose.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have said about all I desire to say upon this subject. It is a matter of vital importance.

If the Congress of the United States has had ground for passing the publicity laws which it has passed regarding expenditures for persons who are candidates for Congress, there is no reason why we should not proceed along the line, in order to protect the American system of nominations and elections for all important positions, from the Presidency of the United States down, where such elections or nominations are sought to be influenced by the expenditure of money.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I appreciate what the gentleman has said. The gentleman realizes, as I do, that many of the corruptpractices acts which we have now are not successful in as full a measure as we would desire. I want to ask the gentleman if he believes it is possible to frame an act of this kind so that it will not be evaded. Does he believe that is possible?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think, in the very nature of the legislation, it perhaps is more easily evaded than most statutes of a criminal character, but still I think that the moral effect of such statutes is good, and I think that the practical effect is to limit the corrupt and improper expenditure of money to influence nominations, and that such expenditure is considerably curtailed by this class of legislation.

Mr. MURDOCK. The answer of the gentleman, then, is that it does exert a moral effect, but does not accomplish all that it seeks to accomplish in making public all campaign expenses.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is not quite my answer. My answer is that it has a good moral effect, and beyond that it has considerable practical effect in Jessening the improper expenditure of money to influence elections.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], before I take my seat, that I do not think the gentleman has any occasion to be timid about placing in this bill, as it shall be passed by the House, any provisions that are reasonable, that seek to make this idea effectual. I do not think we need to fear what will happen to any reasonable provisions of that kind, either in this body or elsewhere, so long as they really seek to accomplish the end the gentleman so properly desires to accomplish.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Let me say to the gentleman from South Dakota, as I have already said, that we sought to frame a bill which we thought could become a law. Speaking for the committee and for myself, we will gladly welcome any suggestion from any source to perfect this bill and make it accomplish what we desire.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is the purpose of what I have offered and of what I have had to say.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAHAM). The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Powers].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman of this committee a question or two in regard to this bill. What does the gentleman think of an amendment of this character, beginning on page 1:

That the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of-

Then insert the words:

or connected with any political headquarters, bureau, or committee of any political organization or party or otherwise who shall attempt to influence—

And carry that amendment through the entire bill?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will say frankly to the gentleman that I think other suggestions have been made which to influence," and so forth.

reach the same thought in briefer language, and would be better calculated to accomplish the same thing.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman would have no objection to this amendment unless it was covered better by other suggestions?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. If we amend the bill at all, I want to improve it. I am willing to accept any amendment which, in my judgment, seeks to improve the bill.

Mr. POWERS. Would it not improve it to say, "Anybody in charge of political headquarters or connected with it"? That would include more than the present bill includes. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think nat; we seek to put the responsibility on the party in charge, whoever it may be. As the gentleman from Illinois has said, you could not very well make the clerk or the stenographer responsible, for they have no control over it.

Mr. POWERS. Is it not true, under the wording of the bill, that you can not make anybody give publicity of how the money is spent except the people in actual charge of it, while anybody connected with the headquarters could expend it and there would be no law compelling the publicity?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The purpose was to make the party in charge of the affairs make the publicity. It was not the purpose of the committee not to make each individual connected with it responsible, but the party in charge of the bureau.

Mr. POWERS. Does the gentleman think his bill is broad enough to cover money which is directed to be spent in connection with it other than by those in charge?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to confess freely and publicly that when it comes to matters that pertain to the lavish expenditure of money in elections I can always be instructed and get information from gentlemen on that side of the House because they are more familiar with that practice. Whenever I get a good suggestion from that side I do not attribute it to any superior intellect, but to superior experience. [Laughter.]

Mr. POWERS. In answer to the gentleman I want to say that neither political party is entirely free from this accusation of spending money in elections. I want to say further that I propose to support the gentleman's bill as it now is, because I believe it is a step in the right direction. I would support it much more readily if the bill was so framed as to cover all persons and make responsible all people who spend money toward the corruption of elections. In my judgment that is one of the greatest dangers to the well-being and welfare of this country that of corruptly influencing by money the procuring of nominations and elections.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I am obliged to the gentleman. and I believe we can amend the bill so as to obviate his objec-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 28 minutes. Mr. MANN. And how much have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has 17 minutes

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, the committee has not purposely been precipitate in reporting this measure, or in asking a special rule. The only reason why it is pressed at this time is the approach of a national election and our desire to have the legislation enacted in time for the approaching election.

The strictures of gentlemen opposed to this measure will not lie when carefully examined, in my judgment. I would like to say on behalf of myself as a member of the committee that I would welcome, and I believe my colleagues would, as a number have so stated, any amendment that would improve the bill. especially in the line of strengthening it. I submit it to candid men that when a gentleman has not gotten far enough along where he can form in his own mind an amendment, he is hardly far enough along to condemn a measure. We will welcome any concrete suggestion to improve and perfect this measure and accept it if found meritorious.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOBSON. I will.
Mr. POWERS. I would like to know what the gentleman Mr. POWERS. I would like to know what the gentleman thinks of this as an amendment. On page 1, line 4, after the word "of," add the words "or connected with," so it will read "that the president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other person in charge of or connected with any political head-quarters, bureau or committee of any "—then strike out the word "political"—"organization or party which shall attempt to indepens" and so forth

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I think if we could frame that section so as to make it broader and stronger it would be advisable, but I have a question in my mind whether that particular amendment would accomplish the purpose. As was pointed out by gentlemen on that side, it might relieve or tend to relieve or divide the responsibility of the organization. You will find it a practice that is universal, if you wish to place responsibility, you must have a unit as a head. That is observed in all military and naval science. You must hold the captain of the ship responsible for the ship, even though it is his watch and division officer who causes the ship to run aground, and the only danger of that would be the scattering of the authority of an organization.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I beg to say to the gentleman that this proposed amendment does not at all relieve the responsibility of those in charge, but it includes others who may be guilty of corrupt practices.

Mr. HOBSON. As I understand, the gentleman would duplicate the reports—that is, practically everybody in the organization, as well as the chairman, would have to make a report.

Mr. POWERS. Not that, but make the law apply to anybody in the organization.

Mr. HOBSON. I believe if it were a question of using the money in corrupt practices, it ought to embrace that; but when it comes to a question of reporting by the organization, it is clearly the responsible head of the organization who ought to be held responsible for the report. Otherwise the responsibility might be divided.

bility might be divided.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think that, in line 4, after the word "bureau," there ought to be a semicolon, or at least that the word "the" ought to be inserted before the word "committee," because as the bill now reads it would seem that the president, chairman, secretary, and so forth, in charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee must charge of any political headquarters, bureau, or committee must do so and so. Is it intended that "committee" shall refer to persons in charge of a committee, or is it intended to refer to a committee which shall influence, and so forth? Does the gentleman catch my point? The word "which" is used after the word "party," and that word can not refer to the president, and so forth.

Mr. HOBSON. I see. I am not sure but that the punctuation might be improved.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The word "which" can not be construed to refer to the president, chairman, and so forth.

Mr. HOBSON. I think that ought to be straightened out. Mr. LONGWORTH. Some amendment of that sort ought to be adopted.

Mr. HOBSON. Yes. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get the gentle-Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get the gentleman's idea of this proposed amendment, in line 5, page 1. Will he vote for an amendment taking the word "political," which now precedes the word "organization," and placing it before the word "party," so that it will read "committee of any organization or political party," and so forth?

Mr. HOBSON Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to accept that. In my judgment, that would improve the bill.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That has already been suggested.

That is acceptable.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee remarks that that will be acceptable to him.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not new. The stricture of its being precipitate does not really lie. It is framed along the lines of the publicity legislation for Members of Congress course it is true that this is a new field for the Federal Government to enter-that of undertaking to regulate the actions and activities of political parties. In fact, in considering this bill I believe it is the first time that a national convention or a national primary has been put upon the statute books of the United States, but while that is true, this reform legislation is not new and it is not precipitate. Already it is applied in most of the States of the Union. It has been applied successfully. The gentleman from Kausas [Mr. Murdock] refers to the imperfection of the enforcement of bills against corrupt practices, and that is true; but I will submit it to his observation that wherever publicity has been applied it has been effective.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is undoubtedly true.
Mr. HOBSON. And the beauty of this bill is that it does not undertake itself to prescribe various regulations, but does turn the searchlight of publicity upon the whole question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say further to the gentleman that I would like to see this bill so amended that it would effectually reach the individual who enters a campaign for a candidate corruptly, and I hope that amendment will be offered. I think that when that amendment is offered this bill will be a very thorough bill. I hope that amendment will be offered so that it will effectually reach the individual in this country who seeks to corrupt an election.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON.

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly. Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I want to suggest to the gentleman that that would require every man who buys or furnishes bills for a political meeting—pays for advertising for a political meeting—to file the statement covered under this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I do not think necessarily so; my idea was to reach the great campaign contributions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. May I have some more time? I have been answering questions most of my time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman two more minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this legislation is due; it is overdue. It applies a real germicidal medicine to the morbid and ill and diseased tissues that surround the brain and heart of the body politic and the body social. It does not apply anything that would hurt anything legitimate, but the fact is that in the last campaign even temporary and partial publicity tended to reduce the estimated expenses and expenditures from over five millions in 1904, by an expert estimator, down to less than two and a half millions or thereabouts. believe this legislation is due, that it will tend more and more to put the control of the election of President and Vice President in this country in the hands of the people themselves, where it belongs. I believe, in fact, that further legislation is due. I believe that the President ought to be nominated and elected by a direct vote of the people [applause]; that the time has come for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the election of President and Vice President analogous to the election of Senators, and I believe that such an amendment written into the Constitution of the United States would give to the people the control of their Presidency and Vice I have introduced a joint resolution, No. Presidency. which proposes an amendment to the Constitution providing not only for the election of the President by the people, but which also requires that the nomination of the President and Vice President by any party be made in a national primary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson].

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the desire of many Members of the House to so amend this bill that it will require any person who spends money to secure or aid in securing the nomination or election of a candidate for President or Vice President of the United States to report his expenditures; but I am not willing that that provision should require, as it would under the suggestions made here, a man who spends money for a political meeting, in procuring and posting bills, and such little items, to make the statements required under this bill. If I have an opportunity and it is in order, it is my intention to offer an amendment to the I shall offer to amend by striking out the words "president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other," in line 3, and the words "headquarters, bureau, or committee of any political organization or party," in lines 4 and 5, so that the section of the bill will read:

That any person in charge of any political committee which shall attempt to influence—

And so forth, and insert at the end of the section a new section to read as follows:

Any two or more persons who associate themselves together for the purpose of influencing or securing the nomination of any person as a candidate for President or Vice President of the United States or the election of any person to the office of President or Vice President of the United States shall be deemed a political committee under this act: Provided, That no such committee which expends less than $100 for the purposes described herein shall be required to make the statements provided for herein. provided for herein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] intends to conclude with one speech on that side?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. With one speech.

Mr. MANN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, in glancing over a morning paper a moment ago. I came upon an item which suggests a serious defect in the bill reported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucken]. The gentleman is from Missouri, and, as his remarks plainly showed, is very much interested in a Missouri candidate now before the country for nomination for President. But this item relates to a New Jersey candidate and to the fight upon him in his own State, and this bill does not meet a situation such as this item presents. I will read:

It was announced to-day that the Democrats will have an anti-Wilson ticket for national delegates in the second congressional district, largely as a result of the activity of Franklin Halliday, an emissary of former Senator James Smith, jr.

James Smith, jr., it is said, is a man of wealth, having back of him very powerful interests. Not long ago he and his powerful supporting interests were defeated in a political pitched battle by Gov. Wilson; but, according to this item, it is evident that James Smith, jr., is now giving money to Mr. Halliday in another effort to wreck Gov. Wilson's presidential aspiration. But the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] has brought in a bill that will not compel either James Smith, jr., or Mr. Halliday to report anything concerning the thousands of dollars they expended in this behalf.

Why did the gentleman from Missouri forget that?

This question is of very great importance, not only to the governor of New Jersey, but also to this House, because the law which we enact ought to stop the corrupt use of money not only by chairmen of organizations, but by individuals acting alone. Under this bill chairmen of organizations would be careful not to receive or disburse funds, but they would leave these things to individuals, who would keep secret the amount of money expended to nominate or to defeat the nomination of certain candidates. And, as is suggested, on this particular proposition "I am from Missouri" myself, and wish to be shown. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] said that the press and the pulpit have greater influence than money. I thank God the honest press and the pulpit have greater power than money in America, and hope that his assertion is true, and will so remain. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What we are trying to do by means of the proposed bill is to drag the corrupt contributors to campaign funds from their hiding places into the blazing light of publicity in order that all honest men may see who is financing campaigns. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is now in great haste to pass a publicity bill, but complains that this bill is poorly drawn. If the subject is so important, and he has given the sough study, why has he not proposed legislation before?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] complains of bad faith and defects in the bill, and yet does not deign to point out a single instance where there is bad faith or any defect.

Why is it gentlemen are now complaining about this measure? The simple truth is that those who drew the bill conceived the idea that if you would make those in charge of the campaign committees responsible for the coming in, the going out, and publicity of the fund, you would be able to reach most of the evils, and reach them and cure to a large extent the troubles now afflicting the American people.

Let me call your attention to a few matters. to what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Coopen] has just read about Democratic primaries. Let the country hear this statement going into the record of this day's proceedings, and let the people ponder what it means:

Using vast sums to nominate T. R., McKinley asserts—between $250,000 and $500,000 in Pennsylvania and $200,000 in New York, according to Taft manager—"plain bribery and corruption"—says votes were bought in Oklahoma conventions—millionaires named as "Roosevelt guerillas" include Pinchot. Perkins, Colby, Munsey, and others—Roosevelt declared to be himself a millionaire.

Yes, the day of reckoning has arrived; and Congress should condemn such corrupt contributions, if this article be true, and should force before the bar of public opinion men who would debauch the electorate by spending a million dollars in order to nominate a candidate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Hilinois [Mr. Cannon] knows Mr. Mc-KINLEY, a Member of Congress from his own State. Are Mr. McKinley's charges true, that millions of dollars have been raised and expended to nominate Mr. Roosevelt? Are they authentic? We would like to know. And I tell you, if you go further with us in a publicity bill, we will make it possible for you to have a summary inquiry instituted, as in the State of New York, and when charges like this are made by members of a campaign committee, or any person, we would instantly investigate them through court proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, we have no right to dispute the fact that Mr. McKinley's charges are literally true. I quote the language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKinley] as found in the statement. This seems to be an authorized interview, appearing in the New York World of recent date.

If Mr. McKinley's charges are true, he should prove them. If they are not, they should be disproved by Roosevelt's friends. The passage of this bill will give an opportunity to the chairmen and managers to file statements under oath of the contributions to the campaign and all the details of their expenditures. Will they do it? And this is the reason for the passage of this bill to-day.

Let me proceed further, quoting the exact language of Mr.

MCKINLEY. The question was asked him:

Were the victories of Roosevelt in Pennsylvania and Oklahoma due to a "great popular demand" for his renomination or to the use of money?

I will insert the entire article, containing the question and his reply thereto:

. [Special to the World.]

WASHINGTON, April 18, 1912.

WASHINGTON, April 18, 1912.

Director McKinley of the National Taft Bureau was asked to-day:

"Were the victories of Roosevelt in Pennsylvania and Oklahoma due to a 'great popular demand' for his renomination or to the use of money?"

money?" "The laylsh expenditure of money in this campaign by the backers of former President Theodore Roosevelt," said Mr. McKinley, "has led to this question. In no previous preconvention campaign in the history of this country has money been used in such large sums, amounting to plain bribery and corruption, as has been expended by the backers of Theodore Roosevelt."

It is of record, as told in the World this morning, that the Roosevelt League spent $59,126 in a vain effort to carry the New York primaries for the colonel, and now Mr. McKinley charges that $75 per vote was paid in the Oklahoma convention; that Roosevelt managers are using money under the guise of paying wages to workers, "another name for bribery," and that Roosevelt scrip "in due bills" to the extent of $100,000 was used in Allegheny County (Pittsburgh), Pa.

SPENDING VAST SUMS.

"Between $250,000 and $500,000," Mr. McKinley said, "is a conservative estimate of the money spent by Roosevelt managers in Pennsylvania."

servative estimate of the money spent by Roosevelt managers in Pennsylvania,"

A sum approximating $200,000 was spent in New York County alono on primary day in a vain effort to carry the county for Roosevelt. Instances of the use of money in Illinois and Kentucky are given.

"Where is all of this money coming from?" Mr. Taft's manager was asked. For answer he said:

"It must not be forgotten that among the understrappers in the Roosevelt camp are a number of millionaires who constitute the 'Roosevelt gentilas' and who roam about from State to State—most of it new territory to them—and tell the voters what to do. Among this number are Gifford Pinchot, the owner of inherited millions; John F. Bass, brother of the governor of New Hampshire; Everett Colby, of New Jersey; George W. Perkins, of the United States Steel Corporation and the International Harvester Co., who is generally credited with raising more money for Mr. Roosevelt than any other three men; Frank A. Munsey, of New York, an owner of steel common stocks; Gov. Chase S. Osborn and Truman P. Newberry, of Michigan; Chauncey Dewy and Alexander Revell, of Chicago; Thomas Niedeinghaus, of St. Louis; Walter Dickey, of Kansas City; and a host of others. Every man in this list is a millionaire, some of them several times over, and all are spending their money like water for Mr. Roosevelt.

ROOSEVELT A MILLIONAIRE,

"Mr Roosevelt is himself a millionaire. While he left the White House ostensibly 'broke,' it has recently come to light that as a result of his two terms in the White House he has found polities a profitable investment, and his publications have paid him in royalties a sum of money exceeding half a million dollars alone.

"Another contributor is Alexander S. Corcoran, an associate of William L. Ward, of Westchester County, and the largest stockholder in the greatest carpet factory in America. Corcoran knows all about Schedule K and where it hits the carpet manufacturer.

"The certified statement filed at Albany also shows that R. P. Perkins and A. Foster Higgins, both carpet manufacturers, and therefore not strangers to Schedule K contributed $1,000 apiece. Others who came to the aid of Col. Roosevelt with large sums are: George Baxter, $5,000; H. L. Stoddard, $2,500; Charles H. Duell, $1,600; E. H. Hooker, $1,000; with Oscar Straus and Baron L. Smith, $500 each."

Mr. Speaker, if Mr. McKinley's charges be true, that this nomination is literally being purchased by money contributed to Mr. Roosevelt's campaign, the American people ought to know it; and if the charges that are made by Mr. Roosevelt's managers against Mr. Taft's managers are true, we are entitled to know it; and you gentlemen, instead of quibbling about verbiage, ought to help us pass this bill. It will require a verified statement from Mr. McKinley and a statement under oath from Senator Dixon, of Montana. It will furnish machinery in order that we may know if the American electorate is to be corrupted by money.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman would not confine the statement to these two gentlemen, would he?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. O Mr. Speaker, if it be true, and the managers of these gentlemen file sworn statements in accordance with the facts, there will be nothing left for the candidates of the Republican Party, whether Roosevelt or Taft, to stand upon before the people in November. [Applause on the Democratic side. 1

Gentlemen are anxious now to pass a publicity bill, but this one does not suit the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], ex-Speaker of the House, because it is too crude. He did not point out a single defect. It does not suit the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], the minority leader. It does not please some other gentlemen; but I say to you that if it is passed, and by requiring sworn statements from Senator Dixon and Mr. Mc-KINLEY it uncovers the facts that are, from what seem to be authentic sources, true and must be true, we will have rendered a public service, and the country will rise up and call this Congress blessed and know that we are legislating in their behalf.

[Applause on the Democratic side.] It is easy to make suggestions about this, that, or the other thing in any bill. The truth is that this is entirely new legislative domain. We had passed a bill requiring publicity in regard to nominations for Representatives in Congress and the election of Senators, and the choice of electors in the various States when the President and Vice President are to be chosen; but here is a novel proposition, in which it was necessary to draft a measure requiring those in charge of political campaigns to file statements of the amounts of money contributed to aid in their nomination. It is a difficult problem; but when you once establish the principle that publicity must be given as to the method, amounts expended, and the details in securing of nominations, you have brought about beneficial results.

One gentlemen says you ought to require the "candidate" for President to file a statement. Think of that high office, centlemen. There are no candidates for President. "Cangentlemen. There are no candidates for President. "Candidates" for President are always sought by the people and nominated by the voters, [Laughter.] At least, on this side we have no candidates. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side. I

Mr. MANN. You have no candidate who has a chance. Mr. HENRY of Texas. But I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Theodore Africanus, the Mad Mullah of African hunting fame, did announce himself as a candidate.

Mr. MANN. And if he is nominated he will beat you to death.

Mr. HENRY of Texas, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] says if he is nominated he will beat us to death. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

To observe the standpatters on that side of the House applaud Roosevelt is enough to make the angels weap. Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I make this prediction, that whether it be Mr. Roosevelt or Taft whose friends are being charged with purchasing this nomination, When we place our nominee before the voters, whether it be [cries of "CLARK! CLARK!"] the Speaker of this House or any other good Democrat, he will win the Presidency. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days on this subject.

I object. You gentlemen limited the time of Mr. MANN. debate to two hours.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the most orderly way to proceed with the amendment is to report the committee amendments first and then take up the other amendments.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration provides for the publicity of campaign expenses used in the primary election for the purpose of aiding or assisting in nominating candidates for President of the United States. the bill is not drawn with the same kind of accuracy and precision as I think it ought to be, yet I shall vote for it as it came from the hands of the committee, although no amendments are agreed to by the House; still, I hope to see it amended, extending the scope of its provisions. I have long favored such legislation, because I believe that it is in the right direction. Ever since I have been paying any attention to politics no man has been elected President of the United States who has not been supported by the money power. The time is now ripe for the publicity of contributions made by all men who become interested in candidates for the Presidency. Mr. Speaker, as I view the matter, the people of this country have a right to know by what kind of methods candidates are nominated and what means are used thereafter to elect such candidates to the high position of President of the United States. There is a law already on the statute books providing for the publication of contributions to campaign expenses of presidential candidates after the nomination, but there is no law now providing for the publicity of such contributions for the nomination of presidential candidates.

If the newspapers are to be relied upon there is now a tremendous effort going on throughout the country in every State of the Union for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Presidency. It is even charged, Mr. Chairman, that some of these candidates are supported by millionaires, who are freely contributing money and means for the purpose of nominating certain gentlemen. I grant, Mr. Chairman, that there are expenses necessary to be made in primary campaigns, but such expenses should be confined to legitimate and business methods in conducting campaigns. But under no circumstances should money be used for the purpose of corrupting the electorate. To buy a vote in a primary campaign is just as great a sin as to buy a vote in the final campaign, and there ought to be just as strong a law providing against the one as there is against the other

Mr. Chairman, if the interests of this country are determined to spend big money in order to nominate certain men for the Presidency, the people of this country have a right to know the names of all such men and the amount of money contributed by each. Our forefathers in organizing our system of government did so upon the theory that the people of this country would hunt candidates for the Presidency, but it seems now that instead of the people hunting a candidate for this high position, the big interests of the country have run mad in their efforts to nominate candidates who would be favorable to them after the election.

The will of the people, Mr. Chairman, is thereby defeated, and if this method is pursued in nominating all of the men who run for President there will be nothing left for the people to do after the nominations are made except to vote for some man selected by the interests. The stability of our Government rests upon the sterling, moral conduct of its citizenship, and the moral plane of our national life can rise no higher than the moral plane of our citizenship. If we permit dehauchery and corruption to be practiced in the nomination of a candidate for the highest office in the gift of the people, we may expect the same thing to take place in the nomination and election of candidates to the lower positions of trust. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will pass and that it will be a warning to those men of big means who have strayed far away from the path of national duty by using money for the purpose of corrupting the electorate, both in nominating and electing candidates to the highest place of power and influence in the gift of the people.

Let us make a record now by passing this bill, which will go down in history as the turning point against evil practices which have been tolerated by political parties in the past. Let us provide the means whereby the flood light of publicity may be turned on party conduct and party management, so that hereafter the political wrongdoer may be exposed and punished and finally driven out of the councils of all decent politics. Sparta was one of the few cities in ancient times unprotected by strong walls, yet it was her greatest boast that her defense rested in the physical strength and courage of her male citirested in the physical strength and courage of her mate chizens and their loyalty to and love for the Spartan cause. Let it be our greatest boast that we have built up an electorate based upon the purity of the ballot, granting special privileges to none, but guaranteeing equal and exact justice to all, and forever settling the question that this is in truth a government of the people by the people and for the people.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment ment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 21, strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "ten."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "which," add the following: "and every individual who," so that it will read "any political organization or party which, and every individual who, shall attempt"—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 7, page 5, insert as a new section the following:

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary or general election or nominating convention for the office of President or Vice President of the United States shall, not less than 15 days before the day for holding any such primary or general election or nominating convention and within 30 days next after the holding of such primary or general election or nominating convention, file with the Secretary of the United States Senate at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part in sums in excess of $100; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent or representative, together with the names of all those to whom promises of office or other position are made for the purpose of securing influence or support in such elections or conventions, and the names of all those to whom any gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BATHRICK) there were 101 ayes and 24 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "committee," add the following: "and every such individual contributor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "political," in line 5, page 1, and insert the same word before the word "party" in the same line.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "political" before the word "organization" and insert the same word before the word "party" in the same line.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "committee," add the following: "and every individual contributor."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 3, page 1, by striking out the words "president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "president, chairman, secretary, manager, or other."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division. I want to see if the House wants to kill this bill.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The House divided, and there were—79 ages and 67 noes. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call for tellers. want to see if this House really wants to kill this bill.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr.

RUCKER of Missouri and Mr. Mann.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 20, after the word "thereof," add the following: "Or to any person or persons in behalf of any such candidate."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "other," at the end of the line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "any."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 so that it shall read as follows:

"That any person herein required to file any statement who shall willfully neglect or refuse to file such statement within the time specified, or who shall willfully make any false statement therein, or willfully conceal any fact required to be stated, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $5,000 or be imprisoned not more than three years, or both."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection and the Clerk again reported the

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOBSON. Does that supersede the section as stated in the bill, or does it supplement it?

was offered by a gentleman on that side—
The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to ask unanimous consent; the gentleman has a right to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. It is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill as amended be read, so we may know what we are voting on. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Rucker of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MR. CARL LEGIEN.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there is present in this country as a guest of the American labor movement a gentleman who is a member of the German Reichstag, president of the Federation of Trades Unions of Germany, and holding the highest official position in the labor movement of the world, the secretaryship of the International Secretariat, Mr. Carl Legien, of Germany.

I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess of 15 minutes to hear and to meet Mr. Legien.

Mr. MANN. How long?
Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Fifteen minutes.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilson] asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 15 minutes to hear and meet the gentleman named.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, want to say that I shall not make any distinction between this case and other cases which have been presented to the House, but I think that hereafter I shall object to all such requests.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, some time ago in a similar case I withdrew my objection, and I was assurred at that time that if any prominent labor man or parliamentarian of another country should come to our shores we would pay to him such honors as were paid to the gentleman then to be presented.

Mr. MANN. And this is the case?

Mr. BERGER. Yes, sir. I want to say the gentleman is 1 of 110 of the Socialists elected in Germany this year, and that you will have a chance to hear a genuine Socialist from Germany.

Mr. MANN. We have had that frequently in the House.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess for 15 minutes.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HARDWICK was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent Mr. Floyd of Arkansas was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of W. W. Hixson, H. R. 16622. Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION RILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 21279). And pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the general debate provided for in the special rule be deferred until we reach the subject matter of the rule. In other words, that we proceed with the bill now under the five-minute rule until we reach the new legislation in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, that request is too indefinite for me to agree to.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In what respect?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, what is the gentleman's re-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is that we proceed with the debate under the 5-minute rule until we come to the sections involved in the 20 hours' general debate, and then the debate shall take place.

Mr. MURDOCK. The rule provides that immediately on adoption of the rule the House, in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, will have five hours' general debate on all new legislation in the bill save parcel post.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee is asking unanimous consent to modify that rule in that regard.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I had a copy of the rule here— The SPEAKER. There is not any question as to what the rule says.

Mr. MANN. I understand. But the gentleman's request now is to postpone five hours' general debate upon everything except the express and parcel post. Now, the gentleman wishes to postpone that until these items are to be reached in the bill. But they do not come together in the bill. One of the items is to be inserted on page 19, as I recall it.

Mr. BARNHART. Page 15.
The SPEAKER. If the gentlemen will permit a suggestion, if they want to do what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] wants done, the Chair would suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee change his request so as to get through with the five-minute debate on the bill and then take up these other matters.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the Chair will recollect, that is about what I said, namely, that we proceed under the 5-minute rule until we reach the new matter in the bill, provided in the special rule, and let the debate of 20 hours be had.

The SPEAKER. Fifteen hours?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Five hours for certain matters and 15 hours for other matters.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Tennessee, then, is this, as the Chair understands it, namely, to take up this bill under the 5-minute rule and dispose of all of it under the 5-minute rule except the matters dealt with in the special rule adopted Thursday, and then have the 20 hours' debate.

Mr. SIMS. And then vote?
The SPEAKER. And then vote.
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I see what the point of the gentleman from Illinois is-that one section of the new-matter that occurs before we get to the second section of the bill—and I am willing to modify the request I have made so as to pass over that particular matter on page 19 until we get to the second section. ond section

Mr. MURDOCK. What is that matter on page 19?

Well, there is the steel-car item on page 19 and Mr. MANN. another amendment proposed on page 25, all of which comes in before the legislative provisions of the bill. Mr. BARNHART. And one on page 28.

Mr. MANN. That would come in after the other provisions. The amendment proposed on page 25 would take five hours' debate, if it were permissible at that time, Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman will notice in the bill that the second section of the bill is the beginning of the new matter, except the matter in reference to the steel cars.

Mr. MANN. I understand. The order makes in order the

Mr. MANN. I understand. I legislative provisions of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That commences with section 2. Also it makes in order two or three provisions in the bill prior to that time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Those sections I desire to pass over until we reach that point.

Mr. MANN. And it makes in order the amendment on the country-roads proposition on page 25. How are you going to divide up the time on these extraneous matters other than the parcel post?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The idea is to pass over them without considering them, and to consider them after general debate.

Mr. MANN. Is there not some way by which we could use the time under the five-minute rule on this instead of using it under general debate, when everybody knows that on half a dozen matters here that will have to be discussed in the five hours under the rule the opportunity for discussion under general debate will be of no value to anyone?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand that. I am afraid the gentleman from Illinois does not understand me. The routine parts of the bill ought to be passed on before we reach the new legislation, and the debate on the new legislation should occur immediately preceding the taking up of that new legislation under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman's request now, it is to proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, and these matters that are made in order by the special rule shall be passed over, when the places are reached in the bill, until section 2 is reached?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is right. Mr. MANN. Then you go back to the first item in the bill where it occurs, on through the pages here where the amendments would be offered?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Yes.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to that, but I hope the gentleman will formulate some plan whereby there may be more time given under the five-minute rule, where there will be somebody to listen, and less time under the five-hour plan, where no one will be present to listen except those who will be doing the talking.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I desire to take up the 5-minute debate, and then the 5-hour and 15-hour debates provided in

Mr. MANN. There are a dozen propositions to be taken up under the five-hour debate.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to his colleague?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennese a question, and I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois also hear this: The rule requires 5 hours' debate to cover all this new legislation except the parcel post and postal express, as I understand it, and yet that general debate occurs before the 15 hours begin. Now, at the end of 5 hours shall all these matters covered by these 5 hours of debate be taken up and voted upon before we have the 15-hour debate, and then take up the other propositions?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No. The purpose of the motion is to avoid three general debates on the one bill.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I want to avoid.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Let us have the general debate all at one time.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I am in favor of. The gentleman's request did not embrace that specifically.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, yes; !t did.

Mr. SIMS. I wanted it to be just as my colleague said.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The rule provided for 5 hours' general debate at the point in the Post Office appropriation bill where we cease consideration of it under the 5-minute rule. That 5 hours' time was to be devoted to general debate on all new legislation contained in the rule, save two pieces of new legislation relating to parcel post and parcel express, and, as I read the rule, after that 5 hours of general debate on those subjects we were to continue the reading of the bill and its consideration under the 5-minute rule, and at the expiration of that consideration we were to go into general debate for 15 hours.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is, after we reach section 8.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that the understanding of the gentleman?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. That was the rule we adopted. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman about the construction of the rule in reference to railway mail cars, on page 19. If we take up his request and go on with the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me

Mr. MURDOCK. Just a moment. When do we reach the consideration of railway mail cars? That is, under the fiveminute rule?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That has all been explained twice

Mr. MURDOCK. I listened very intently, and I did not understand it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That it shall be passed over until after the general debate, so that all new matter may be taken up

Mr. SIMS. All general debate?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. MADDEN. I want to see whether I understand the thing or not. The proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee is that we shall read the bill under the five-minute rule now?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. MADDEN. And whenever a new legislative provision is reached in the bill that that be passed over?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Until the appropriation features of the bill are disposed of?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And that all legislative features of the bill be taken up in their order, first under the 5-hour debate and then under the 15-hour debate? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; that we have all the debate

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to ask the gentleman when the provision on page 19, relating to the construction of mail cars, will be open for amendment under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That section, when reached, will be passed until after the general debate. Then we go back to it and take it up for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then, as we proceed now under the five-minute rule, we will touch no new legislation in the bill? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. None whatever; and I want to say that the main reason for running the 5 hours and the 15 hours together, instead of separating them, as was done in the rule, is that it will give a better opportunity to gentlemen to discuss every feature of it as they see fit and not force us to divide up the different items. In other words, there will be 20 hours' general debate. Mr. SIMS. Unbroken?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Unbroken.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some gentlemen have gone away who are interested in these legislative provisions, having the understanding that we would have only general debate today. Getting down to brass tacks, as it were, I should like to know whether the understanding of the gentleman is that we will not take up any of these legislative matters this afternoon?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We can not take them up if we proceed with the general debate, nor could we take them up if we proceed with the bill under the five-minute rule, because we could not reach them to-day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says we can not take them up to-day. That answers the question.

Mr. MANN. It depends on where they come.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, there will be an amendment introduced in reference to increase of pay of the rural carriers.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is already an increase in the bill. Mr. TRIBBLE. I propose to introduce an amendment increasing it more than the bill carries. At what time will that be in order-before we have the 20 hours' debate or will it be in order as we read the bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the request now made is acceded to, we will finish the bill except these new matters of legislation, and then have the general debate, and then the five-minute man-debate upon them.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman does not answer my question. When will the amendment I propose to introduce increasing the pay be in order; when we read the bill or after we get through reading the bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It will not be in order until after the general debate, when we reach it under the five-minute rule, Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the gentle-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If we are to take up all the afternoon in discussing this simple question, I believe I will withdraw the request.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no; do not withdraw it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. When the time comes for the 20 hours' general debate, is the gentleman going to insist that the debate be confined strictly to the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; I am not going to enforce any limit on that. Gentlemen may talk on anything they want to, just so they consume the time and get through with it

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I have no desire to talk about anything else, but I wanted to know whether the rule would be enforced

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], it is that we proceed with the debate under the five-mintue rule clear through the bill, excepting out of it these controverted questions that were put into the rule adopted last Thursday, and when the discussion of the rest of the bill under the five-minute rule is finished, then that the 20 hours of general debate shall ensue, and then read those propositions under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if, after the general debate, we do not proceed under the five-minute rule with reference to the new provision?

The SPEAKER. Of course; that has already been stated. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] for unanimous consent on the proposition just stated by the Chair?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Moon of Tennessee to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Hay in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, and the Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For inland transportation by star routes in Alaska, $250,000: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, including the establishment and equipment of relay stations, in such manner as he may think advisable, without advertising therefor.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this provision, together with lines 24 and 25, page 16, be passed over until we can get an amendment prepared.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] went away supposing that this day would be devoted to general debate. factory manner with the carrying of mail by aeroplane,

He desires to offer an amendment, which I think would not be objected to, just ahead of line 16, page 16. Does the gentleman from Tennessee have any objection to recurring to that part of the bill when the gentleman from Missouri returns?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I have no objection to recurring

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDTI to offer an amendment, which he has prepared, after line 15, page 16.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think I know what the gentleman's amendment is, and there will be no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bar-THOLDT] may have the right when he returns to offer an amendment at the end of line 15, page 16. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, I want to know the exact location of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. It comes in after line 15, page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the request of the gentleman from Tennessee include lines 24 and 25, on page 16?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how much is included in this paragraph. I have an amendment that wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the paragraph is passed by for the purpose of offering an amendment the gentleman from Ohio will have an opportunity to offer his

Mr. MANN. Passing the paragraph does not affect the gentleman's right to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $987,400.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 17, by inserting, after line 5, a new paragraph, to read "For the transportation of mail by aeroplane or other air craft, $50,000."

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in this connection that this subject of transportation of mail by aeroplane or other air craft was recommended by the Post Office Department to the consideration of the committee. After making careful investigation as to the possibilities of this comparatively new method of transporting mail they asked the committee to make a recommendation incorporating in its bill the sum of $50,000 to be expended for that purpose. I have not the slightest criticism to make of the members of this committee, for I think they have discharged their duty in a most conscientious manner, but I notice of the larger cuts in the appropriation from the estimates that under the Second Assistant Postmaster General's department is very much the largest, amounting to something over $740,000.

I do not wish to pose as a prophet, but I am going to take this occasion to say that inside of the next 12 months—at the furthest the next 2 years—we will find that the subject of transporting the mail by aeroplane or via the air route will demand a very important part of the attention of Congress in making up future appropriation bills for the Post Office Depart-

I had a conversation this morning with the Second Assistant Postmaster General, and he told me that there were not a few places in the western country, along the Grand Canyon of Colorado and New Mexico, in which there are needs for this method of transporting the mail, and where it had been and is to-day practically impossible to send any mail whatever with any regularity or convenience.

He also volunteered the statement that a number of postal clerks had volunteered their services and wanted to enlist for this special field of aviation. It is not an untried experiment. It is true Congress has not seen fit to make any such appropriation, although I do not think it has been asked, until in the framing of this bill, to appropriate money for this service. Last fall Postmaster General Hitchcock experimented in a most satis-

During the 10 days that those experiments were under way over 40,000 pieces of mail were carried satisfactorily, without delay and without a hitch. The same experiments had been conducted a few weeks prior to that in England and also in France. I would like very much, though it is somewhat foreign to this purpose, to go into the possibilities of aviation in our naval and war operations, and also from a commercial point of view, as well as its value in future scientific research. However, in the limited time that I have to speak upon this amendment I shall confine my remarks strictly to the possibilities, nay, the probabilities, of the value of this kind of service as applied to the transportation of the mail.

The field of aviation has been already so far explored in the way of experiments that they have succeeded in traveling several hundred miles without stopping, and also in carrying a weight considerably in excess of 1,000 pounds. It is recorded that a little more than a year ago a flight from London to Paris, a distance of 250 miles, was made without a stop by a French aviator in less than three hours, one half the time it would take an ordinary express train to make the distance.

Aviation is relatively yet in its infancy. I believe the time will come when it will be possible for us to rapidly transport by this means of locomotion thousands of pounds of mail. cost of aeroplanes is so insignificant that it is hardly worth mentioning. Gen. Allen, of the Signal Corps, told me the other day that he could get the very best aeroplanes made in this country for $5,000, and that if some of the foreign equipments with superior engines were purchased the cost would be $6,000, part of which would go back into the pockets of the Government in the shape of revenue duties.

Most of our efforts in framing the appropriation bills at this session have been in the way of economy, and I wish to say to the credit of my colleagues on this floor, that notwithstanding there would seem to be at times a popular impression abroad that Congress is not working for economy in the administration of public affairs, yet few if any measures calling for the expenditure of public money are allowed to pass without the most careful scrutiny. Nowhere can we bring about economical conditions more than along this line of encouraging and developing competition with railway companies and steamboat companies in the carrying of mails.

[The time of Mr. Sharp having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted five minutes more.]

Mr. SHARP. To-day we are paying the railway companies in the United States something like $47,000,000 annually for transporting our mail. In addition to that great sum we are paying, as provided for in this bill, if I remember correctly, nearly $4,800,000 for the rental of postal cars. Let me say that this modest sum of $50,000 is not to be expended in an entirely new field, involving additional expense. The Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Stewart, tells me that much of this would be in substitution of the money already used in the star routes over the far West, where the natural obstacles due to the topography of the country are such as to render almost impossible the carrying of mail at any reasonable price or with expedi-

It seems to me that in the line of economy this Congress can not make a better stroke or take a greater step in advance than to now give the department the sum of $50,000, which it has asked, partly, if you please, experimental, but practically withal, to facilitate the carrying of mail. I am told by the department that it is not the intention to buy these aeroplanes, but simply to make a contract with those who will carry the mail at certain prices under time schedules, and already in 20 different instances I have been informed mail has been carried voluntarily, free of cost, by aviators of the country to test the practicability of such a thing. Only last fall a trip was made down the Mississippi River from upper Minnesota somewhere, a distance of 300 miles, with loaded mail sacks. We know what that later invention-the hydroplane-has accomplished. think this bill appropriates specifically a considerable amount for transportation by water. If we invest this sum of money in the hiring of aeroplanes, hydroplanes, and other air craft, as contemplated in this amendment, I believe that it will be the first step not only in largely revolutionizing our method of transporting mails but of transporting passengers and light freight. It will also be a great agent toward the saving of life.

I make this prediction as the result of considerable study and investigation, as I became interested in this subject some months ago through the introduction of a number of bills bearing upon different phases of aviation and its encouragement.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply in earnest in my desire to see this amendment incorporated in the bill, not alone because of the

from the lack of time in a very brief manner, but also from the feeling that our Nation should not lag behind other powers in the progress of human achievement. Though it may be a sentimental reason, yet I trust that it is nevertheless not without some force, that the Government, which, through its liberal financial encouragement of its pioneer aeronautic investigator. Langley, finally resulting in the actual culmination and realiza-tion of the dream of the ages to fly through the air, as accomplished by the Wright brothers, thus first giving to the world this invention, should not now be content to rest in its work of developing a field so fruitful in its possibilities as a national defense, commercial advantages, and scientific research. Coupled with that great invention of wireless telegraphy, it would never permit again the tremendous loss of life and noble sacrifices which occurred on the giant steamship which foundered in the last few days. [Applause.]
Mr. REHLLY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be put down as opposed to any progressive measure, but it occurs to me that the postal service and the Post Office Department have been up in the air high enough for a long time and now let us get down to terra firma for once.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take much time and only desire to say a few words on this amendment which has been offered by my colleague. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is fair and reasonable and in the line of progress. I can not hope to add very much to what my colleague said because he has given this subject a good deal of study and I have given it only a little, but I do know that this Government is not making provision for the encouragement of aviation that is being made by other great governments of such standing as ours. I happen to know that certain of the great governments are appropriating up into the millions for the purpose of making experimentations along these lines and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is very fitting and proper that this amendment, which proposes to set aside $50,000 for this purpose, should be adopted. We can not afford to be behind the other nations. The fact is the people of this country are tremendously interested in this subject of aviation. There was a time when to have introduced such an amendment would have been to perpetrate a joke, but this is not a joke, it is not an experiment any longer. As was explained by my colleague, mail has been carried a number of times and there is no reason why it can not be, and I submit that, aside from the economy of it and the accommodation that would arise from the use of aeroplanes in certain places, the encouragement that would be given to a great and widely open field of science would be worth more than the amount of the appropriation. So I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will agree to this amendment. I believe it is in the interest of progress, in the interest of the betterment of the postal service, and I hope It will be adopted.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope just the opposite from my friend—that it will not be adopted. This committee considered this question, and there was not a single fact brought before the committee by the department or anybody that would justify the useless expenditure of this money in experimentations of this sort. That character of conveyance is not fixed; it is not settled; it is not stable in any way; and there is nothing before us that would justify us in making an experimentation along these lines. Now, we know what can be done in the water and on the land in the matter of the speedy delivery of mails, and I submit that this is hardly the time for us to begin to carry our mails through the air when we can travel If any fact had been presented that justion the ground. fied-

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee (continuing). Such an appropriation, the committee would have seriously considered it, but the committee have not thought it was a wise thing to engraft every new fad that comes along in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it not a fact the Government of the United States made pledges for the installation of the telegraph, and, in fact, as I recall the history of the time, built a telegraph line when it was much more in an experimental stage than this matter now is?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The Government did all of that, but that is quite a different proposition. We have made provision for carrying the mails over the land and sea, and I hope gentlemen will vote down the proposition to undertake to carry the mail in the air.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed there would be no objection on the part of the committee to this amendment, from the fact that no point of order was made upon the amendmore practical reasons which I have just stated, and necessarily ment. I do not desire to delay the committee. I am in favor of the amendment. I think that the Government ought to keep up or at least be not very far behind in the real progress that is being made in the world. There are undoubtedly places where, if you can get mail delivered by airships at all, it can be delivered much cheaper than it can be by trains and wagonsplaces in the mountainous country, if that can be done; if it can not be done the money will not be expended. If that can be done the Government ought to follow that line, in my judgment. I have frequently talked aviation on the floor of this House, and helped to secure amendments in bills on the floor to make appropriations and increase appropriations in the Army for that purpose. Here comes a proposition to use it in peaceful methods. I would a great deal rather see it used in peaceful methods than for war purposes if it can be done effectively, but we have reached the point in this world where transportation in the air has come to some extent and where the development of the transportation will be greater than any other line of development in the near future, in my judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I can not agree with my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the two gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. Willis and Mr. Sharp] as to the propriety of this appropriation. I had something to do with the genesis of aviation, as I assisted in making the general appropriation, which included the small appropriation under which the late Prof. Langley demonstrated that a body heavier than air could be maintained in the air, and sail, and make progress. All that has happened since that time very largely has happened by private enterprise. I do not believe that the time will ever come when we will carry corn and wheat to market by airship, or that we will have the certainty, celerity, and dispatch for carrying the mails that is desirable. Yet I would not stop encouragement to aviation if it needed any.

Prof. Henry broke the circuit and found that news could be sent by electricity in 1830, and made his report to the Academy of Sciences, and it rested until 1840, when an annual appropriation was made by the Government of $30,000 to construct a line from Washington to Baltimore. I have not any fear but that progress will be made along this line; nor do I oppose proper expenditure of public money for this purpose. But let us keep it under one administration. I do not recollect, although some gentlemen do-as I believe I was not in the Housebut I am quite sure that the Army bill carried an appropriation for this purpose, and that officers of the Army, some of them losing their lives, but still other volunteers coming, are making If useful at all, I believe it will be useful that expenditure. for scouting service.

Mr. SHARP. In the Army bill, of which the gentleman makes mention, my recollection is the amount asked for was $125,000, and it was cut down $50,000, making it $75,000. Against that the French Government appropriated last year $1,000,000-just in one year-and, I think, getting about as far ahead of us as any other branch of the service.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know about the French Government. The Army bill has not yet become a law. Even if that is not enough, let us keep these experiments in one department. do not know what the French Government is doing in the premises, but I do know that if it be a fad it is one which is being wonderfully promoted in the United States. These machines have fallen in price, and I have no doubt have been and are being perfected; and many men annually, having the leisure and the courage and the money, are making these experiments. I do not think it is wise to have two or three or more departments expending the money.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON. Yes. Mr. WILLIS. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the War Department is seeking to develop quite a different kind of type of machine from that which would be useful in the Post Office Department? Because of that fact it is desirable that the appropriations should go to the two departments, and not be confined to one, as the gentleman is now suggesting.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I am not willing to appropriate for anything more than bare experiments. As to whether there are proper stalls and boxes for transmission of mail being perfected by the War Department, I do not know. I hope not. In other words, the progress that could be made, in my judgment, is being made, and tenfold-and, I dare say, a hundredfold-more progress is being made by private enterprise than the Government will ever make.

Mr. MURDOCK and Mr. SHARP rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-DOCK] is recognized.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, we do not see very far into the future. There is no imagination here so wild as to believe that the carrying of mail by aeroplane might a little later relieve an appropriation for improvement for roads for mail routes; yet who can tell about the aeroplane and its possible development along the lines of utility. Twenty years ago I had the opportunity once to interview Thomas A. Edison on the subject of the flying machine. No one at that time believed that its realization was in the near future, but Edison told me it was. He said he had repeatedly experimented himself, always without success, but that some day some man-he hoped an American-would steal the secret of flying from the hawk and from the eagle. It has been stolen, and man is flying to-day. Still it seems ridiculous to claim that we could economically carry the mail by aeroplane. Mention has been made here of the telegraph. The day that the first message was sent from Baltimore to Washington, it was looked upon by the great majority of men as an impossibility.

It is a historical fact that that morning the then Secretary of State walked down Pennsylvania Avenue with Prof. Morse, and said to Prof. Morse, with great pomposity, "Professor, how large a bundle will this telegraph of yours carry from Balti-more to Washington?" [Laughter.] Ten years after the first locomotive came into the city of Washington this Government continued to carry mail, between towns connected by railroad, by the star routes.

It is true that this Government had the right in 1840, for a matter of $25,000, which Congress refused to appropriate, to take over the telegraph companies of this country-a thing which should have been done. We can not afford to hold back because a thing is new. So I am heartly in favor of this appropriation for the development of this new service, and I shall support the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. COX of Ohio rose.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized. Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it has only been a few years ago that two humble American boys in my home city of Dayton, Ohio, established a supremacy over the air and started the development of the aeroplane. They were regarded by the community, and by everyone else who knew anything about their experiments and their endeavors, as being possessed of a strange purpose, to say the least. But the world now does them honor, particularly since they have so developed their device that a passenger in a Wright biplane has flown successfully and without accident from the Atlantic to the Pacific

The Wright boys have since been decorated by every great Government on the face of the earth. They have up until this time received many encouragements from Governments abroad, but they have uncomplainingly, I might say to their credit, received very little cooperation from their own Government. France last year, as my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Sharp] has just stated, appropriated a million dollars for aeroplane service. The French Government has 400 aeroplanes; the American Government has 10.

If you gentlemen here knew the persistence with which the Wright boys continue in the endeavor to develop this great invention you might then be persuaded to give them the encouragement suggested by the amendment offered by my collenge from Ohio [Mr. Sharp]. Mr. Orville Wright stated to me only a short while ago that they had in their minds become convinced that the time would be very short indeed when they would be able without power to soar in the air as the buzzard does, and the hawk. They have stated this as a positive conviction, and I believe that their claim is entitled to very serious consideration, because in the only country on earth where the issue has been made as to who was the original inventor of the aeroplane the French courts have given this honor to the Wright brothers.

I am in favor of this amendment for two reasons: First, because I believe that by the development of the aeroplane in the postal service its utility will be widened and extended; second, I believe that by this governmental encouragement the biplane will much sooner become the one active, potential force which will ultimately make for international disarmament and bring about everlasting peace throughout the world.
[Applause.] It will demonstrate the uselessness of nations continuing to waste countless millions of dollars on war ships that can be blown up with dynamite thrown from an aeroplane. And there is nothing more fitting than the idea that universal peace shall be brought about by the aeroplane, the only mechanical bird that civilization knows anything about.

You will recall from reading the book of Genesis that at the time of the flood, when the water began to recede and when the elements were found to be no longer battling with each other, a little bird brought back a piece of vegetation as the first indication that the waters were falling. the dove, and it ever since has been denominated as the bird of peace. And I believe now that the aeroplane, the mechanical bird of the air, will be in fact and in truth the great instrument for bringing about everlasting international peace. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close in three minutes on this amendment.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. The CHAIRMAN. Moon] moves that all debate on this amendment close in three minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to. Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentlemen of the committee to the fact that in the Army appropriation bill, which you have already passed, you have voted for $75,000 to be given for experimentation, for exactly the same thing as this, except that the experimentation may be in other hands. The Senate has already, in its consideration of that bill, raised that amount to $100,000. Why should we have experiments in aviation for the Post Office and for the Army? If they once learn to carry any considerable weight in the air, the aeroplane can be used by the Post Office just as well as by the Army. The experiments made by the Army will probably be the best experiments that can be made. I wish to call attention to the fact, because it has not been mentioned before in this debate, that we have already committed ourselves to $75,000, and that ought to be enough.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that the appropriation for the current year is $125,000.

Mr. EVANS. I know that, too; and that only makes my point

Mr. MANN. So we have not committed ourselves on the subject yet.

Mr. EVANS. Yes, we have.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP].

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr.

SHARP) there were-ayes 25, noes 43.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 25, on page 16, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to ask unanimous con-Consent was given to pass that item. The Clerk will read the paragraph, as it was not read before.

The Clerk read as follows:

inland transportation by steamboat or other power-boat routes, $850,000

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That in the discretion of the Postmaster General the pay of the carrier on the water route on Lake Winnepesaukee, who furnishes his own power bont for mail service during the summer months, may be fixed at an amount not exceeding the maximum salary allowed rural carriers by law for any one calendar year.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that is the section that has been carried heretofore in the bill, which was inadthe best rural mail route in the United States, as I am advised by the department, and it is desired, of course, that the man who carries that mail shall have the compensation provided by law.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that that language ought not to read "provided further."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There is another provise above. Mr. MANN. That does not relate to this paragraph at all. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is offered to the paragraph beginning on line 24.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I believe the gentleman is right about that

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Clerk will strike out the word "further," so that it will simply read "provided."

There was no objection.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back-

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary. The committee has already given the gentleman consent to return.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; for that also.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well. I am glad to know we have consent to return to line 15, on page 16, in order that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] may offer an amend-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman. I think possibly there was a misunderstanding about the paragraph, lines 17 to 23. I think the gentleman did not desire to have that passed over, although it was passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. It was passed over.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If it was passed over, I will ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. As soon as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] offers his amendment the paragraph will be read. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 15, on page 16, insert the following:

"That section 223 of the postal laws and regulations be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

""Provided, however, That this provision shall not apply to the city of Cambridge, Mass., or to Towson, Md., or to Clayton, St. Louis County, Mo."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amend-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has not got the amendment in the form that he wants it. The amendment, as I understand, only covers the proviso or paragraph 2 of section 233. Does not the amendment provide that section 233 shall be "amended to read as follows"?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment if there be no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Ought not the amendment to read that the proviso shall not apply?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this is to convert the independent post office at Clayton, Mo., into a station of the St. Louis post office. Clayton is within 2½ miles of St. Louis. All other suburban towns have been converted into stations, but this can not be made a station because of the postal regulations which require that all county seats shall have an independent post office. It might be argued that a station is a post office, but the department has not yet taken that view of the matter, and consequently it is necessary to add to the two exemptions already existing this one more of Clayton, Mo. That is all there is in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 3175. An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, fuel, electric power, and incidental expenses pertaining to the maintenance of a subworkshop for the repair of mail equipment at Chicago, Ill., $2,400.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Is the gentleman satisfied that the reduction from $3,000 to $2,400 will leave this subworkshop in Chicago properly equipped?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think so, because there was an unexpended balance last year.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment,

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $47,646,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a separate paragraph, after line 15, page 18, the following: "That section 3 of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, approved March 1, 1890, is hereby repealed."

Mr. MANN and Mr. MOON of Tennessee reserved points of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will just agreed to, but I think not for the one I am about to make. Not make the point of order on this amendment. It is subject to a point of order. The proposition involved relates to the payment which the Government makes to the St. Louis Terminal Association for the carriage of the mail across the Eads Bridge at St. Louis. If there ever appeared for consideration in this or any other legislative body a piece of legalized graft, this item of expenditure is it.

In 1899 this Government gave to the St. Louis Terminal Association by law an annual grant of $50,000 to transport the mail across the Eads Bridge at St. Louis. The reason assigned for giving so large a sum was that the Eads Bridge was a distinctive bridge, the last word in bridge construction; that it was the only bridge across the Mississippi River at that point.

In no other part of the country, in the case of no other bridge, is any extra compensation given for the carriage of the mails. This has persisted in the law. For the last six or seven years I have made attempts to get it out of the law. Once we got it into the appropriation bill, but it went out on a point of order made by Mr. Coudrey, then a Member of Congress from St.

Here is the graft in the proposition: In the old days when the Eads Bridge was the only bridge across the Mississippi River the sum might have been defensible, but since the completion of the Eads Bridge and the passage of this law by Congress other bridges have been constructed across the Mississippi River, the Merchants Bridge among them. To-day more mail, twice over, goes across the Merchants Bridge into St. Louis than across the Eads Bridge. We pay for the carriage of the mail across the Merchants Bridge by the regular system of the mail across the Merchants Bridge by the regular system of payment for mail carriage; that is, by multiplying weight by distance. That is, we pay $16,000 to $20,000 a year for the carriage of mail across the Merchants Bridge, twice the amount of mail which goes across the Eads Bridge, and yet we pay for the carriage of mail across the Eads Bridge $50,000.

If you will permit this law to be repealed, then we will pay for the carriage of the mail across the Eads Bridge at St. Louis on the ordinary system of multiplying weight by distance, to the railroad crossing the bridge, $7,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MURDOCK. I ask for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. In other words, in these latter years and since the construction of the Merchants Bridge we are overpaying for the carriage of the mails across this one bridgeand it is the only instance in the United States-something like $43,000 a year. If we can now repeal this law we will save that sum of money.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to introduce a separate bill to repeal this law instead of putting it on an appropriation bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is not at all necessary; this committee has jurisdiction of the subject and this committee can go on and act. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that it may have been possible in bygone days to defend this item, but now it is indefensible.

Mr. DYER. I want the gentleman from Kansas to understand that I am not opposing his amendment and I am not defending it, but I would like some information which is not obtainable just now when he is attempting to put it in an appropriation bill. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, within the last two years, in my recollection, the Second Assistant Postmaster General appeared before our committee and himself said that he could see no reason why this law should not be repealed, and I appeal to the House and all the Members thereof not to make this point of order.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman got the wording of the section there which it is proposed to repeal?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes. Shall I read it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to pay from the appropriations for transportation by railroad routes for the special transfer and terminal service between the Union Station at East St. Louis, III., and the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting, and heating of mail building and transfer service at St. Louis, at the rate of not exceeding $50,000 per annum, beginning the 1st day of July, 1899.

Mr. MANN. That does not specify Eads Bridge.
Mr. MURDOCK. The money goes for the carriage of the mail across the Eads Bridge under this proposition.

Mr. MANN. It is left within the discretion of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have always so contended; but the department has said in the hearings that the law would have to be repealed to stop the expenditure.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to repealing the law.

Mr. NYE. It is discretionary with the Postmaster General, I do not see why he has not done it.

Mr. DYER, Has not the department power to do what the gentleman wants us to do?

Mr. MURDOCK. Apparently not, because I believe if the department had it would do it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What is the difference to the Government, so far as cost is concerned, in the repeal of this law?

Mr. MADDEN. Forty-three thousand dollars. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will tell the gentleman how I arrive at that sum. The mail is now carried into St. Louis from the East, so far as the regular railroad bridges are concerned, over the Merchants Bridge and the Eads Bridge. The pay for the carriage of the mails over the Merchants Bridge is under the regular system of multiplying distance into weight, and amounts to something like $16,000 a year. If the mail carried over the Eads Bridge now should be paid for on the same computation, multiplying distance into weight, we would pay for the transportation over the Eads Bridge about $7,000 a year as against $50,000 that we are in fact paying, and the difference between $7,000 and $50,000 is $43,000.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "dollars," line 15, page 18: "Provided, That no portion thereof shall be paid for carrying mail over the bridge across the Mississippl River at St. Louis, Mo., over and above the regular rates for the transportation of the mail."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, on that I ask for a vote. Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he make that read "provided no part of this appropriation," and so forth.

It is six of one and half a dozen of the other.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the change, in order to make my amendment formal.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 15, page 18, insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis. Mo., over and above the regular rates for the transportation of the mail."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, ought not the amendment to be more specific than that?

Mr. MURDOCK. I think that would cover every bridge.

Mr. MANN. It says "over and above the regular rates for the transportation of the mail." I suppose the gentleman means the rates paid to railroads.

Mr. MURDOCK. The railroad routes.

Mr. MANN. It may be sufficient. Of course there are various rates for transporting the mail.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment can be made more specific, I will say, by simply adding the words "by railroad routes" to what I have offered, and I ask unanimous consent to so perfect the amendment in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to add the words "by railroad routes" to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. At what point in the amendment?
Mr. MURDOCK. At the end of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amend-

The Clerk rend as follows:

After line 15, page 18, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., over and above the regular rate for the transportation of the mail by railroad routes."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman wants to pay to this bridge company a proportionate amount for carrying mail over the bridge?

As a matter of fact, I desire to say to the Mr. MURDOCK. gentleman from Illinois I want the carriage of the mail on the Eads Bridge paid for as it is paid for by the Government in the case of mail carried across the Merchants Bridge; that is, paid to the railroads which carry it.

Mr. MANN. I think that covers the purpose that the gentleman desires.

Mr. MURDOCK. And not to pay it to the bridge company. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the period after the word "dollars," in line 15, page 18, and insert a colon in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 15, strike out the period after the word "dollars" and insert a colon in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose the amendment, but I may say it never has been considered necessary to make an amendment of that kind. It is the duty of the engrossing clerk to properly punctuate the bill when amendments are offered.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, that may have been the custom in this House, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has repeatedly offered such amendments on the floor of this House when amendments have been made to a bill.

Well, I beg my colleague's pardon.

Mr. FOWLER. Whether the gentleman desires to be technical on my amendment I do not know, but I want to say to him and to this committee it has been the custom in my short stay here that wherever there is an amendment destroying the punctuation it is in order to offer an amendment correcting the punctuation to give it the right intelligence. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is undoubtedly in I have never offered such an amendment during my service in the House, and never expect to do it, because an engrossing clerk who knows enough to write would know enough to make the correction, and that is his duty, that is part of the engrossment of the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "dollars," in line 15, page 18:

"Provided, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, for transportation of mails on railroad routes by reducing the compensation to all railroad companies for the transportation of mails 10 per cent per annum from the rates fixed and allowed by the first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, for the transportation of mails on the basis of the average weight, and amended by an act of July 12, 1876, and by an act of June 17, 1878, and an act of March 2, 1907."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I understood from the reading of the-section it is not a limitation on an approprintion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee that the amendment reduces the expenses of carrying the mails.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Under the Holman rule?

The CHAIRMAN. And under the Holman rule the Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Holman rule does not provide that an amendment shall be in order because it reduces expenditures unless it is reported from the committee. The Holman rule provides that an amendment may be offered on the floor by a member of the committee retrenching expenditures. How?

reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

Or-

By the reduction of the compensation of any persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

By the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Now, this would not come within any of those three cases. There is a further provision that upon a report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter of an amendment, the amendment being germane to the subject matter retrenching expenditures, it shall be in order.

But this amendment is neither one. Under the Holman rule, whatever the merits of the amendment may be, it is desirable in construing the Holman rule to have uniformity of constructlon, and up to this time every Chairman, I think, has ruled the same way in reference to the matter. I do not understand that this amendment is offered in behalf of any committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois as to this section of the rule which provides for the reduction of compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, whether the railroads are not contemplated by law as persons?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so. That relates to salaries of any individuals and not to any money paid under contract to any person. If the Chair is to hold that you are going to make a thing in order because it reduces the amount which may be paid under contract in the future, that is one thing, but this is a direction to the Postmaster General to readjust the compensation, with no claim whatever that this would affect any existing compensation of any existing contract, the law providing that this compensation is fixed by contract. Now, if the ruling should be that you effect the payment of money by contract, under this, of course, there is no limitation whatever under the rule. I take it that the rule provided a reduction of the number of salaries of officers or the reduction of compensation paid to persons who draw compensation from the Government. This is done by contract under the law. This amendment does not propose to change that,

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer, if enacted into law, will reduce the pay to the railroad companies for carrying mail matter 10 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any information upon which he bases his conclusions with respect to the justice of the proposed reduction of 10 per cent?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will say to the gentleman I do not believe there could be any doubt in the mind of anybody but that there is justice and merit in this proposition. As the gentleman knows, the Government is now paying on an average of 4 cents per pound on mail matter carried by the railroads for the Government, and the express companies pay less than 1 cent a pound, and there could be no justice in this Government paying more than four or five times the amount paid by the express companies

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a minute.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.
Mr. MURDOCK. He was asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] what basis he had for a cut of this kind.

nois [Mr. MADDEN] What basis he had for a cut of the first the gentleman's cut will be 10 per cent.

Mr. HAUGEN. On $47,000,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. That would be $4,700,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say this to the gentleman from Iowa on this amendment: That the Postmaster General has communicated to Congress within the last four months a proposition to pay the railroads on the car-foot mile, to pay them first for the absolute cost of the carriage of the mail, with a compensa-tion of 6 per cent thereafter; and the Postmaster General in his report says that this would make a saving of between three and four million dollars, virtually the same sum that the gentleman from Iowa expects to save in the other way.

Yes; practically the same amount.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; practically the same amount.
Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman is certainly mistaken in his statement as to paying 4 cents per pound; it is less than 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. HAUGEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; that is the rate per pound, including equipment. If he will take the report of the Postmaster General, and the statement of the former chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks], he will find the net weight of mail matter to be 1,300,000,000 pounds, and that 200,000,000 pounds of that is not carried by the railroads, leaving 1,100,000,000 pounds carried by the railroad companies. He will also find that the railroads are paid about $50,000,000 for carrying the 1,100,000,000 pounds, which equals more than 4 cents a pound. The present rate per pound weight was first fixed by the act of March 3, 1873. This was reduced 10 per cent by the act of July 12, 1876, and 5 per cent more by the act of June 17, 1878, and 5 per cent more by the act of March 2, 1907. First, the pay is based solely on the average weight of the mail carried daily the whole length of the route, but when a full railway post-office car is added to the train the Post Office Department pays to the railroad a rental for the entire car based upon its length, or an average of $5,427.62 a car. The cars cost about $5,500 or $6,000 each, and are maintained and repaired at an annual cost of about $1,200. They are built and owned by the railroad companies and rented to the Post Office Department. The pay for a line of these cars is $25 a mile for 40-foot cars, $27.50 for 45-foot cars, $32.50 for 50-foot cars, and $40 for 55 or 60 foot cars.

I will include in my remarks a schedule of rates of railwaymail transportation, which covers the present and recent laws on that subject.

Land-grant roads receive 80 per cent of rate.

This bill carries an appropriation of $47,646,000 for transportation of mails on railroads, and $4,707,000 for railway post-office car service, or a total of $52,353,000. The Postmaster General states, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, that the expenditures for that year for transportation of mails on railroads was $44,654,515.97, and $4,686,122.27 for railway post-office car service, or a total of $49,340,638.24. This Government pays the railroads practically $50,000,000 a year for carrying the mail. If we have the amount paid and the number of pounds carried it is an easy matter to determine the average rate per pound. Up to recently Congress had no data on which to definitely fix the rate. Up to a few years ago there was no way to ascertain the number of pounds of mail matter carried, and only estimates could be made, and not knowing the number of pounds carried there was no way of determining the amount paid per pound for carrying the mails or average cost of handling mail matter; but, fortunately, now we have reliable information and can ascertain with some degree of accuracy the average cost for not only carrying but the average cost for handling all mail matter. In compliance with the direction of the provisions of the act of March 2, 1907, in the Post Office appropriation bill, all mail matter and equipments used in connection therewith and empty equipments dispatched were weighed for the period from July 1 to December 31, 1907, and which is reported in Table B to be: Total weight of mail matter, 618,130,722.15 pounds; equipment carried in connection therewith, 414,073,490.9 pounds; empty equipment dispatched, 53,848,134.1 pounds; total weight of domestic mail and equipments, 1,086,052,348.2 pounds for six months. If you multiply it by two you have—total mail matter, 1,236,261,444.3 pounds; total equipments, 935,843,250.6 pounds; or a total of 2,172,104,696.4 pounds. These figures, of course, are necessarily estimates, because the mail carried in the first six months of the year varies from the amount carried in the last six months. Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in 1910 the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. Weeks] furnished the House with this information-see Congressional RECORD, February 24, page 2848. The department estimates the net weight of the mails for 1908 as follows:

STATE OF THE PARTY	Pounds.
First class	167, 502, 610
Second class	785, 833, 110
Third class	. 179, 694, 654

_____ 1, 300, 358, 284 It is estimated that 200,000,000 pounds of mail matter is not carried by railroads, as, for instance, such as sent out on rural free delivery, star routes, and local delivery, direct from the post office where received. Much of the city mail is local and much of the foreign mail matter is sent direct from post offices with ports receiving the mail, as, for instance, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and a number of other ports; and it is generally agreed that 200,000,000 pounds of mail matter is not carried by the railroads. If you deduct the 200,000,000 from 1,300,000,000, it leaves about 1,100,000,000 pounds which is carried by the railroads. If so, and if they are paid \$50,000,000, the rate paid is more than $4\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, but we will be liberal and grant that railroads carry one and one-fourth billion pounds. The appropriation for 1911 for transportation by railroads and railway post-office cars was \$50,574,000; that amount equals more than 4 cents a pound, but it is claimed that in determining the average rate paid railway companies the weight of equipments should be included. By doing so, the rate paid railway companies would be less and about the amount stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD]; but that can not be done, as the Government gets paid for mail matter only, and in dealing with the actual or average cost of carrying mail matter the deduction in weight can not be made. With the information furnished by the department, the chairman of the committee, and other information at hand, I take it that all will agree that the Government pays on an average at least 4 cents a pound. Having ascertained the amount paid for carrying mail, the next question to determine is whether the rate paid is reasonable or not. That can not be ascertained by comparing our rate with that paid in other countries because conditions are different. Our country is sparsely settled; we have a vast area, and a long haul as compared with foreign countries with small area densely populated, which, of course, makes the haul much shorter. Besides, here labor is paid more than in many of the foreign countries and the service differs in many respects. These and a number of other things would have to be taken into consideration in making comparisons with the rates paid in other countries.

I will insert in my remarks a communication from the Department of Commerce and Labor, which gives the countries owning and operating railroads:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, February 4, 1911.

Washington, February 4, 1911.

Sin: In compliance with your recent request for information showing the mileage of railroads in leading countries owned and operated by private companies and by the Governments, respectively, I have the honor to inclose herewith a table, copied in the Bureau of Statistics from the thirty-fifth number of the British Statistical Abstract for Foreign Countries, giving these data for the end of the calendar year 1907.

The more important changes in the respective mileage figures since 1907 are due to recent action of several European Governments in extending the mileage of the State owned and operated lines. Thus the Italian Government a few years ago took over the operation of all important national lines, which until then had been leased to three large companies. The extent of the lines operated by the Italian Government on June 30, 1909, was 8,780 miles. On January 1, 1908, the Austrian Government took over some lines owned and operated by private companies. As a result, at the end of the year the mileage of lines operated by the Government, including lines owned and operated as well as lines merely operated by the Government, was 11,105 miles out of a total railroad mileage in Austria on that date of 13,613 miles. Finally, the French Government owns and operates at present, in addition to the 1,758 miles of the so-called "old system" given in the inclosed statement, 3,700 miles, represented by the former French Western Railroad.

On the American Continent the most important change is due to the inclosed statement, 6,700 library per library to the most important change is due to the catton of the Mexican Government, taken in the beginning of 1909, in amalgamating the two principal railway systems of the country, the Central and National Railways, into the Ferrocarilles Nacionales de Mexico, and in taking over one-half of the $230,000,000 worth of shares issued after the amalgamation. The operation of the railroads affected remains, however, in the hands of the companies.

Hoping that the inclosed information may prove of service to you, I am.

BENJ. S. CABLE, Acting Secretary. Respectfully. Hon. Gilbert N. Haugen, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

But we have the express companies, and I believe it fair to compare the rate paid by the Government with that which the express companies pay the railroads for similar service, and if you will look over the Interstate Commerce Commission's first annual report of the statistics of express companies in the United States for the year ending June 30, 1909, you will find that the average revenue received per piece was $0.5049, the average revenue paid per pound was $0.0154, the total revenue was $35,856,551.56 for handling in the aggregate 2,329,342,192 pounds of express in three months, as for April, August, and December, 1909, the months selected by the commission as being representations of the traffic movement throughout the year. The number of pounds transported in three months by express companies is about twice the amount of mail matter carried in a year by the railroads. The revenue of express companies is a little more than 1½ cents per pound, as compared with 4 cents paid per pound by the Government for carrying mail matter. The Government then pays the railroads for carrying mail matter, per pound, nearly three times the amount charged the public by express companies, and about six times the amount the express companies pay railroads for carrying express. To corroborate this statement, I quote from the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission of December 21, 1910 (p. 27):

The statistical information contained in this report covers the operations of 13 companies. The names of these companies, as also the mileage over which each operates, are as follows:

The character of the business transacted by the express companies is indicated by the following statement, which shows for the months of April, August, and December, 1909, the number of pieces carried, their aggregate weight, the average weight per piece, the total revenue, the average revenue per piece, and the average revenue per pound. The expense incident to the compilation of the information by the express companies deterred the commission from requiring such a compilation for all the months of the year, but the combined results for the months selected may be accepted as typical of the business for the year.

Note.—Differences between items in the foregoing summary and corresponding items in Summary No. 3, on page 18, are due to the fact that this statement presents combined returns from the 11 companies only from which complete reports both of revenues and expenses and of tonnage were received.

In making the comparison the distance of the haul of the express and the mails should, of course, be taken into consideration. There seems to be no data on which to base the estimate with any certainty, as that matter has not been thoroughly investigated either by the department or the commis-However, we have the reports of the department and numerous other estimates. The department's report, based on numerous other estimates. The department's report, based on one month's weighing in 1907, estimates the average haul of first class, 507 miles; second class, 602 miles; third class, 672 miles; fourth class, 687 miles; sample copies, 873 miles; transient, 698 miles; franked, 750 miles; penalty, 782 miles; and the average, 620 miles. I am informed by the Interstate Commerce Commission that it, in analyzing the reports from 200 cities of populations of 25,000 or over, estimates the average haul of the Adams Express Co., moving 151 per cent of the entire number of pieces moved on August 18, 1909, at 249 miles; and the United States Express Co., moving 14½ per cent of the entire number of pieces for December 22, 1909, at 188 miles. This would indicate that the haul of the mails is longer than the average haul of express; but they are estimates in the one case for one month only and in the other for one day only; and, as before stated, we have no data on which to base any estimates with any degree of accuracy; but even if these esti-mates are correct, the average haul of the mails is less than twice that of express, and even if that were the case there would be no justice in this Government paying five or six times the rate paid by express companies.

But you say that this is not a fair comparison; that the parcels handled by the Post Office Department are less in weight and much greater in number than those handled by the express companies, and that they require more space in cars and help in sorting and handling, and therefore the Government should pay more per pound for carrying mail matter than express companies should pay for carrying express. That may be as to the first, but not the last.

The railroads have nothing to do with sorting, loading, or unloading mail matter. Mail matter is handed to them in lots varying from a single letter to trainload lots, the bulk of it in carload lots. We have solid trains carrying nothing but mail going through Washington every day. Railroads simply carry it and the Government sorts and looks after it while in and the Government pays annually about $20,000,000 for Railway Mail Service or for sorting the mails when in transit. Besides it pays nearly $2,000,000 for transportation of mails in screen wagons, and about one and one-half million dollars for mail-messenger service and over $800,000 for pneumatic-tube service. On the one hand, the Government pays all expenses for sorting, receiving, and delivering all mail matter, except at certain points where the railroads do receive and deliver the mail at the post offices. On the other hand, the express companies carry all sorts of parcels from the domicile in the cities to the station, thence by rail, sort and deliver at the terminal city. For the Government, the railroads perform part of the service of transporting the mail and receive nearly three times the pay per pound that the express companies do for rendering the total service, which includes collecting, sorting, carrying, delivering, and everything incidental to the service, and it seems to me that if the express companies can give the service at about one-third the rate paid by the Government for part of the service, and still make millions of dollars annually, the rate paid the railroads by the Government must be excessive. Why these differences and why these excessive rates? To begin with, the Government gets paid for mail matter only. Express companies get paid for actual weight of packages handled only, and equipments are furnished by both the Government and express company. Compare the contracts made by the Government with the railroad companies and those made by express companies, and you will find that while the Government gets paid for the actual weight of mail matter only, it enters into an agreement with the railroad to pay rent for cars and for carrying all equipments. On the other hand, the express companies pay a commission or tonnage on actual weight of packages handled; the rate paid generally is 50 per cent in excess of the freight rate.

The railroad companies are required to furnish the express companies with special or exclusive express trains when warranted by the volume of express traffic. The railroad companies furnish the necessary cars, keep them in good repair, furnish heat and light, and carry the messengers of the express company, as well as the safes, packing trunks, and all necessary equipment; horses, wagons, and supplies required by express companies may be transported in express cars or shipped by freight. Railroad companies furnish such room in all its depots, stations, and buildings as may be necessary for the loading and unloading, transferring, and storage of express matter provided the furnishing of such facilities shall not interfere with the business of the railway company. The railroad companies further agree to transmit free of charge the messages to express companies over telegraph lines which the railroad operates along its lines of roads, so far as it may be permitted to do so under its contract with telegraph companies. With all this extra service, the express companies pay less than one-sixth the rate which this Government pays for part of the

Will anyone contend that the rate paid by the Government is a just and reasonable one? With these facts before us, I can not believe that. If not a reasonable one, will Congress tolerate the injustice and permit the drain on the Public Treasury to continue? It has been proposed that the Government should take over the express companies' business and their contracts; that the Government should handle all express as well as all mail matter; that the two could be owned and operated by the Government to the advantage of the people; that with the unreasonable charges made for handling express, the millions of errors or overcharges reported to have been made by the express companies.

As to the number of overcharges, I might add that upon inquiry I was told by the Interstate Commerce Commission that upon their investigation of one day's business of two companies the commission found, in the case of the Adams Express Co., 3,200 overcharges, ranging from 5 cents up, aggregating $287 offset by undercharges aggregating $260; and with the United States Express Co., 3,800 overcharges, aggregating $471, offset by 2,400 undercharges, aggregating $274. The total errors made by the two companies were over 10,000 in one single day. What the total number of all the companies in all these years are no one can tell, but it is safe to say that they run up into the millions and that the overcharges in the aggregate amount to millions of dollars. In view of these numerous errors, and generally in favor of the express companies, the millions of dollars overcharged, with existing conditions, it is contended that Congress would be justified in taking over the express business. In my opinion the express business rightfully belongs to the railroads proper and the Government postal business. And, furthermore, I believe that neither the people nor the stockholders of the railroads are being justly treated by the owners and operators of the express companies. As we know, in railroads, like many other large companies, the management or those in control organize subcompanies for the purpose of robbing the stockholders of the railroads which they control of part of their profit, as, for instance, in the Beef Trust subcompanies are organized, and a few of those in control of the trust own and control the stock of the subcompanies. With the Beef Trust the by-products are sold to the subcompanies at low prices, thus robbing their stockholders or the trust of part of the profit, and for their own special benefit. So with the railroads. Those in power and control of the railroads proceed to organize a subcompany; they call it an express company; they elect themselves to office. The express companies, then, are merely subcompanies of the railroads, and the officers or directors are generally a self-perpetuating body. I quote from the Interstate Commerce Commission's report. Referring to the United States Express Co., it says

The directors of this company are a self-perpetuating body, although it is provided in the articles of association and agreement that when shareholders owning two-thirds in amount of the shares of the company shall request it in writing a meeting of shareholders for the election of directors shall be held. No such meeting has been held since 1862. The articles of the association of agreement read in part as follows:

But it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that no director herein named and that may hereafter be elected shall be concerned or interested in any business or thing detrimental to the interest of said company or in opposition thereto.

Among the directors of the United States Express Co. is Mr. Stetson, general counsel for the Northern Pacific Railway and Southern Railway; also director of the Chicago-Erie Railroad and Erie Railroad. Mr. Weir, director, is chairman of the board of managers of the Adams Express Co. and director in a number of railway companies.

SOUTHERN EXPRESS CO.

One of the directors of the company is M. F. Plant, who is also a director of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway, and in the Peninsula & Occidental Steamship Co. The number of stockholders is 30 cidental Steamship Co. The number of stockholders is 30.

In the Wells, Fargo Co., by referring to the names of the directors, it will be found that the Eric Railroad and the Harriman lines are strongly represented on the board of directors. The directors of the company on June 30, 1909, were Dudly Evans, F. D. Underwood, E. H. Harriman, J. J. McCook, W. V. S. Thorne, A. K. Van Deventer, William Mahl, F. V. S. Crosby, and H. W. De Forest, all of New York; and H. E. Huntington, George E. Gray, and W. F. Herrin, all of San Francisco, Cal.; and J. Kruttschnitt, of Chicago, Ill. Of these, Mr. Underwood was the president of the Eric Railroad and president or director of S0 or more railway and industrial companies; Mr. Harriman then headed the Harriman system of railways; J. J. McCook was of the firm of Alexander & Green, attorneys, and was director in certain insurance and banking concerns; Messrs Kruttschnitt, Thorne, Van Deventer, Herrin, Mahl, and Crosby were officers of the Harriman lines, while Mr. De Forest was a director of the Southern Pacific Co. Mr. Kruttschnitt was also a director of the Pacific Express Co.

The Western Express Co. has six stockholders. The board of directors June 30 was composed of the following: E. Pennington, W. L. Martin, C. W. Gardner, and H. B. Dike, all of Minneapolis, Minn., and W. F. Fitch, of Marquette, Mich. Of these, Messrs. Pennington, Martin, Dike, and Gardner were officers of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway and Mr. Fitch was president of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Railway.

Atlantic Railway.

In the Pacific Express Co. the number of stockholders is given as 12. On June 30, 1909, the company was controlled through stock ownership by the Missourl Pacific Railway (40 per cent), Union Pacific Railroad (40 per cent), and Wabash Railroad (20 per cent). The directors of this company on June 30, 1909, were James Eggleston, C. S. Clarke, S. B. Schuyler, and E. B. Prior, of St. Louis, Mo.; F. A. Delano and J. Kruttschnitt, of Chicago, Ill.; and Erastus Young, of Omaha, Nebr. Of these, Mr. Clarke and Mr. Schuyler were officers of the Missourl Pacific Railway, Mr. Prior and Mr. Delano of the Wabash Railroad, Mr. Young of the Union Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Co. and director of Wells, Fargo & Co.

In the Northern Express Co. the total number of stockholders is given as six, and the directors are Howard Elliott, J. M. Hannaford, and C. W. Bunn, all of St. Paul, Minn.; and J. N. Hill and George H. Earl, both of New York, N. Y., all of whom were officers of the Northern Pacific Hailway.

In the National Express Co. the number of shareholders is eight. The directors are Johnston Livingston, Lewis Cass Ledyard, James C. Fargo, Francis F. Flagg, and William C. Fargo, all of New York, N. Y. The first four named are also directors of the American Express Co.

In the Great Northern Express Co. the total number of stock-holders is six. This company is controlled by the Lake Superior Co. (Ltd.) through stock ownership. The directors are R. I. Farrington, Louis W. Hill, E. Sawyer, J. M. Gruber, and W. W. Broughton, all of St. Paul, Minn., and all officers of the Great Northern Railway.

In the American Express Co., among its directors are two directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and $3,000,000 of its shares are owned by the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad. James C. Fargo, one of its directors, is also director of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway and the National Express, president and director of the Westcott Express Co. Ledyard, one of its directors, is a director of the Hartford Railroad and Northern Pacific Railroad. Mr. Pratt, one of its directors, is treasurer and director of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jesey and director of the Long Island Railroad and New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

ADAMS EXPRESS CO.

The managers of this company (who acted as directors) as of June 30, 1909, were Levi C. Weir, William M. Barrett, Charles Steele, Basil W. Rowe, Dumont Clarke, and George F. Baker, all of New York, and William H. Damsel, of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Weir was a director of the Des Moines & Fort Dodge Railroad, Iowa Central & Western Railway, Iowa Central Railway, Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, Norfolk & Western Railway, United States Express Co., and also in various steamship, banking, insurance, and land companies.

Mr. Steele was of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and was a director in a number of railway lines, among them the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, Erie Railroad, Lehigh Valley Railroad, Northern Pacific Railway, and Southern Railway; and also in various other railway and industrial corporations.

Mr. Rowe was a director in the subsidiary companies of the Adams Express Co. and of the Standard Trust Co.

Mr. Clarke was a member of the board of managers of the Delaware & Hudson Co. and director of the Long Island Railroad, of the Manhattan Railway, and of certain industrial, financial, and insurance companies.

Mr. Baker was a director in the Central Railroad of New Jersey, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, Colorado & Southern Railway, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, Erie Railroad, Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, Lehigh Valley Railroad, Michigan Central Railroad, New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, Northern Pacific Railway, and Pere Marquette Railroad, and also in numerous banking, trust, and industrial companies.

It will be observed that four of the seven managers (directors) were interested in the management of railway lines.

This, I believe, is sufficient to show that the express companies are owned, officered, controlled, and managed by the very men who control and manage the railroads; that the express companies are simply subcompanies and a part of the railroads.

And as all the stockholders of the railroads do not share in the profits on tonnage thus transported, therefore the express business does not rightfully belong to those who now own and control the express. In justice to the stockholders of the railroads, the express business should be done by the railroads proper, or at least the heavy end of it, which might be carried under the head of fast freight, and all small packages of light weight might be carried as express by the Government, and in conjunction with the postal business, if not practicable for fall-roads to carry same as fast freight.

Another thing. The House has adopted a rule making parcelpost legislation in order as an amendment to this bill. be clear to everybody that with present rates paid railroads for carrying mail matter and the rate paid railroads for carrying express by express companies, that the Government can not compete with the express companies, and that a parcel post that would be of any benefit can not be made self-supporting, and if any parcel post is to be provided for, the rate paid for carrying the mail matter and parcels must be made as low as that paid by the express companies before a beneficial and selfsupporting parcel post can be had. Even then I fear that the Government can not compete, as its expense for collecting, delivering, and handling parcels outside of railroad transportation would be much more than that of private concerns, where economy is practiced and where better business methods are employed. Judging from the Government's past experience in its business undertakings, such as the Printing Office and the postal business, I believe that the Government will never be able to compete with private enterprises, and I fear that a self-supporting and beneficial parcel post can not be had under our form of Government; in fact, I am sure that it can not be had until the pay for carrying parcels by railroads is reduced, and possibly not until the whole postal system is reorganized and readjusted, with improved and better business methods. If it is not possible to now reduce these rates to the extent of 10 per cent, then I submit that we have no right to look for any reduction in the cost of any of the service in the department, because this is the most unjust and unreasonable of all the items in the bill, and if there is to be no reduction in the cost or rendjustment of the postal system, then it goes without saying that there is no possibility for a self-supporting and beneficial parcel post. But it is not my intention to go into a general discussion of this question at this time, and all that I wish to say on this subject at this time is that thousands have written and petitioned Congress, some for and some against

In reply to the many inquiries coming to me, I have said that it is an important question and it should be given most careful and thoughtful consideration, in order that it may be disposed of intelligently and wisely. While there are divers opinions on this all-important question, I believe all are practically agreed that if a parcel post is established it should be made self-supporting, or nearly so, and beneficial to the patrons thereof; that the service should be had at a reasonable rate and at the same time stand on its own legs and be carried on without a heavy drain on the Public Treasury, or without any considerable expense to the public. In other words, it should not be made to rob Peter to pay Paul. All kinds of bills have been introduced, few, if any, of which would put the business on a self-supporting basis, while many of them would if enacted into law drain the Public Treasury of millions of dollars every month. Millions of people are honest and earnest in their desire for parcel post, and properly so; but, evidently, outside of that there are also certain powerful interests who evidently for selfish purposes are putting forth every effort possible in support of parcel post, no matter how unreasonable nor what the cost to the Government might be. Heading this group of interests are, undoubtedly, the railroads, who would be the ones to reap the most benefit, no matter which of the several bills now offered might become law. Misrepresentations and misstatements have been sent out from the headquarters of certain promoters of parcel post and scattered broadcast over the country, evidently for the purpose of misleading the people and prejudicing them against Members of Congress by questioning the integrity of those Members who, conscious of their solemn oath of office, are honestly endeavoring to dispose of the matter to the best interests of all concerned and who, therefore, must necessarily take Issue with attorneys and lobbyists generally believed to be in the employ of the railroads and working for their selfish interest. One impression they seek to create, for instance, is that the Members are opposed to parcel post because of the influence of the express companies, overlooking the fact that the express companies are owned and generally officered by officials of the railroads and that the establishment of parcel post under present contracts would increase the pay to the railroads for carrying parcels transferred from express to parcel post five times over. As stated, the Interstate Commerce Commission's report shows that express companies receive, on an average. $1.54 per hundred for handling express, and of that amount the railroads receive about 45 per cent. The Postmaster General's report shows that the Government pays more than 4 cents per pound for all mail matter carried by the railroads. The same rate would, of course, apply to parcel post. The average cost, including all expenses for handling mail matter, is about 17 cents per pound. These are facts based on official reports. The average cost to the Government for handling parcel post is estimated from 8 to 15 cents per pound. If these facts and estimates are correct, the railroads would gain more than $3,000,000 for every $1,000,000 of business transferred from express to parcel post. If parcel-post service will cost the Government, as estimated, from 8 to 15 cents per pound, it goes without saying that any self-supporting parcel post will not benefit any patron of that service, because the average rate is several times higher than the average rate charged by express companies, who thus have nothing to fear from Government competition.

The appropriation bill reported out by the House committee provides for a parcel post at 12 cents per pound. It is estimated that the rate proposed will make the service self-supporting, but as that rate is several times higher than the average rate charged by the express companies it will not, of course, benefit the general public. But the bill also provides for a commission to investigate and report as to the feasibility and probable cost of parcel post, and as that information is much desired and needed to determine the general character of desirable legislation it will be of value, and, in my opinion, the information should be had before the question can be intelligently and wisely disposed of.

The fact that the express companies are only a part of the railroad companies or a subcompany owned and operated by the managers or those who control the railroads, it also goes without saying that they would be for the scheme that will bring the largest revenue to them and those they represent, and as parcel post would mean a $4 rate instead of a 75-cent rate paid by express, naturally they are for the parcel post, and that, I take it, accounts for their activity in its favor.

References have often been made to statements purported to have been made by William C. Thorne, general manager for Montgomery, Ward & Co., before the committee, stating that the postal rate of 1 cent per ounce, or 16 cents per pound, is four times the average $4 express rate and twelve times the average $1.25 freight rate paid by his company. James L. Cowles, in one of his letters, points out that express companies adopted a flat rate on fruit, nuts, and vegetables from 36 California towns to all express points within the United States and a large part of Canada of 35 cents for the first 8 pounds and 4 cents for each additional pound, and asks why not a similar or even a cheaper service by the Government. If parcel-post service will cost the Government 12 cents a pound the 4-cent rate contended for by Mr. Thorne and Mr. Cowles would produce a loss to the Government of $8,000,000 on every $12,000,000 of business.

With these facts before me, I have felt that I could not accommodate the railroads in this matter. They now receive more than a billion dollars net profit annually, and it seems to me that a contribution equal to more than $11 for every man, woman, and child in the United States, or an amount eight times the total annual output of gold and silver in this country, is sufficient profit now. While express rates are high and un-reasonable and should be lowered, the reduction can not be ac-complished by the establishment of parcel post. That can and should be done by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has been given power by Congress and whose sworn duty it is to fix just and reasonable rates, the same power as it has to fix freight rates.

Many of you have, as I have, received petitions signed by large numbers of merchants in your district, similar or identical in form to the one which I will now read, omitting the names of the 20 merchants having signed it and the town:

the 20 merchants having signed it and the town:

Petition to the Hon, G. N. Haugen, Member of Congress from the fourth district of the State of Iowa.

We, the undersigned doing business in the city of fully ask that you use your influence in favor of and that you vote for legislation that may be brought before Congress that will give the Interstate Commerce Commission further power looking toward the regulation of express rates and express classifications. Further, we ask that you use your influence with the Interstate Commerce Commission, urging them to take action as soon as possible in regard to the regulation of express rates and revision of classifications that the people of the United States may have relief.

We are deeply interested and want the Interstate Commerce Commission given any power it may be necessary for them to have, that express rates may be regulated by this commission.

We feel that the transportation charges of the express companies are exorbitant and unjust, and that their charges are out of all proportion to the service rendered and the amount of actual money invested.

Therefore we ask that you assist us both in having the Interstate Commerce Commission granted full power to act and enforce their findings, and that you use your influence in urging the Interstate Commerce Commission to take action with the power they already have at the earliest possible moment.

We feel that our request deserves your serious consideration.

Congress has already given the commission the power neces-

Congress has already given the commission the power necessary for them to regulate express rates; it has the same power over the regulation and classification of express rates as it has over freight rates; and, in my opinion, there is no excuse for the existing exorbitant express rates nor the millions of overcharges. And if the Interstate Commerce Commission does not or can not exercise its power in fixing just and reasonable express rates, or if the Commerce Court, or any other court, continue to hold up the decisions of the commission and thus delaying or preventing justice to the public, or, in other words, if the legislation already on our statute books is not being enforced, I take it that additional legislation would meet with the same

Then and with the fact that the express companies, through their organization and operation of the express company, continue to rob not only their copartners or stockholders of railroads out of their share of profit, but the public as well, in charging not only exorbitant rates but by adding thereto millions of overcharges under the pretense of errors. With these facts before us, it seems to me, with this rank injustice, that the only way open to Congress in securing justice to the public is for it to take over the express companies, and especially if rates paid railroads for carrying mail matter can not be readjusted and made a reasonable and just one.

If the rate paid by the Government for carrying mail matter can not, under the rules of the House, be readjusted and made a reasonable rate, we can, by taking over the express companies and their contracts, transfer much of the mail matter, such as equipments, empty sacks, second-class matter, and parcels, to the express cars at express rates, which will be carried at less than I cent a pound instead of 4 cents per pound, the present rate raid, and if one-half of the mail matter can thus be transferred-or, say, 700,000,000 pounds of mail matter can be carried in express cars at the rate of less than 1 cent per pound instead of 4 cents, now paid, the Government will save more than $21,000,000 in transportation charges on the 700,-000,000 pounds. And the saving in transportation for two years would pay for all the property necessary to be condemned or purchased from the express companies. This can be done without any injury to anybody. The express companies would be paid a reasonable price or full value for property condemned or purchased. The railroads would be paid the same rates which they are now being paid for carrying express and mail matter. The only difference to them would be that they would The twenty carry less in mail cars but more in express cars. to twenty-five million dollars saved to the Government thereby would, of course, reduce the revenue of the railroads correspondingly, but no one contends that railroads are underpaid the express companies, hence the twenty to twenty-five million dollars gained to the Government would do no injustice to the express companies or the railroads. With these facts in view, and especially the thousands of overcharges made by express companies claimed to be errors, the excessive rate paid the railroad company by this Government, the saving that can be made in transportation of mail matter-while I do not favor Government ownership in general-I believe that unless we can right this wrong I shall feel it my duty to vote to take over the express companies' contracts and what property needed to carry on the express business by the Government. It has been said that this is a step in the direction of socialism. It is no more Government ownership or socialism than the building and operating the Panama Canal, the postal business, the owning and operating of boat lines between New York and Colon, or the Panama Railroad, or the owning and operating of the Government Printing Office, and numerous other things. Call it by what name you choose, the express companies and railroads have made it necessary to take the step in order to secure a square deal.

In view of the fact that the express companies are organized and operated by the few stockholders who control railroads for their own personal gain and to deprive their stockholders of their share of profit on the business diverted from freight to express, no injustice will be done to the stockholders of the railroads in general in taking over the express. It will simply transfer the express business from those wrongdoers to the railroads proper and the Government where the express business properly belongs, or at least as much as the freight and postal business is a function of the railroads and the Government, respectively.

The consumer, the merchant, the manufacturer, the farmerin fact, every patron of the express companies-are entitled to better treatment than they have heretofore received at the hands of the express companies. The taking over of the express companies may not reduce the express rates to the public; as under our form of government, with its lack of proper business methods employed and its expensive way of conducting business in general, it is not possible for the Government to compete with private enterprises with their modern and best
